Ningpo, which is steadily becoming a centre of modern industrialism has just been visited by Dame Adelaide Anderson, M.B.E., former Lady Inspector of Factories in Great Britain, accompanied Miss Agatha Harrison and Miss Mary A. Dingman, who are prominent members of the industrial section of the Y.W.C.A.

The visitors reached Ningpo on Saturday morning, and immediately set out upon their investigations by inspecting the Tsing Dao Match Factory and Messrs. Olivier and Co.'s Hat Factory, while later in the day they interviewed the Ningpo Chamber of Commerce by special invitation of the Taoyin. After this they conducted a public meeting, chiefly for Christians, in the Riverside Girls' Academy where questions of social betterment were discussed among the Chinese.

On Monday further visits were paid to the canning factory for fruits and bamboo shoots and to the various matting factories. The ladies were entertained at lunch by the manager of the Ho Fong Cotton Mill, Mr. Liu Tsechen, after which a tour of the mill was made.

In the evening a conference was held at the house of Bishop and Mrs. Molony, where Dame Anderson and Miss Dingman met a large gathering of foreigners in the Settlement. Miss Harrison having been compelled to leave previously for Shanghai. Mr. Handley Derry (H. M. Consul) presided and welcomed the ladies. He declared his sympathy with the object of their visit, dwelling upon the importance of conserving the well-being of what we commonly call "labour" as well as of the machinery and other vital necessities of an industrial system. The assets of a nation, he affirmed, of which labour was perhaps the most important part, were in the highest interests of everybody, to be carefully preserved and guarded. Industrial nations in the past had made mistakes in this respect, but now their attention was being more and more turned to the task of social improvement of the labouring classes, fully realizing that a better class of labourers did better work.

DAME ANDERSON'S SPEECH.

Dame Adelaide Anderson expressed pleasure that this note had been struck at the beginning and quoting Henry Ford's dictum that the "Economic Fundamental is Labour," proceeded to show both its importance to the life of a nation and also labour's weakness to protect itself.

Referring more particularly to the improved conditions now in existence in the British Empire (especially in Great Britain and in Australasia) she showed how these had been brought about by a variety of agencies—legislation, humane employers, social workers, agitations among the workers themselves and the development of mechanical and social sciences, all of these had been influential in securing the operation of the fundamental law of the protection of the worker.

In China, where conditions were so bad, where protective measures had perhaps only gone one-fourth of the way they had attained in other countries some basis for the same idea of development could perhaps be found in the guild system which, in this country, gave opportunity for co-operation and friendly discussion between employer and employed. The creation of a humane and enlightened public opinion would of course forward this and from this point we could press forward to make the first step in establishing this fundamental law.

As a practical plan to follow, Miss Dingman suggested the formation of co-operative groups of workers: e.g., a medical group who might compile useful statistics, a legislative group who might work for the promotion of legal enactments, an educational group who might disseminate ideas and study social sciences, and so forth. At present the great defect was that the Chinese were waiting for the foreigners to take action and the foreigners were waiting for the Chinese, so that very little was being done. The speaker admitted that there was no ready made plan to hand by which the thing could be worked out in such a country as this but such a plan would be found as soon as public opinion became strong enough to make itself felt on the question. It was therefore our duty to meditate, even to "brood" on the problem, assured that the interest taken in it by a great variety of human beings would tend towards some definite movement for its solution.

On Tuesday morning the Dame Anderson and Miss Dingman continued their tour of inspection, visiting many of the smaller industrial establishments of Ningpo, and in the afternoon embarked on the C. N. S. Hsin Pekin for Shanghai.

YANG SEN'S ADVANCE ON CHENGTU

Chêngtu, Dec. 31.

The situation in Chinese Tibet has improved. The people of Batang and the seven villages have defeated the Nankang Lama and the brigands are becomtions in the surrounding districts are still very bad. In some cases the Chinese magistrates have fled and the the brigands are becoming better organized and more powerful.

Gen. Hsiung Ko-wu is reported to have fled to Tungchuan. Gen. Yang Sen's army is slowly advancing on Chêngtu. Gen. Hsiung's second in command, Gen. Liu I-chiu, is remaining at Chêngtu, whither large numbers of the troops defeated at Chungking have returned, including Kueichow troops. Large numbers are coming into the city daily. They are retreating before Gen. Yang Sen and no stand has yet been made.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BANDIT'S HEAD BROUGHT TO KAIFENGFU

Followers Brisk as Ever

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 18.

The Chinese press reports that the head of Chang Kuo-hsin, alias Lao Yang-jen, has been brought to Kaifengfu where it will be exposed to the public as a warning.

The death of the chief does not seem to have quelled the spirit of the band, however, for the same papers which report the arrival of the bandit's head in the Honan capital publish messages from Honan which indicate great activity among the bandits. General T'ien Wen-ch'in, a Shensi commander who has been operating against the bandits in Honan, wired on the 14th that a body of Lao Yang-jen's followers, after getting the worst of a skirmish in the Piyang district had gone into the Linyinghsien district and were near Tashihch'iao. The railway section chief resident at Chengchow has also reported to the Ministry of Communications that more than 1,000 of Lao Yang-jen's men were reported from a place 30 li west of Linying and 20 li from Ta Shih Ch'iao. In the report which he received he was warned that the bandits were preparing to hold up a train on the Kin-Han line, so he had train No. 5 stopped at Hsichow and train No. 4 stopped at Yench'eng, while General Wu Pei-fu and Chin Yun-ao were notified. Orders for troops movements were given, of which the bandits got warning. They disappeared abruptly and the regular train service was resumed.

THE YOSHIWARA EVIL OF JAPAN

Disgrace the Earthquake Was Thought to Have Ended: Revived Despite Many Earnest Opponents

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 11.

The earthquake never did a greater service to the Japanese than when it wiped out of existence the sinks of iniquity, the Yoshiwara in Tokio and Maganecho in Yokohama—that marred two of Japan's otherwise most charming cities. To conjure up memories of the Yoshiwara and Maganecho that were is far from pleasant. Of the two, if any preference can be made, the "Red Light" district of Tokio was the less repulsive, largely due to the abolition of the Oiran Dochu, when a new victim to the Moloch of prostitution was accorded "honours" that had all the sham and hypocrisy that one could ever think of, and also due to the abolition of the practice whereby the unfortunate women were compelled to disport themselves in a large, caged room, visible to passers-by, the majority of whom would taunt the unfortunate girls, while others, on their way into this den of shame, would first linger at the barred doors to exchange unsavoury pleasantries and to select a woman with much less care than would be expended on the selection of a beast of draught. In Yokohama, however, up to the terrible catastrophe of September 1, the system whereby women were confined to a room surrounded with barred doors and windows continued to exist.

Then came the heaving of the so called solid earth when houses, towns, dwellings were dragged down more quickly and with greater facility than angry waves suck down a frail sampan. With the general destruction went also the licensed quarters, and the slavery of prostitution was thought by many to have been dealt a death-blow.

EFFORTS THAT HAVE FAILED.

Furthermore, the horrors connected with these quarters proved to be amongst the most revolting and saddening of all the tragedies that were born on the noon of September 1. In many of the houses belonging to the licensed quarters, the women perished by the score. The most deplorable thing was that, chained throughout life to a sordid career, several of these women did not have the least chance to save themselves. Convicts were let out on parole as the fires swept in the direction of the penitentiaries, but for these imprisoned women in their Yoshiwara "cages" no such opportunity was offered. According to reports, the opposite rather was the case, and their task-masters, who have paid for the women body and soul for a certain period, did their utmost to keep these human goods and chattels who, from a strict legal point, were really theirs. The result was the deaths by tens of these women when the flames had reached a pitch that made escape out of a segregated region cluttered with bamboo, tinder wood and paper buildings entirely impossible.

Following the earthquake came the demand from far and wide that this must not be again, that the Yoshiwara system and all it stands for had better be eliminated from the land. The destruction of these quarters was regarded as an excellent opportunity for doing away with sordid traffic altogether; and those who visioned a better and a purer Tokio looked with the eyes of the spirit and insisted that a system like the Yoshiwara should not re-arise. But the noble attempt has failed.

THE RAPACIOUS KEEPERS.

The agitation for the abolition of the brothels has fallen on deaf ears—so far as the authorities are concerned. In fact, there is as much activity—if not more—in the reconstruction of the destroyed licensed quarters as anywhere else in the ruined regions. Brothel-keepers not merely laugh at the idea of Virtue trying to conquer Vice but are even growing far more rapacious than of old. It is no use mincing matters and affecting a silly prudishness. The system has been established by the brothel keepers, in much the same way as a chain of restaurants under the same management might have meal-tickets, and these tickets are good for all the licensed houses. With characteristic brazenness, the brothel-keepers declare that this is in order to "cope with the trend of the times" and by way of "putting the interests of customers before everything else!"

The system has proved immensely successful so far as the brothel-keepers are concerned. It also, of course, hastens the unfortunate girl victims to the grave quicker, spreads more disease, especially at a time like the present when there is in admitted dearth of disease preventives, and has tended to increase libertinism and profligacy. The brothel-keepers are getting rich, fattening in fact on the women they hold in what is worse than prison, and are quickly making up for the losses they have sustained, including the "loss" caused by the deaths of the girls after the quake who were not permitted to escape when opportunity offered.

PUBLIC OPINION AROUSED.

A wretched system like this cannot be productive of anything good. A nation that permits harlotry for its daughters and blesses it with the benedictions of the law cannot hope for the respect and esteem of others, especially one whose womenfolks are certainly amongst the finest of their sex in the world. But it would be a mistake to conclude that the Japanese people, as a whole, endorse this system. On the contrary, the voice of opposition to this nefarious trade has been raised more than once in the past and was particularly loud after the recent disaster. The individual Japanese, however, has a very faint idea of his or her individual rights, and so matters like this, of life and death, nay more, of honour and disgrace, are left to the officials; and officials, every-where, when at their jobs, are a woodenheaded, red-tape-worshipping lot.

To stop the traffic in human flesh is no easy matter, especially in Japan. But an admirable blow can be delivered at the Yoshiwara system by making it illegal for human beings to be sold or purchased, all parties to such a transaction being severely punished. A bill to this effect brought before the Imperial Diet could not be easily side-tracked, and it seems perfectly certain that the authorities would never dare to ignore it, and thereby allow the world to understand that Japan believes in the barter and sale of human flesh.

THE OLD FALSE ARGUMENT.

Opponents of the abolition of licensed prostitution maintain, with parrot-like insistency, that, with the abolition of legalized vice, private immorality and disease would increase. This argument has been refuted more than once and is merely a means of attempting to hide behind the issue at stake. Statistics made by the Imperial Japanese Army during 1922 prove the falsity of such a position. According to these statistics, which were taken in connexion with recruits for conscription, the number of men afflicted with sexual diseases in places where licensed prostitution is the vogue far out-numbered those in places where legalized vice had been abolished. In Amagasaki, for instance, where an institution on the lines of the Yoshiwara does not now exist, the proportion of those who were diseased was much smaller than in Osaka, Tokio, Kobe or Nagasaki—the last, despite its immense facilities, supposedly without danger of infection and with the connivance of the law, leading in the number of persons diseased, the figure being nearly a half of the able bodied men of the prefecture. Another relevant fact was that the largest number of patrons of these sinks of iniquity were men between 25 and 40 years of age—and therefore married men. Thus the institution that aims—or apologists for it contend it aims—at making the home secure by catering to the irregular appetites of young bloods is really slowly, but surely, infecting the most sacred institution of the country, the home.

There is probably nothing that has done more to lessen the admiration of the world for Japan and the Japanese than this Yoshiwara system, to which can be attributed the go-easy manner in which Japanese women proceed to foreign lands there to do the same sordid "business" for some task-master, thus ruining the reputation of the women of this country and smudging the nation's escutcheon.

INSURANCE POLICIES & EARTHQUAKES

Attitude of British Companies Justified by Recurring Disasters in Japan

London, Jan. 17.

The newspapers point out that the new Japanese earthquake completely justifies the attitude of British companies in declining to admit claims on policies excluding earthquake risk.

They say that the recurrence of volcanic disturbances after so short a period shows that, were such claims met once, possibly an occasion would arise for further similar demands within a very short time and business on this principle would become impossible.

The business of companies transacting fire insurance had up to the present been built on the solid rock of experience and scientific rating of risks and the companies, if they departed from these fundamental principles, would find themselves on shifting sands.—Reuter.

TANG CHI-YAO NOT FLED FROM YUNNAN

On the Contrary Holding It More Strongly than Ever

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 18.

It is reported here on good authority that Tang Chi-yao, Military Governor of Yunnan, who was recently said to have been driven out by his subordinates and to have fled to Kueichow, is not only still safe and sound in Yunnanfu, but has established much better control over the whole province of Yunnan than he has hitherto enjoyed.

Through the exercise of much tact and the expenditure of a little money he was able to organize all the really serious minded bandits in Yunnan into two armies, one of which he sent into Szechuan and the other into Kueichow, so that he is now free to put his own subordinates, supported by his own regular troops, in the districts once wholly under bandit control. He, of course, has no intention of allowing the bandits to return if they fare badly on their expeditions.

As part of the ceremony at the marriage of the Prince Regent of Japan will be conducted in accordance with the time-honoured customs, there will be an exchange of poems between the Prince and Princess on the day previous to their marriage. The Prince Regent will present his bride-to-be with a poem of 31 syllables, giving vent to his sentiments of love, and the Princess will do likewise.

THE LEVY OF TAXES IN KUANGTUNG

Iniquitous Imposts to Supply Funds for Military Operations

Canton, Jan. 12.

The past week in Canton has not been a happy one for anyone concerned. While Dr. Sun Yat-sen and his War Cabinet were drafting plans for a consolidated "Government of China" and the unification of finance in Kuangtung, news again reached Canton that individual military commanders are still interfering with civil affairs. Gen. Li Chai-hsin, of the Cantonese army on the West River, has appointed new magistrates for Takhing and Loting, and the Yunnanese in Canton are legalizing a minor but very harmful lottery, Pak-kop piao, and other evils in return for protection money. Conflicting authorities in tax collection, who are forcing the people to pay double taxes, still remain the chief menace in Canton and district. The restaurant tax on meals is being collected by two syndicates, one for the provincial Government of Kuangtung and the other for the Kuangsi troops under Gen. Chu Pei-teh, while three collectors, one appointed by the Provincial Government, one by the municipality and still another by the Garrison Commander of Canton, are disputing the levying of a surtax of six coppers from each passenger using the ferry service between the north and south bank of the Pearl River, which intersects the city. After the Municipal Government has just exacted three per cent. of the value of the property of residents in Canton for a review and re-validation of their title-deeds, the Provincial Finance Bureau is now putting out its hands for another examination of deeds and the consequent fees.

RAILWAY SERVICE SUSPENDED.

The Canton-Samshui Railway suspended operations on January 10 owing to quarrels amongst the Yunnanese forces of the 3rd Corps, who have been guarding and controlling the line in order to raise money for their support. Fighting between others of Dr. Sun's commanders is also reported. In Toyshan, Comdr. Chuck Yen-ki disarmed a battalion commanded by a subordinate of Gen. Wong Ming-tong, who is a supporter of Dr. Sun, as is also Comdr. Chuck's superior officer, Gen. Li Chai-hsin.

The General Headquarters have denied the reports that the Hunanese under Gen. Tan Yen-kai and the Yunnanese under Gen. Yang Hsi-min are on the point of coming to blows.

THE KUOMINGTANG CONVENTION.

The Cantonese are awaiting with great interest the forthcoming National Convention of the Kuomintang Party in China, which will open on January 15 at the Canton Teachers' College. Delegates will attend from many parts of China, including delegates from Mongolia. The former Givil Governor of Kuangtung, Mr. Hu Han-ming, and Mr. Liao Chung-hoi, the present Governor, with many other prominent Cantonese Mintang, who held a meeting in Shanghai before coming here, are all now in Canton. Should they succeed in regaining control of Kuangtung politics from the hands of the younger leaders of the party, headed by Mr. Sun Fo, the son of Dr. Sun, a change in the policy of the administration will be inevitable, it is generally believed here. It is understood that Mr. Liao will not resume active charge of the Governor's Office until after the Convention. His resignation so far has not been accepted.

MILITARY CONTROL IN KUANGTUNG.

Kuangtung is still divided in territorial control among the more powerful militarists. The districts east of the East river are in the hands of Gen. Chen Chiung-ming's army; the Kochow, Luichow, Yamchow and Linchow sections of the province are now under the control of forces unfriendly to Dr, Sun, but not wholly in sympathy with Gen. Chen; Gen. Shen Hung-ying and the remnants of the recently defeated Kuangsi mercenary army have just regained Linshan and other cities along the Kuangtung-Hunan-Kuangsi borders; the Yunnanese are occupying Kuangtung City and the Hunanese the upper section of the Canton-Hankow railway in Kuangtung. Of the six commercial ports in Kuangtung General Chen's followers now control Swatow, Hoihow and Pakhoi, while Dr. Sun's control Canton, Samshui and Kongmoon. All the railways in Kuangtung except a small part of the Canton-Kowloon Railway, are nominally under Dr. Sun and are actually in the hands of the Yunnanese and Hunanese.

Information reaching Canton indicates that fighting will soon be renewed on the east front as Gen. Chen is planning another offensive against Canton.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

OPIUM MONOPOLY IN CANTON

Authoritative Control Likely to Lessen Consumption and Increase Revenue

Peking, Jan. 18.

The International Anti-Opium Association learn from one of their correspondents that a straightforward opium monopoly has been established in Canton. This correspondent suggests that Dr. Sun has been greatly influenced by the reprint in Canton papers of Bishop Brent's speech at the Geneva Convention, which was published and circulated through China by the Association, and wishes to lessen opium consumption by authoritative control, and at the same time reap the benefit of the taxation imposed. Dr. Sun is faced with two problems; first, how to deal with the large numbers of his Yunnan soldiers in whose province it has been authoritatively asserted that eight men out of 10 smoke opium, and who have carried on in Canton an irregular but very extensive traffic in opium during the last year; and, second, how to raise funds for his armies.

In using the word "straightforward monopoly," it must not be inferred that the International Anti-Opium Association has gone back on its original policy of opposition to all opium monopolies. As an Association they firmly adhere to their policy. The word "straightforward" is used as a contrast to the scores of other monopolies in China under military, civil and commercial combines, which claim allegiance to the Central Government, publish the Government Anti-Opium Mandates, send reports through the Anti-Opium Commissioners that their respective provinces do not contain one poppy root, whilst at the same time they reap millions of money out of compulsory cultivation and taxation.

DR. SUN OPPOSED TO OPIUM.

This correspondent asserts that Dr. Sun has always been opposed to the use of opium, and there is much evidence in support of this statement, but finding Canton in chaos under the unbridled opium traffic of the Yunnan soldiers who are selling off the overproduced tons of Yunnan opium, he is of opinion that a Government monopoly will not only supply military funds, but establish control. It will be interesting to follow the course of this recent experiment, and should it prove that suppression even slowly follows control, it will encourage all who are against this great evil. Dr. Sun has appointed four military commanders to the Monopoly Directorate as well as civil members, and a complete system of licence and taxation has been promulgated.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Gen. Sun Chuan-fang, Tuli of Fukien, has sent his agents to Shanghai to purchase heavy supplies of foodstuffs for his army, states the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce."

THE COMMUNIST'S CHRISTMAS

Russia Demands Religion for All the Atheists

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chita, Jan. 3.

As the 25th and 26th of December (new style) drew near here in Russia, the Professional Unions or Department of Labour, one of the principal communist institutions in the country, came forward with the declaration that December 25 and 26 new style would be observed as "days of rest," not holidays, because that would envolve naming the particular holiday. In the official list, prescribed by the Labour Law, there is no mention whatever of December 25 and 26 being "days of rest" and why they should be so recognized, particularly in view of the fact that these two days followed so closely upon the heels of Sunday the 23rd, the officially recognized day of rest, is highly interesting, for it marks an important epoch in the history of Russia's revolution.

The man in the street, in a general way, settled the question by christening these two days of rest as the "Communist's Christmas," which, of course, is a contradiction because the Communists are sworn atheists and have fought the religious sentiment of the Russian people since the first day they seized the power of the country. Among other things, they re-adjusted the calendar or in other words discontinued the use of the Gregorian calendar.

As the Russian Communist creed is founded on the teachings of one Karl Marx, a Jew, it naturally follows that the story of "The Star of Bethelem" and "Who is He in yonder stall," together with everything pertaining to the Christian religion, are simply myths to the followers of that theory. Therefore the idea of these two days, December 25 and 26, being the "Communist's Christmas" is a contradiction.

THE NEGATIVE STREAK.

Russia, however, has always been a country of contradictions. The negative instinct, propounding negative theories, has predominated in the race for ages. For instance, the Nihilist and Bolshevik movements are examples. Even certain names of the Russian people commence with a negation so there is no need to marvel at the attempts of the Bolsheviki to establish atheism in Russia.

The Russian, whose only weakness is an inveterate addiction to his vodka, breaks, smashes and demolishes everything he lays hands on when in a state of intoxication. This is how he expresses his negative thought. The other Russian, whose only failing is a twist in his exceptionally clever brain, loses faith in his religion sooner than any other person in the world. In the days of the secret revolutionary movement, when the student class of Russia flourished as the most daring, atheism formed the foundation upon which the whole revolutionary structure rested. It serves the revolutionists much in the same manner as whisky does to another type of our own people, namely—it furnishes the nerve and energy. The most desperate student type of Russian atheist, strange to say, is he who received his education in the religious schools. This is the callous individual whose one and only thought was the "triumphant revolution" in his own country to provide him with the opportunity of sweeping religion out of the country root and branch. He could conceive of no compromise. The negative instinct had abandoned itself to all the most wanton practices that the brain of an arch-villain could imagine.

A PARABLE IN ROMANCE.

The story of Anya Samartseva's life as described in the article entitled "The Student Lead" is typical of the majority of those whose fate threw them on the path of revolution in the old days. A Russian refugee in Paris—victim of the revolutionary movement, educated at the Progymnasium at Rostov-Yaroslav, she received the finishing touches in atheism from a student, deported from Moscow, who like most of them was a slovenly ragged fellow with a brilliant brain. After a life of ups and downs in Paris her first child, a baby boy, dies and is given a common grave without any religious rites whatever. Her conscience immediately awakens and, disappointed with her life, she—revolutionist and atheist—nevertheless thinks that had only her child been christened, he might have been spared to her. Remorse and terror seize her at the thought which became a conviction that the student had lied and she ends her life in the manner most Russians use under similar circumstances.

THE TRUE RUSSIA.

And so it is with Russia to-day, the difference being, however, that Russia has not committed suicide nor does she intend to because she has never lost her faith in Christianity. For every slovenly ragged student with the brilliant brain steeped in atheism there are millions of staunch believers in the Faith. The Russian revolutionary atheist struck deep at the very heart of his own country's religion. Brandishing the fire-brand and flourishing threats of imprisonment, he degraded temples, churches and shrines, imprisoned ecclesiastics, publicly mocked and scoffed at religious worshippers and even persecuted them, but the religious spirit of the people was never daunted. Russia silently bore the insult and when the hour seemed darkest the voice of the civilized word rose in condemnation of her atheist and she knew then that the student had lied.

The French experienced the same during their revolution and when Richelieu, the Red Cardinal, came to Napoleon and reported that the people demand religion, he answered:—"Let them have it, but don't trouble me." This stage in Russian revolution has already been reached and the "Living Church" is the atheist's compromise, but the people know this. They know it to be the "Red Church" and this explains the reason for the Communists agreeing to declare December 25 and 26 as "days of rest." They will eventually be known as "Christmas days," but not before the Holy Synod succeeds in reconciling the Russian religious sentiment to discard the Gregorian calendar and fit in the saints' days, etc. with the new style.

SOVIET'S GREATEST FAILURE.

Revolutionists may alter the calendar, atheists may make compromises on the word "Christmas" and the man in the street may ironically talk of the "Communist's Christmas," but all the same Christianity in Russia has withstood the shock and has emerged victoriously and the greatest proof of this fact is that the Russian Soviet Government recognizes to-day its utter hopelessness to win the support of the population without recognizing the religion of the country. The people have passed through the labyrinth of all phases of atheistic madness and all it has done is only to strengthen the Faith in the old Church.

HUGE NEW HARBOUR FOR TOKIO AND YOKOHAMA

Tokio, Jan. 18.

The outline of the scheme for the construction of a harbour in the Tokio Bay and of a canal between Tokio and Yokohama, which is to be introduced in the coming session of the Diet by the Department of Home Affairs, independently of the reconstruction enterprises, has been decided upon. The total cost of the said construction is estimated at Y. 46,500,000.—Eastern News Agency.

MR WANG YUNG-PAO, Chinese Minister to Tokio, reports that during the last earthquake, no Chinese merchants or students were hurt in Tokio, while reports from Yokohama and Osaka are still waited.

YOKOHAMA AFTER THE EARTHQUAKE

Coolies with Gold Watches and Diamond Rings and Money to Burn

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 4

Workmen may wear silk shirts in the United States but they wear handsome and valuable gold watches and chains, often with gold American or English coins hanging therefrom, in Yokohama. I paid a visit to the stricken port city which still is shrouded in the shadows of sheer neglect and apathy—Tokio is always the spoilt child in weal or in woe and until Tokio has had more than it can chew, the attention that will be paid to the other devastated towns will be purely nominal—in order to see how New Year was celebrated there. The only celebration I could see was of coolies and such kind swilling beer and sake (Japanese wine) with a disdain and contempt of money such as I remember only among the narikin (nouveaux riches) of the hectic, war-boom days. Not that the coolie spent even a fraction of what the narikin did: but none the less his new wealth flaunted about in a manner that had all the narikin's contempt for the money that the latter earned so easily and so quickly in those bygone days when the European war poured gold undreamed of into the laps of the Japanese. The quake seems to have done the same in so far as the coolie class is concerned. But the gold watches and heavy eighteen-carat chains, with five-and-ten-dollar gold pieces dangling or good old English sovereigns, in some instances with even mystic sterling gold masonic emblems and other more mysterious charms depending, were something I was totally staggered at seeing.

THE COOLIE'S SPOILS.

I hailed a ricsha at the Sakuragi-cho station (the electric overhead trams now runs from Tokio to the Sakuragi-cho terminus as they did before September 1 last year) and on came a gold-chain-with-Western-coin-adorned individual who pewed for a few moments, then struck a bargain whereby he was to receive two to two-and-a-half times the fare charged before the quake. I was at first for indignantly waving him off, but the desire to see more clearly whatever was the trumpery that Kuruymaya-san (Mr. Ricsha-coolie) was disporting made me consent. I believed that he had perhaps invested some of the very good wages made during the period immediately following the earthquake on some trinket of brass or nickel. When we had gone a fair distance towards the old Settlement and were in the heart of ruins and desolation, the feeling grew upon me to make sure. Telling the man that I desired to locate the place where a friend of mine formerly used to live I dismounted, walked about a bit and then, as though a sudden thought had struck me, asked him whether he knew what the time was. Out came a pretty gold watch and the time of day was proudly announced. I pretended I couldn't quite understand, and desired him to show me the dial. He did so with the pomposity of a primate. It was a beautiful Elgin watch worth anything from Y. 200 to Y. 300. I commented on the fine watch he had, and a great, broad smile spread across his face. I asked him whether he would sell it. He would and mentioned a figure which showed full well that he knew the value of the article he then possessed. I then asked to see the coins and charms that dangled from his chain. There was a five-dollar gold-piece, a gold sovereign, a masonic emblem and a damascene fish.

MEMORIES TOO SAD.

Yokohama still presents a scene that tends to make one's eyes water. I intended to go up the Bluff, but, hardened though a newspaper man is generally supposed to be, my soul revolted at going through scenes where so many friends and acquaintances had perished or were reduced to absolute penury. I turned my steps towards "The Quake," which declares boldly, yet modestly, that "Eats and Drinks" could be had there. It is a small zinc-and-wood structure and is perhaps the only decent place in Yokohama where the self-respecting foreigner can go. It is, incidentally, under the benevolent aegis of Mr. A. G. Bennett, former manager of the Grand Hotel, or rather manager of the former Grand Hotel, and Mr. Tom Laffin, one of the best-known foreign figures in Yokohama, now and before the seismic upheavals.

Here I learnt on authority that I can safely call unimpeachable—in fact my authority was no less than a former foreign employee of the British Embassy in Tokio—that ricsha coolies and their ilk were far better off than wearing gold-dollar-dangling watches and chains. In fact, he said, he had found one clearing débris at a wage of three yen a day with a beautiful diamond ring flashing forth imprisoned rays from his mud-begrimed hand.

WHERE WERE THE POLICE?

Once again I saw in fancy those foreign refugees who believed and were told that the police would prevent looting of their premises until they were in a position to get back and excaviate the débris for what little can yet be retrieved.

PNEUMONIC PLAGUE AT CHITA

We are indebted to Dr. Wu Lien-teh, Head of the Manchurian Plague Prevention Service, for the following news regarding pneumonic plague at Chita, capital of Transbaikalia, Siberia:

Two cases of pneumonic plague among Russians have recently occurred at Chita in the month of December. It transpires that Dr. Spielberg, a lady physician working part of the time in the Veterinary Institute and part at the local Plague Laboratory, accidentally spilled an emulsion of plague culture upon her apron. Five and a half days afterwards (December 16) fever, tightness of chest and dyspnœa developed, followed by cough and bloody sputum in which the characteristic bacilli were seen under the microscope. Forty-eight hours after appearance of the first symptoms she died.

A male assistant, who had been in contact with the patient, also fell sick on the 18th with typical signs of pneumonic plague, and died two days later.

Among other contacts, was a lady doctor who attended the female patient without a mask; also a male nurse, who sat face to face with the patient for nearly an hour. Fortunately, neither one contracted the dreaded disease.

Most stringent precautions were taken at Chita after the truth was known, and no more cases were reported.

OIL AND WHEAT CARGOES FOR VLADIVOSTOK

Harbin, Jan. 14.

On January 10 the steamer Naniha arrived in Vladivostok with a cargo of Russian petroleum from Batoum on the Black Sea.

The steamer Dekabrist is expected to arrive in Vladivostok shortly with a large cargo of wheat from Black Sea ports.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING, Jan. 21.—The Shantung Members of the 1921 Parliament have issued a circular telegram addressed to the President contending that the Parliament was elected in accordance with the former election law and that it should resume office instead of new elections in the Spring.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AMERICAN FLEET AND CHEFOO

Again Visiting the Port This Summer: Increase in the Cost of Living

From a Correspondent.

News has been received in Chefoo to the effect that the American Asiatic Fleet intends again making its headquarters during the coming summer at that port. According to present information 60 war vessels are expected to arrive in Chefoo on April 25 and will remain there for several months.

The mere reading of such an announcement will not convey to the average outsider anything out of the ordinary but, to Chefoo residents, the news comes, in some respects, as a nightmare. Chefoo is a comparatively small outport which is not, by any means, self-supporting. The business and missionary community, including the children resident at the schools, does not total 1,000 persons. The "nightmare" comes in the prospect of a further increase in the cost of living which will result from the visit of the American Fleet. That such slender resources as those possessed by Chefoo should be taxed by expecting them to make provision for several thousand men during several months each year is literally an imposition.

It is an uncontested fact that, during the past four years, the cost of living has advanced anywhere from 300 to 400 per cent. The responsibility for this increase lies entirely with the American Fleet and, unless provision is made in the future for the Fleet, during its stay in Chefoo, to be entirely self-supporting, the residents of that port are going to be still affected.

As a result of complaints from the authorities an attempt to alleviate the situation was made last year and the majority of the Fleet's meat supply was obtained in Tsingtao. Local prices were accordingly not affected in this direction until late in the season. They nevertheless rose and, what is more, they have not fallen during the winter months to the level from which the rise took place. In respect of fresh vegetables the situation is decidedly worse. Prices rose and have not declined at all. When the Fleet again arrives in Chefoo there will be a further increase and next year will reveal, unless steps are taken, an even worse state of affairs.

GOOD DISCIPLINE MAINTAINED.

Thanks to adequate shore patrols and the excellent organization of the Navy Y.M.C.A. the behaviour of the men on shore leaves very little just reason for complaint and it is not on account of any such reason that the residents of Chefoo object to the annual visits of the Fleet. The objection, and it is a very sound one, comes solely as a result of the way in which these visits affect the cost of living. With an organization such as the American Navy possesses it would be nationally expected that so important a point as the victualling of it's men would be a matter which would receive a hundred per cent. consideration. At the same time one would be led to anticipate that those in authority would show some consideration for the ports which afford protection for their vessels and of whose facilities they make a convenience.

Very little of this consideration has been shown to Chefoo in past years and, as a result, it is paying for the privilege of having an oily beach more and more, each year.

Such a situation demands the immediate attention and consideration of those in a position to rectify the injustice. Chefoo does not mind the Fleet but it objects to paying for having it, and it is to be sincerely hoped that those in authority will do their utmost in the future to rectify a matter which has, to say the least, reflected upon their past organization.

RETIREMENT OF MR. W. A. H. MOULE

Anglo-Chinese School Head Master's Fine Record: Old Shanghai Memories

Educational circles in Shanghai will in the course of a few weeks be marking with regret the departure of a distinguished and esteemed member, Mr. W. A. H. Moule, who is retiring from his position as Head Master of the Anglo-Chinese School in Shanghai after 33 years' faithful and extremely valuable service. Mr. Moule said good-bye to the school at the annual prize giving on Friday evening, and proposes to leave for home in March. His departure will be greatly regretted by all who have the pleasure of personal acquaintance with Mr. Moule, and especially by the Governors of the School which he has served so admirably and which has met with such manifest success under his careful and efficient guidance.

THE SCHOOL.

Mr. Moule's connexion with Shanghai extends as far back as 1888, in which year, at the age of 18, he came out to assist Dr. Muirhead, the well known missionary, who was then in charge of the London Mission School, a small establishment in Shanghai representing pioneer work in the foreign education of Chinese which has since so rapidly grown. In those days, however, there was no great demand for education, and it is an interesting as well as significant recollection by Mr. Moule that there was a decided quickening of Chinese interest immediately following upon the close of the war with Japan. Mr. Moule's connexion with the Anglo-Chinese School began in 1890. This school, among the first of the kind established in China, was started in 1885, and had the late Mr. George Lanning for its head master, but the enterprise was abandoned about 1888. It became Mr. Moule's task to revive the institution, and so well did he plan its foundations that steady progress was the order from the beginning, and in a few years time the little school in Museum Road, with its original dozen or so scholars, outgrew its home and a move had to be made to more extensive quarters. Thus in 1903, the School was moved to Range Road, where now close upon 200 Chinese receive education on the lines of a first class Middle School. During all these years Mr. Moule has applied himself with the utmost interest and fidelity to the development of the school, modestly building up for it a record and a reputation which makes it now not the least in value among British institutions in Shanghai.

CRICKET ACHIEVEMENTS.

A busy schoolmaster can have but few interests outside the schoolroom, and thus Mr. Moule's name has not come into public prominence except in one traditional field, the world of sport. In his school days at St. Lawrence's, Ramsgate, Mr. Moule gave promise of the athletic excellence which in later years he displayed in most branches of sport. Pride of place in his recollection is given to the many years he was a playing member of the Shanghai Cricket Club, and a very capable one. He joined the Club during his first year in Shanghai, and for many years afterwards played in all the leading matches, including, of course, Interport games. His first Interport game was against Hongkong at Shanghai in 1891, and he was a member of the team again in the following year, that disastrous year when the Bokhara was wrecked on the Pescadores and all but two members of the Hongkong team lost their lives. During this playing career Mr. Moule scored over 11,000 runs for the Club, with an average of over 50, whilst he knocked up 15 centuries, his best score being 151 not out against the Recreation Club. To the delight of members of the Club, among whom "Willie" Moule has ever been esteemed and popular, he gave a glimpse of his old-time form only this last season in compiling 103 not out against an Interport XI. As a bowler, also, he was no mean performer, and there is a useful record of six wickets for one run standing to his name. Mr. Moule was an equally keen Rugger and Soccer man, and also an excellent tennis player, on one occasion, we believe, being runner up for the Shanghai championship.

SENSATIONAL SCENE IN NANKING ROAD

A Traffic Hold up: Was it Negligent or Merely Deliberate?

The Sikh policemen on traffic duty at the Nanking-Szechuen Road crossing on Saturday morning were presented with a somewhat unusual problem. A few minutes before noon, when the streets were crowded with the usual variety of traffic, a sudden and unexpected halt occurred in the vehicles proceeding westward, due to the fact that a car driven by a quite respectable looking gentleman came to a standstill right in the middle of the crossing. A breakdown? No. The engines were running beautifully. What could the matter be? A Sikh signalled the driver to proceed, but instead of doing so he produced a cigarette and settled down to a comfortable smoke, to the amazement of the police and the amusement of a big crowd which rapidly gathered.

"Move on please," said the Sikh, smiling encouragement and pointing to the heavy accumulation of traffic.

But the motorist refused to budge, and the crowd began to suspect a "movie" stunt, or a daring piece of work in connexion with a wager, especially when he produced a watch and carefully timed himself to a five minutes' rest in the middle of Shanghai's busiest thoroughfare at the busiest hour.

Five minutes had elapsed when a foreign traffic inspector appeared on the scene and the motorist, just then preparing to drive on, politely handed him his card, that of Dr. Tartois, a member of the French Municipal Council.

A SELF-IMPOSED PENALTY.

With reference to this action and on the ground that he considered it his duty to explain his conduct to the Chairman of the Shanghai Municipal Council and his colleagues, Dr. Tartois has written to Mr. Fessenden to the following effect:—

He states that his action was done deliberately for the benefit of both the French Concession and the International Settlement. He points out that the Municipal Councils are facing great difficulties arising from the interpretation of by-laws however well framed they may be. While expressing great respect for British justice and not questioning the ruling of Mr. King in the recent case from a strictly juridical standpoint, Dr. Tartois remarks that if the by-laws are interpreted as literally as in the Wilder case the administration of the community will become impossible, especially in a city so international as Shanghai. It was to demonstrate this that he took this extreme course of action. On the other hand, he readily admits that he is aware that an appeal has been lodged against the Wilder verdict in the British Supreme Court where it may be quashed, acknowledges his own culpability and fines himself $100 which he has sent to the Chairman of the Council to be donated to any charity the latter deems deserving.

OBITUARY

The Late Mr. John Blechynden

Far Eastern residents will learn with regret of the death, which took place on January 8 last on a farm near Nelson, New Zealand, of Mr. John Blechynden, who came to Shanghai in the early nineties. For a number of years he was prominently connected with the activities of the New Engineering & Shipbuilding Co., whose works stand as commercial monument to his memory.

Born in Falstone, a small village in Northumberland on June 3, 1846, Mr. Blechynden spent a great deal of his boyhood in Woolee, a country town situated near the Cheviot Hills. When in his teens he went to Newcastle to serve his apprenticeship as an engineer, and was articled to Messrs. Thompson & Boyd who were then famous as marine engineers, though their works were situated far from the River Tyne.

It was most interesting to hear the old gentleman describe the methods of construction of engines and boilers then in vogue. A great deal of manual labour was entailed, as the machine tools then in use could not cope with the growing sizes of jobs required.

No doubt his extremely healthy surroundings in boyhood, and hard manual work and exercise which he had in his youth helped to build up the magnificent constitution which he possessed. He had gone in for various forms of sport, fishing, swimming and walking being his favourite pastimes.

FROM EGYPT TO JAPAN.

His apprenticeship being completed in 1867, he went out to Egypt where he had a most adventurous career, working on railways and also serving in a Turkish Government vessel operating in the Red Sea before the Suez Canal opened, the engineers being the only foreigners on board.

Returning to England, he went to sea in the capacity of a marine engineer, eventually leaving for Japan in one of the Yubin Kaisha's vessels. He sailed some years under the above company, which was the predecessor of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. It is of interest to note that in order to do so he had to qualify for a first engineer's certificate under the Shipping Laws of Japan. This certificate, which was one of his cherished possessions, was the third one issued.

After some years service in Japanese vessels, in one of which he acted in the dual capacity of captain and chief engineer, he went Home, marrying a Miss Lindsay of Berwick-on-Tweed and then went to New Zealand in 1879. He commenced farming in Cabbage Bay, doing extremely well, his three elder children being born there. Misfortune, however, overtaking him he sold out his farm and stock and went back to Japan where he obtained the post of manager and engineer of a large paper works near Kobe, which were in a very run-down condition at that time. By his resource and capability he soon had the concern in a most flourishing condition.

Mr. Blechynden next commenced a small shipyard near Kobe, where he soon had an excellent business; but here misfortune again overtook him as he lost nearly all his money by the failure of a bank in Kobe.

During his stay in Japan he lost his wife, who died in Victoria, B.C., in 1888 whilst on a visit there. After the lapse of some time he married Miss Newton, whose father had come out to Shanghai from the Elswick Works and was employed as a specialist in the gun department, Kiangnan Arsenal, Shanghai.

PIONEER OF SHIPBUILDING IN SHANGHAI.

In the early nineties, Mr. Blechynden came to Shanghai, joining the Shanghai Engine Works in the capacity of manager. Here again his indomitable energy coupled with his wide experience soon made great changes in the development of the concern, as Mr. Blechynden was a man in whom implicit confidence was placed and who rarely failed to carry but what he set out to do.

Business increased so rapidly that it was soon seen that an extension was necessary and for which larger premises would be required. Backed by some influential shipping interests a large piece of land situated on the Pootung side of the river was acquired and a new company formed, called The Shanghai Engineering, Shipbuilding & Dock Co., Ld., of which Mr. Blechynden assumed the management. Under his guidance and supervision, and assisted by the late Capt. J. P. Roberts, a large dry dock was constructed—the Oriental Dock (now known as the International Dock). This dock was completed in 1898 as also the adjoining workshops which were fitted out with the latest and most up-to-dae machinery. Unfortunately owing to the treacherous nature of the sub-soil, considerably more money had to be expended in the construction of the dry dock than had been foreseen, leaving the company with practically no working capital, which so hampered progress that it was compelled to merge its business with Messrs. S. C. Farnham Co., Ld.

The confidence reposed in Mr. Blechynden and his acknowledged ability as an engineer soon found other and new support, resulting in the formation of a private company called the New Engineering & Shipbuilding Works, which commenced operations in 1900, though in a much less pretentious manner. From small beginnings, on rented property occupying only about 15 mow of land, this private concern was made into a limited company in 1903 with a capital of Tls. 102,000. Its history is now too well-known to require repetition, beyond stating that the success since achieved, has necessitated many extensions, occupying an area of over 200 mow of land with workshops and plant second to none in Shanghai and a dry dock known as the Yangtszepoo Dock of sufficient size to accommodate most of the largest vessels calling at this port.

These works are the outcome of Mr. Blechynden's energy and able management and will be ever a credit to his sterling abilities and enterprise.

In the autumn of 1914 he retired and returned to New Zealand with the object of spending leisurely his declining years on a farm which he had meanwhile acquired near Nedson. Being of a robust constitution he was able to enjoy his well earned retirement, though very unfortunately this was only of comparatively short duration, as about three years ago he was suddenly struck down with a paralytic seizure from which he never completely recovered. His death took place on January 8 this year to the great regret of all his friends and relatives.

Mr. Joseph E. O'Mahony

The death occurred at the General Hospital last Friday morning of Mr. Joseph E. O'Mahony of the S.M.C. Public Works Department.

Mr. O'Mahony, who was only 32 years of age, came out to Shanghai about two and a half years ago for the special purpose of mapping and surveying the country in and around Shanghai, a task which outside the actual limits of the Settlement has hitherto been left to amateur initiative. He was a clever and experienced draftsman and fond of his work, which was always most accurately executed. For the past 18 months Mr. O'Mahony had been residing at the Rubicon Club, from which centre he had been carrying out recent surveys; but recently his quarters were transferred from the Rubicon Club to the Settlement. A week ago he was taken to the General Hospital with double pneumonia, but after battling with it for a week passed away last Friday.

During the war Mr. O'Mahony served with H. M. Forces Overseas in a topographical section of the R. E. He was a member of the Field Artillery Battery, S.V.C., and was given a military funeral on Saturday by his fellow gunners in that unit.

BUBBLING WELL ROAD BUILDING SCHEME

China United Assurance Society's Huge New Offices and Residential Flats

Outgrowing their present quarters on the corner of Szechuen Road and Peking Road, the China United Assurance Society Ld., are going to build a six-storey building just opposite the Race Course on Cadastral Lot 6, B.C. 764, which is situated directly to the east of the Horse Bazaar on Bubbling Well Road. The ground space required for the structure is 2,069 mow and according to the present building plans the completed structure will cost about Tls. 500,000. Mr. Elliot Hazzard, an American achitect, who has designed the new Columbia Country Club house and the new Standard Oil Building and many department houses in America, has been engaged to prepare detailed plans for this one.

The management of the company, well-knowing that it will be but a few years until the business district has spread well outside its present confines, and as it must go to the West, have anticipated the movement and will have the first permanent home of any organization of its size west of Chêkiang Road. Although their new home will be large enough to accommodate their entire organization now there will be additional space not demanded at the moment by them, but which it is believed will in a few years be required. So another new departure for Shanghai will be inaugurated in giving over four floors to sleeping and living quarters which will consist of bachelor rooms or suites and apartments with kitchens for family use.

When the building is finished the company will use the first floor and the main floor for their present quarters, in the latter of which are to be housed the agents' rooms on the west side and the medical rooms, while to the rear will be a large workroom and to the east staff and accounting rooms. The manager's office and secretaries' room and the library and board room will find accommodation near by. Below, room has been allotted to two magnificent shops and to the rear, dining quarters and recreation rooms for the staff are planned, with two strong rooms for archives in the middle.

RESIDENTIAL OPPORTUNITIES.

The second, third and fourth floors have been set aside for modern apartments, of two, three, four and five rooms, according to what number the tenant may desire. Spacious four and five-room apartments with south aspect will occupy the corners of each of the three floors, the smaller ones being to the rear. On the next storey provision has been made for 21 bachelor rooms while on the top another splendid apartment and five more bachelor rooms are to be let out. A common dining room and kitchen are above for the use of tenants, while either corner of the top on the south will be devoted to large conservatories, a roof-garden in summer and a winter garden the rest of the year, all for the convenience and use of tenants of the building. The proposed rates will be much more moderate than those asked in many sections of the Settlement and with the additional feature of being within 15 minutes' walk of any office. The rent will be $50 to $60 for single rooms and there will be some apartments for as low as Tls. 80. The bachelor rooms will be furnished before letting.

Construction will begin shortly and the building should be ready for occupancy in 1925.

The Society, though it was organized in 1912, has grown by leaps and bounds. The original founders were Mr. A. J. Hughes and Mr. Lu Yoh-chuen, which gentlemen were assisted in the first few years by Mr. F. Defries, who lost his life in the Great War. The authorized capital is Tls. 1,000,000, that subscribed Tls. 615,000, of which Tls. 129,150 has been called for. Death claims of Tls. 1,000,000 have been paid.

FUKIEN'S FRUIT INDUSTRY

Extinction Feared: Trees Sold for Firewood to Avoid Unjust Taxation

From Our Own Correspondent.

Changchow, Fu., Jan. 12.

Last July I gave an account of the agitation which had arisen in this district in regard to the threatened imposition of a tax on all fruit trees.

The promoters of the agitation succeeded in securing the defeat of this proposal for the time being. Popular opinion does not however, count now, for as much as it did then, and although the tax is directly in face of public opinion on the matter it has now been imposed, and is likely to do great injury to one of the principal industries in this part of the country.

Numerous boats come to Changchow now laden with fruit trees that have been cut down to be sold as firewood in order to avoid payment of the tax. In this way the number of pumelo and orange trees especially is being greatly decreased. Fruit tree growers are required to notify the number of trees upon which the tax is leviable. If it is found that there is any discrepancy the former are seized and thrown into prison and large sums extorted from them in fines by the tax collectors. Moreover certain timber trees have a close resemblance to some fruit trees. Tax collectors unable to distinguish them inflict fines upon the growers for having underestimated the number of taxable trees.

Opium is again being extensively grown under the coercion of the officials. In some parts not only are the people required to pay the opium tax whether they plant opium or not, but those who do not plant are punished for daring to disobey the order to do so. School teachers in the government schools in the city have had to be content with receiving only 20 per cent. of their salaries for several months, but have been comforted with the assurance that the arrears would be forthcoming when the opium taxes are paid up.

ROADS AND SCHOOLS.

A [illegible] schools of middle grade in the Liong-chi district is to be effected in the interests of economy and efficiency in working. Schools of this grade in agriculture and commerce, as well as those for normal and industrial work are to be accommodated in a new building which is to be erected for next autumn. The staff of teachers required for such a union institution will be [illegible] parts of the city.

[illegible] in the villages have practically come to a standstill as they have very few scholars and no money to pay the salaries of the teachers.

Business is very quiet, as at the present time business men will not venture money in any enterprises while the general unrest prevails. Money is very tight, large quantities [illegible] exported to Shanghai where they [illegible]

[illegible] hotel in the city and the country district. A great main road has been planned from Changchow through Chenghai and on to Swatow and beyond to Chowchowfu, the section between Changchow and Chenghai is now in course of construction. A road for motors and a light railway is also under construction, to connect Changchow and the market town of Chuhkiu on the North River. It will be about 14 miles in length, and will be a more direct and convenient way of bringing the produce of the North River district to Changchow.

We have four military chiefs in this city. Each works entirely on his own lines. There is no co-ordination between them. It is said that one of them has been in communication with Dr. Sun Yat-sen, and he has the support of the troops that were formerly bandits. Apprehension is felt lest this may encourage Gen. Chuang Tsz-ping to endeavour to join forces with him in an attempt to recover this part of the country, and so embroil the district in renewed fighting.

SOOCHOW UNIVERSITY

The staff of the chemistry department of Soochow University will be increased by the coming of Dr. M. G. Frank, PH. D., from the University of Chicago. Dr. Frank is now in Peking and is due in Soochow within two weeks. The work of the department will be further facilitated by the arrival of a large quantity of new equipment and supplies, which is expected at the opening of the spring term. Eight courses in chemistry will be given.

The new science hall is rapidly approaching completion, and is expected to be in full working order in the autumn. The building is of reinforced concrete consisting of four stories, with an attic. It will be very thoroughly equipped, and when completed will be the best of its kind in China. It is certainly a relief to the already over congested laboratory quarters.

Owing to the change from the five-years to the four-year course of the university requirements there will be a graduating class this winter. The commencement day is to be on the 25th of this month, when 18 seniors will receive diplomas. The class is preparing a very elaborate programme to celebrate the occasion.

Brilliant Scenes at Commencement Exercises

From Our Own Correspondent.

Soochow, Jan. 21.

The 18th commencement of Soochow University began yesterday morning with the baccalaureate service at St. John's Methodist Church. The Rev. Frank Rawlinson preached the sermon, which was interpreted by the Rev. T. C. Chao.

The commencement exercises will continue until Friday, closing in the afternoon, when Dr. Hodgkin will deliver the commencement address.

The graduating class have decorated the University campus with scores of electric lights. In England and America, Chinese and Japanese lanterns may be used as decorations, but in up-to-the-minute China, we realize that this is truly the electrical age!

MORO INSURRECTOS IN THE PHILIPPINES

Manila, Jan 24.

The Constabulary report that two Moros from the Siassi Islands, Mindanao, killed nine Dutch subjects and wounded 19 on board a Dutch vessel and then jumped overboard. Dutch subjects fired at them and killed both. Both were followers of Panglima Sapudin, a Moro chief, who was ostensibly fishing in the Celebes. While they were there Sapudin's men had an altercation with the natives, who wounded two Moros. The latter were taken on board the Dutch steamer on which they ran amok. Sapudin and his band were arrested by the Dutch authorities for being concerned with the crime. Governor-General Wood intervened and secured their release and return to the Philippines. — Reuter's Pacific Service.

BANDITS THREATENING N. KIANGSU

Suchien Their Reported Goal

From Our Own Correspondent.

Suchien, N. Ku., Jan. 16.

Report has it that the tufei are gathering in the north country. They have boasted that they are going to "loot Suchien." If the report is true, work will surely not be started on dredging the canal, the people say.

Suchien is remarkably situated for protecting itself. On the west is the old bed of the Yellow River, supplying water for the good part of the city. In the Revolution year it was at this spot that an opposing army was met, engaged and hindered from crossing. The Canal flows past the north and east sides of the town, and if, as it is intended, a barrier is erected to stop the flow of water till the dredging is finished, it will leave Suchien without its natural barrier on two sides.

Some little time ago, one of our camp officials reported that a priest in one of our largest temples was harbouring tufei. He was arrested and sent to Nanking. We hear the "tables are turned" and the priest has accused the said official to a higher authority, and he has been ordered to Nanking to answer for himself.

OFFICIAL ROUGHLY HANDLED.

Last Sunday an inspector of government schools was rather badly handled by the boys in three schools. He has charge of the teachers' salaries. If all one hearts is true, he has not been dealing very faithfully with them. The boys took him to the public street, beat him and covered him with mud. He was rescued from them by the police. As nothing seems to have been done to the offenders, one surmises they had pretty good reasons for their action.

Suchien has had its first snow storm this year. It fell noiselessly for two successive nights. The first morning there was just a little white seen; next morning, however, the country was all white. The clouds are so heavy to-night, that we hope to-morrow's light will show the ground still more deeply covered and reassure the farmers' hearts over the wheat crop.

INSURRECTION IN THE PHILIPPINES

Colorum Outbreak Spreading: Large Reinforcements Necessary

Manila, Jan. 19.

It is learned from the highest authority that the Colorum outbreak is extremely serious and is spreading to Surigao, Leyte and Samar. Branches are reported to be all over the Philippines, even in the City of Manila, though up to the present they have been entirely peaceful.

Colonel Clarence H. Bowers, commanding the Constabulary now in the vicinity of Bucas Island and Surigao where the recent massacre occurred, has wired to Governor-General Wood to night as follows:

"Colorums are in an ugly frame of mind. Anticipate trouble."

Colonel Bowers also urgently asked for adequate reinforcements. The United States gunboat, Sacramento, is already patrolling Bucas waters. Six hundred fanatics on Bucas Island are concentrating for a probable attack on the Constabulary.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Manila, Jan. 24

More than a hundred Colorums have escaped from Bucas Island to Surigao where they are blockading the line from Placer (?) to Mainit (?). A Constabulary Patrol Captain and a dozen men have been cut off. Their fate is unknown.

The Colorums are rapidly recruiting followers on the mainland and are spreading riot, murder and pillage. The prospects are that United States troops will be called out.

COLORUMS COMPLETELY ROUTED

Aided by a machine-gun barrage from the U.S.S. Sacramento 100 constabulary under Colonel C. H. Bowers landed on Bucas Island at eight o'clock yesterday morning and charged the trenches of the Colorums, whom they routed completely. One constabulary man was killed. The loss sustained by the Colorums is not known. Two dead and two wounded were found.

Colonel Bowers immediately returned on board the Sacramento after burning the Colorum town, fearing that weather conditions would force the Sacramento from the coast.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE DEFENDANT' STORY

When the action was continued on Wednesday Mr. Tsah, the plaintiffs representatives, was further cross-examined by Mr. Seader Harris. He said that the capital of the Empire Optical Co. was divided into 30 shares of $100 each, and of these ht held two. It was not true that witness had removed stock from the safe, and he did not know that Rakusen had had to engage a policeman to look after the place.

In answer to Mr. Wing, witness said that if he had not taken action against Dr. Thompson in this matter, neither had he released him from any obligation which he might have incurred.

Dr. R. A. Thompson was then called and prefaced his evidence by saying, in answer to Mr. Wing, that the prosecution against him by defendant had been dismissed by the American Court on the previous afternoon.

Questioned with regard to the advertisement in which witness was said to have received references from Presidents Taft, Roosevelt, Wilson and Harding, and Gipsy Smith, the Doctor said that some of the statements were true and some of them were not.

THE "GOOF" SIGNS.

Witness went on to say that he arrived in Shanghai in 1922, and was attracted by the position of the plaintiffs' shop. He called on them several times and said he would like to take the place over and eventually the Chinese agreed to let witness in on a share of the profits. Witness conducted the business for two months and gave the Chinese a percentage of his receipts. Having no money, witness began to look round for some capital. Hearing that Rakusen had been in the optical business in America, witness put the proposition to him, it appealed to defendant, and he said he would put up the money to buy the business. Upon this, witness entered into negotiations with the Chinese and, after asking $4,000, they finally agreed to take $2,300. The arrangement was that witness was to go into partnership with defendant, and pay his share of the capital out of the profits he received. Actually, witness considered the business to be worth at least $2,500 gold, while the location was worth at least as much more. Witness agreed to pay the water bill and give $2,300 for the business. When the agreement was ready, Rakusen placed it on the table, put a pen in Tsah's hand and said "sign here," and Tsah signed without reading the document. When he had done so, Rakusen exclaimed: "Did you ever see such a big goof in all your life!" "I never did," answered witness. Rakusen then took the document and filled in the addition to clause 3 in ink. "What are you putting there?" witness asked, and Rakusen replied: "Leave it to me and we will get the place for nothing." As the Chinese had been fair to witness and as he did not want to see them lose their money, he told Tsah not to accept a cheque, and not to give up the lease until they had received full payment. Accordingly, Tsah refused to give up the lease except for cash, and there was an occasion when Tsah stood holding up the lease and Rakusen held up a bundle of notes. Neither would trust the other and consequently the lease did not pass. Witness continued with the business until the end of April or early in May, leaving then because he did not like Rakusen's methods of doing business. Whenever the Chinese called for their money, Rakusen put them off by saying he would pay them later. He said to witness: "If you will leave it to me, I will find cause to get the place for a few dollars." Rakusen added that if there was a controversy about stock and he put in a claim for three or four hundred dollars, and with the water account, the business would cost them nothing. Witness did not like this, and so he left. Rakusen advertised witness as having a London office, but he never had had one. Some of the instruments defendant advertised as being in possession of the company were never on the premises; they were intentions conceived in Rakusen's own mind.

AN EYE ON THE BUSINESS.

How was it (asked Mr. Reader Harris in cross-examination) that having left the business because you did not like the defendant's methods, you suggested a new partnership agreement?

Witness—The agreement prepared by my lawyers gave me a loophole to buy the business. It was so drawn up that Rakusen was sure to refuse to sign and thus witness would get a chance of buying the business.

Witness admitted that he had given information against Rakusen in an affidavit, the reason being that defendant had told him that when he had "cleaned up" in China he intended to go to America; this was no place for a White man to live in.

Counsel—You knew that when Rakusen put into the agreement the words "and the water bill," he was swindling Mr. Tsah?

Witness—I did.

And knowing he was swindling the Chinese, you remained with him as partner for two months and then tendered another partnership agreement!

Witness—That was a loophole whereby I might get the business.

Knowing that Rakusen had got the business for nothing, you thought you could get it cheaply from him?

Witness concluded by saying that he was giving evidence in order to help the Chinese, because they had treated him fairly and he did not want to see them lose then business for $5.

THE MAN WITH THE LEASE.

One of the Chinese shareholders in the Empire Optical Co., gave evidence that he had possession of the lease and demanded $1,200 of the purchase money before he would hand it over to defendant.

His Lordship observed that it was perfectly obvious why witness had taken this attitude, he being personally liable under the lease.

Witness went on to say that on one occasion Rakusen, Thompson, and another foreigner called at his house, and the foreigner whose name he did not know tried to obtain the lease by force, causing witness to go and hide in another room.

THE CASE FOR THE DEFENCE.

In opening the case for the defence, Mr. Reader Harris said that the highest amount plaintiffs could claim was $2,295, on the principle that where the buyer was in default the measure of damages was the price. The premises of the Empire Optical Co. having such a fine location, it was of the utmost importance that the partner who held the lease refused to hand it over unless he received a great deal more than his share of the purchase price.

His Lordship—Did it matter to you what the relations between the partners were? They could have fought it out afterwards.

"The trouble is, "said his Lordship later on, "this wretched agreement makes mention of a date on which the money should be paid.

The defendant, C. P. Rakusen, gave evidence when the case was continued in the afternoon. Dr. Thompson (he said) originally suggested plaintiff's concern, and said that he wanted to open in Shanghai a branch of his "World Wide Optical Company." He produced a book containing photographs of what purported to be branches of this company in other parts of the world and suggested that they buy the Empire Optical Company for the Shanghai branch. Witness agreed, and it was understood, they should put up G.$5,000 each, but Thompson intimated that he had not got the funds, and they then agreed that he should leave his share of the profits in the business till it amounted to one-half of the purchase price. Negotiations then went ahead and they eventually agreed to purchase the business for $2,500. Witness was dealing with Mr. Tsar, who had a power of attorney from the rest of the partners, and received from him satisfactory replies regarding rates and rent. He was told that the water rate was included in the lease, Tsar explaining that Mr. Hardoon paid his partners and himself a lump sum, as a private arrangement between themselves for payment of the rate, and that he would have to get this from the partner who held it.

LEASE MORE VALUABLE THAN THE BUSINESS.

Speaking as to the $5 "bargain money," witness said this was merely paid as a nominal sum to clinch the agreement. At that time witness was a trifle suspicious of Tsar's power of attorney, since in business it was always his policy not to believe anything he did not know for certain. Further more, he did not wish to pay the money until he had the lease, and up to that time had never seen it. In fact, he saw the document for the first time during these proceedings. The partner who held it refused to hand it over unless he were paid $1,200. Tsar objected to his receiving this sum, saying there would be nothing left for the other partners when the water and other bills had been paid. On one occasion witness actually gave Tsar $1,200 and received a receipt for it, but even then the other Chinese would not hand over the lease, and in disgust witness took his money back, tore up the receipt and left the house. There was mistrust on both sides with regard to the lease, which was the basis of the whole agreement. The Optical business was nothing without it. A fresh lease had been obtained from Mr. Hardoon.

Asked by Mr. Wing if he thought $2,300 was a fair price for the business, witness said he had always understood that the lease was the greater part of the purchase. The business itself was worth nothing; it was so small that plaintiffs rented out one of the windows at $70 or $80 a month.

On the point raised by witness that one of the Chinese, Mr. Hwa, refused to hand over the lease unless he received $1,200 counsel asked how it was witness did not get the document when (on his own evidence) he handed this sum to Mr. Tsar; and witness answered that he did not know, but there was a certain amount of distrust.

Counsel—You realize now that immediately you got the new lease, Hwa's only hope had gone?—I do not know that.

What else had he got to bargain with—I do not know what his object was in refusing to deliver the lease.

Did you not get a new lease from Mr. Hardoon before the expiration of plaintiff's term?—No. Mr. Hardoon held that, the rent for march being more than 15 days in arrear—the lease had gone.

In answer to Mr. Reader Harris, witness explained that he made arrangements with Mr. Hardoon for the new lease on March 7, on which day terms were agreed upon, provided that plaintiffs did not pay their rent before the 15th.

In summing up, Mr. Harris suggested that his Lordship should believe Mr. Rakusen's story, in which event he would deduct from the claim the amount of the water bill and advertising accounts, amounting to $11,000 or $1,200, and deduct also from the purchase price the value of the articles which had been stolen.

Mr. Wing, addressing the court, said it had been suggested that the parties had never trusted each other, but actually at the beginning plaintiffs implicitly trusted Rakusen, to such an extent that they signed the agreement and handed over to him the whole of the assets.

The court adjourned on the conclusion of counsel's speech.

In compliance with a petition addressed to him, Marshal Chang Tso-lin, the Mukden leader, has approved of a plan for the establishment of a school in Mukden for the training of future diplomats.

HONGKONG COMPANIES ORDINANCES

The Registration of Mortgages

An application under section 98 of the Companies' Ordinances (Hongkong) 1911 was made before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner on Monday on behalf of Messrs. Hawkings, Reed & Co., Ld. The motion was for an extension of time for delivery to the Registrar of Companies of copies of two mortgages, dated October 6, 1923, the first made between the company (then known as Little Bros. Ld.) and Mr. C. H. Bell, to secure the repayment of Hankow Tls. 7,000, with interest, and the second, of a similar nature and amount, made between the company and Mr. L. T. Beddowe.

Mr. J. H. Teesdale, for applicants, put in an affidavit by Mr. J. H. Reed, in charge of the company's Hankow branch, showing that copies of the mortgage, submitted to the Registrar of Companies within the specified time, were returned for verification. Some difference then arose between the company's representative and the British Consul at Hankow, and when this had been settled the time limit had expired.

The Crown Advocate (Mr. H. P. Wilkinson) appearing for the Registrar of Companies, said he did not oppose the application. He pointed out, however, that the copies of the mortgages as first submitted could not be accepted by the Registrar, who required a statutory declaration that they were correct copies.

His Lordship—Could not that have been made in Shanghai?

The Crown Advocate—No. The originals were at Hankow, where the land and buildings, the subject of the mortgage, are situated.

Mr. Teesdale suggested that in the circumstances the company ought not to be asked to pay the costs of the application, and the Crown Advocate intimated that he would not apply for costs.

His Lordship made an order for 28 days' extension of time, and noted that no order for costs had been applied for.

UNHAPPY NEWSPAPER VENTURE

Action by Printers Regarding "Shanghai Answers": The Month's Bill

A newspaper enterprise which failed, and a partnership dispute, came before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner at H. M. Supreme Court on Thursday when Ernest A. Paige (and when Ernest A. Paige (and "Shanghai Answers") was sued by the Oriental Press for Tls. 134.55 and $616.10, money paid for and on behalf of defendants at their request, and for work done. There was also a claim for $2,210.80 for goods sold and delivered and printing work done. Mr. J. G. Priestwood appeared for plaintiffs.

Mr. Priestwood stated that defendant first approached the Oriental Press with a suggestion for producing a paper to be called "The Humorist," but this project was abandoned. Subsequently defendant who was acquainted with Mr. Bickel, plaintiff's assistant manager, arranged for a month's credit for other newspaper work. This defendant denied, contending that Mr. Bickel was his secret partner in this second enterprise. According to defendant, Mr. Bickel was his partner in the production of "Shanghai Answers," costs in connexion with which were the subject of the present claim, but counsel contended that it was no defence to the action to claim that Mr. Bickel was a partner. Mr. Bickel had no authority to enter into any such partnership on behalf of the Oriental Press, and if he actually did enter into partnership with defendant, the fact was never disclosed to his employers. Partners were jointly liable, but in this instance the court could not give judgment against both because Mr. Bickel was an American citizen and not subject to the jurisdiction.

Defendant admitted the correctness of the accounts rendered, and that he carried on "Shanghai Answers," but in partnership with Mr. Bickel.

His Lordship—I understand your defence to be that, as there was a partnership, it is unfair you should be called upon to pay everything and Mr. Bickel nothing.

ATTRACTING THE CHINESE.

Mr. Matteo Bos, General manager of the Oriental Press, gave evidence that Mr. Bickel had no authority to bind the company to a partnership or any other agreement. He had absolutely no authority to make the firm a partner in any venture. The suggestion with regard to "The Humorist" was that competitions should be started which would attract the Chinese, competitions for guessing the number of people carried on the tramways, but witness did not think Chinese would be interested.

His Lordship—That is very interesting, but I do not think we need go into it.

Witness added that the account for this work was kept in the name of "Shanghai Answers," with defendant's name attached.

Defendant repeated that he worked in actual partnership with Mr. Bickel, who would have received half the profits, if there had been any profits.

His Lordship—You are being sued as one of the partners, and your complaint is that the other partner did not play the game?

Defendant—Certainly. I trusted him because he was assistant manager of the Oriental Press. Had it been anybody else, the money would have been put up.

His Lordship—You may have a strong case against Mr. Bickel, but I do not see that that forms any defence here. I cannot see why the partnership should not be liable for work done by Mr. Bickel's firm.

In answer to his Lordship, Mr. Bos stated that he had absolutely no idea, until some time after the paper ceased publication, that Mr. Bickel had any interest in or was connected in any way with "Shanghai Answers."

NO DEFENCE IN THIS CASE.

His Lordship—If part of the arrangement was that the partnership should be kept secret, Mr. Paige has played the game?

Witness—Yes, When I asked Mr. Bickel it, he denied it.

Other evidence having been called on the question of the alleged partnership, his Lordship said it was quite impossible for the Court in those proceedings to decide the question as between defendant and Mr. Bickel. It was, perhaps, unfortunate for defendant that he could not bring his alleged partner into that Court in order that the question of the partnership could be threshed out. In giving judgment for the amount claimed, with costs only in connexion with the larger sum, his Lordship added that defendant might have his remedy as against Mr. Bickel which he could take in his own way.

THE COMPRADORE

Discharged for Incompetence after Providing Loan

David Goldman appeared before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner on Thursday upon a summons by Cheng Chong-yuen for payment of $877 ballance under a judgment of the court in August last.

Mr. R. C. Faithfull, who appeared for plaintiff, was asked by his Lordship why he had taken out a fresh writ when judgment had already been given, and counsel explained that an arrangement having been come to after the judgment was given application was made to discontinue it.

His Lordship—You can discontinue a judgment summons but not a judgment. That must stand.

Defendant stated that when the case was before his Honour Judge Grain, the latter ascertained that witness was paying a debt to the Gas Company at the rate of Tls. 50 a month, and suggested that

PAPER HUNT CLUB FOR LADIES

An Organized Club, but to Work in Co-operation with the Men's Hunt

Somewhat of a flutter amongst riding people—who constitute a very large section of the foreign population of Shanghai—was caused on Monday by the announcement that the ladies were to form a paper hunt club of their own. The suggestion is not new, for it has been [illegible] season for several years. There [illegible] very accomplished in the saddle. [illegible] there is any valid reason why they should not be permitted to ride with the men: they have pressed their case repeatedly, and on each successive occasion, when the men steadfastly have held [illegible] heard the reply, "Well then, we will form an independent hunt club for ourselves." So, when it was announced definitely that the ladies were to establish a paper hunt club, most people presumed [illegible] independent as the Women's [illegible]

Just as there are wise old hands amongst the men who know how to exercise a judicious measure of restraint upon the thrusters and so to prolong their lives, so there are many ladies whose keenness in the country does not cause them to overlook stern facts. They know that there are scarcely half-a-dozen amongst them who could live through such a hunt, for instance, as was laid last Saturday. They know that Sunday's little pleasantry may be repeated at any time and that on such occasions a few men are handy things to have in the neighbourhood. They appreciate [illegible] already hunting the country regularly, there is quite enough paper about as it is to make it very difficult to put down a good trail and that a third would spoil the sport of all. They know also that it costs no small amount of money to run a paper hunt club.

So there is no question of the ladies breaking away and doing things for themselves. They are immensely grateful to the Stewards and members of the Paper Hunt Club for all the assistance given in the past and they are prepared to continue along the same lines, but it is considered that the time has arrived when the ladies' hunts should be put upon a regular basis and not simply be run as haphazard events subject practically to no rules. They wish to have a regular organization, under their own Master, and for the rest to rely upon the Paper Hunt Club as hitherto. In Tientsin the ladies hunt with the men and it is believed that in Chefoo there is, or was, a separate hunt club for ladies, but there is a wide difference between conditions in those little places and in Shanghai.

MRS. HICKLING ELECTED AS FIRST MASTER.

The meeting at Mrs. Hickling's house to form the Ladies' Paper Hunt Club, on Wednesday afternoon, was attended by 23 ladies and, counting upon the promises of support from others who were not able to attend, it appears probable that the club will start with a membership of about 65, which will make it far stronger than most people would have imagined. The ladies at the meeting wasted [illegible] discussion, for, as indicated above, [illegible] them of branching out on independent lines. They all [illegible] desirous of continuing to hunt under the auspices of the Shanghai Paper Hunt Club and the matter was not questioned.

To Mrs Hickling fell the honour of election as the first Master and two Stewards also were appointed, Miss Perrin and Miss Coutts. Mrs Pardoe kindly consented to act as secretary. In general, the hunting rules of the Paper Hunt Club were adopted, but a few distinctions were made. The winner of a hunt will stand down for one of the two succeeding hunts, making her own choice. A lady riding side-saddle and finishing first will win the hunt outright, as in the case of a heavyweight topping the card in the other hunt. With the men in such an instance there is no lightweight winner: with the ladies there will be no astride winner unless one finishes first. The winners of hunts will be entitled to wear red rosettes. If a wade should be laid by a bridge the ladies will be compelled to take the wade and not cross by the bridge.

FIRE IN LUMBER SHIP

Serious Outbreak at Sea Confined to Aft Hold

A fire occurred on Thursday of last week aboard the str. Warren of Manila, loaded with timber consigned to a Chinese firm in Shanghai.

The conflagration which took place in the aft hold must have been serious in the early stages, for the smoke even found its way into the engine-room. As it occurred at sea the crew had an anxious time in getting the ship to port. Fortunately, the Warren is an old American army transport converted into a lumber ship, consequently well equipped with fire fighting appliances and by damping down the hatches and pumping steam into the affected area the crew managed to keep the blaze under control until the ship reached Shanghai early last Friday morning.

The vessel lay till the afternoon waiting for a favourable tide in order to be taken to Kiangnan Docks' buoys. As her steering gear was out of order it was found necessary to use two towboats for this purpose, an operation which was rendered even more complicated by the fact that the ship suffered from a list due to the fact that the water pumped into the hold had worked its way to one side of the vessel.

SPONTANEOUS COMBINATION?

No cause has yet been found for the fire though the theory of spontaneous combustion has been advanced. Nothing definite will be discovered, however, until it is possible to remove the deck cargo and unbatten the hatches. It is not even certain yet whether the [illegible] ed, though judging from the [illegible]

THE FOREIGN PRESS ASSOCIATION

Adoption of a Constitution: Status of Members: Possibility of a Press Club

A second meeting of the Foreign Press Association of China was held on Tuesday evening at the Palace Hotel, a representative gathering of journalists, publishers, printers and members of associated professions being presided over by Mr. J. Em. Lemiere. The committee appointed at the inaugural meeting presented a draft constitution which was adopted with slight amendments, after a prolonged discussion which centred around one point. This was as to the status of members of the association, certain members objecting very strongly to the admittance to the association of people who, having regular employment in other professions, had secondary engagements with newspapers. It was pointed out that these people, by accepting standing salaries from some newspapers, for which they filled regular reportorial engagements, made things very difficult for members of the profession who were not in a position to retaliate by also accepting secondary employment. An assurance was given that such people, described by one member as "parasites," would not be admitted to membership.

The committee previously appointed to consider the advisability of forming a Press Club as headquarters for the association reported that, pending the adoption of a constitution, they had thought it better not to make any definite suggestions. However, after the adoption of a constitution including corporate membership for daily newspapers and magazines, in addition to individual members, it was decided that there was every prospect for a Press Club becoming a substantial institution and the committee were instructed to proceed with the drafting of by-laws.

MR. ROWLAND AND UNION CHURCH

Minister's Resignation Refused by a Large Majority

A meeting was called on Wednesday of the members of Union Church and congregotion to considtr the resignation of the pastorship of the church which Mr. Rowland had sent to the Committee.

Without entering into detail into the causes which led up to this resignation, it may be said very broadly that some members of the congregation differed from Mr. Rowland's standpoint doctrinally. Mr. Rowland was not present at Wednesday's meeting, but these differences were very fully canvassed and good testimony was given to the fundamental soundness of Mr. Rowland's teaching.

At the end of the meeting the congregation's wishes were taken by ballot, the result being a very large majority against Mr. Rowland's resignation being accepted. On this happy result his many friends will be glad to congratulate him.

MR. and Mrs. I. J. Soulevich announce the marriage, which will take place on Sunday, February 3, at the Obel Meishe Synagogue, 11 Seward Road, of their daughter, Olga Beatrice, to Mr. Mark Rosenbloom, of Messrs. H. S. Honigsberg & Co., Inc.

H. E. J. Michelet, Norwegian [illegible] Peking, and Mrs. Michelet left for Home by the P. & O. s. Macedonia on Monday evening. Mr. Aal, the Norwegian Consul-General in Shanghai, gave a banquet at the Cercle Sportif on Mr and Mrs. Michelet's honour. About 120 guests were present, of all nationalities. Dancing followed dinner and a very pleasant evening was spent.

LAW REPORTS

EMPIRE OPTICAL CO.

Allegation of a Purchase Contract with Five Dollars Bargain Money

The purchase of a business in Nanking Road on a deposit of $5, alleged to be bargain money, was the subject of an action in H. M. Supreme Court on Tuesday before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner, the case being that of M. Tsah (acting on behalf of himself and six other Chinese) against Charlesworth P. Rakusen. Plaintiff claimed $4,000 damages for breach of a contract under which defendant agreed to purchase the Empire Optical Co., owned by plaintiffs, defendant having failed to pay for the stock-in-trade and goodwill of the business which was handed over to him. The defence was that payment was contingent on plaintiffs handing over to defendant the lease of their premises in Nanking Road, and that certain expenditure had been incurred for which plaintiffs were liable and which should be deducted from the contract price.

Mr. Tycho Wing appeared for plaintiffs and Mr. Reader Harris for defendant.

THE PROPOSAL TO PURCHASE.

The matter, said Mr. Wing in his opening statement, was not a very complicated one. Plaintiffs were men of small means who went into partnership and carried on this business as makers of spectacles, etc., and towards the end of 1922 they came into touch with Dr. Thompson, an American, who took charge of the technical side of the business. This arrangement continued until January of last year when, with the New Year approaching, plaintiffs were not averse to selling the business, while Dr. Thompson seemed to have thought it might advantageously be purchased. Not having the means himself, he got into touch with Mr. Rakusen and conducted negotiations, these eventually resulting in an agreement—in some ways a rather remarkable document—being entered into. Defendant agreed to purchase the business — machinery, fixtures, stock, good will—for $2,300, but reasons were found for not making the payment and nothing but $5 was actually paid. The arrangement between Mr. Rakusen, who had the means, and Dr. Thompson, who had the experience, was that the doctor should receive a certain amount out of the profits, and from this he would gradually pay Rakusen half of the purchase price. They separated not long after, and such agreement as there was between them was never carried out. So far as the present case was concerned, the only person who ever had the assets of the company was Mr. Rakusen. No sooner was the agreement signed than he raised the point that the money should not be paid until the premises had been handed over and an inventory taken and plaintiffs had to consent to this. The business was handed over on February 12 and an inventory begun, defendant being from that time in control. Plaintiffs absolutely denied the statement that part of the stock had been removed by them.

A SUSPICIOUS PARTNER.

The inventory was completed but still the money was not paid, this time on the ground that defendant had not yet got the lease. This lease, obtained from Mr. Hardon, was in the hands of one of the partners, Mr. Wang, who was rather suspicious about the whole transaction and absolutely declined to hand over the lease until at all events he himself and others associated with him had adequate protection: he demanded that at least $1,200 should be paid to him, and there was a "performance" of one man holding up the lease and another a bundle of notes, and a grab being made at them. In the course of further remarks counsel mentioned that among the celebrities the company advertised having received references from were President Taft, President Roosevelt, President Harding, President Wilson and Gipsy Smith. Concluding his remarks on the agreement, Mr. Wing said that in brief the business amounted to this: that defendant bought the business for $5, which amount was enclosed with the agreement. Plaintiff did not understand why the money had been put in, but came to the conclusion that it must be a pleasant foreign custom.

AGREEMENT DRAWN UP.

Tsah Ming-chao, representing the plaintiffs, gave evidence as to their purchasing the Empire Optical Co. for $3,000. They Optical Co. for $3,000. They took Dr. Thompson into parnership in September or October, 1922, and shared the profits of the business with him. He left after two months, but frequently called in and wanted to purchase the business. Later he brought Rakusen with him. The latter offered $2,000 for the business and witness asked for $4,000. As short of cash, he agreed to sell the business for $2,000, defendant to pay the water bills and Dr Thompson to pay $300. An agreement was drawn up and signed. In this defendant afterwards made an alteration with reference to payment of the water bills, and when witness asked why this alteration had been made he answered "Oh, never mind." Plaintiff understood that the money was to be paid immediately on the agreement being signed, but defendant then said that he wanted to take an inventory, and payment was thus delayed. An inventory was taken, and it was expected that payment would be made, but defendant then said he would pay as soon as he had the lease. This was in the possession of one of the partners, who wanted $500 in cash before he would give it up. The next thing was that they all assembled at the home of one of the plaintiffs, and all expected that the purchase money would be paid but their expectations were disappointed. Accordingly they took legal advice. As to the $5 said to be "bargain money," witness was under the impression it was a motor car fare.

DR. THOMPSON OR DEFENDANT?

In cross-examination by Mr Reader Harris, witness said he did not know whether he had been swindled by Dr. Thompson or the defendant, but he did know that the money had not been paid. He did not know that Dr Thompson had sworn an affidavit to the effect that he verily believed Rakusen intended to abscond.

Counsel—Dr. Thompson is now your friend, and you have entirely released him from liability?

Witness—He ceased to have anything to do with the business and an announcement was published saying that Rakusen was the sole owner. The latter had financial control. Witness added that he never thought the $5 would be considered as "bargain money." It was such a ridiculously small sum.

Counsel was proceeding to question witness as to a three months' water bill unpaid by plaintiffs, and other items, when his Lordship observed: You agreed to pay $2,300 for the business and you have paid nothing more than $5, and now on your client's instructions you are accusing this man of not having paid a bill of $30 or $40. It does not seem to be the sort of thing which should come from your client's mouth.

At this stage the hearing was adjourned until next morning, Mr. Wing intimating that Dr. Thompson's presence was required in the United States Court that afternoon, he being prosecuted there by Mr. Rakusen.

There was an apparent difference between it and the signature on a number of cheques (the other exhibits).

Replying to Mr. C. S. Franklin, he said that the signature had been painstakingly written and differed from the others in that the "g" and "m" were not connected.

Mr. Rodger (cross-examining) asked whether anyone of normal mind would be able to note the forgery of one's own signature and was answered by the statement that the writer of the cheques should be able to notice the difference.

Mr. Peter MacDougall, bank-clerk at the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank, said that he would not accept the signature on the receipt were it presented on a cheque to be drawn against Mrs. Slegman's current account at the bank. He also was of the same opinion that she would be able to recognize it as not hers if she saw it.

Mr. Rodger asked for an adjournment so that he might also call several experts and his Honour, in acceding, stated that he would like to hear oral argument. To Mr. Rodger's statement that he could dispose of his case in 10 minutes, Mr. Franklin countered that if he (Mr. Rodger) could finish in 10, he could do with less; eight minutes would be enough.

Adjourning the case until Wednesday at 12 noon instead of 12.30, as was suggested, the Judge said he found that lawyers were very unstable in matters of time.

Elaborate Researches Ordered

Photographic enlargements of cheques and the alleged receipt in controversy in the action by Euly Greenfield to recover G.$5,500 worth of jewellery from Lucille Slegman, were produced at the U..S. Court on Wednesday when the hearing was resumed by Judge Lobingier. Interesting evidence was given by one of plaintiff's witnesses on the study of handwriting and attempts of criminologists to detect forgeries. The case was adjourned to enable laboratory tests to be made of the signatures.

Mr. H. D. Rodger appeared for plaintiff; Mr. C. S. Franklin for defendant.

In order, he said, to hurry the proceedings, Mr. Franklin stipulated to the identification of the enlargements of the signatures, but objected to their use as evidence by the expert, stating that an expert was qualified by examining signatures not enlargements. The fair method was to show the originals first.

His Honour said that if photographs would be of assistance to determine forgery or identity, he would over-rule the objection.

To Mr. Rodger's suggestion that there were variations in the letter "S" the Judge said that from time to time on the cheques there were slight changes, but as for comparison with the receipt it would be difficult to ascertain at once the similarities. The cheques were drawn on smooth paper, but the receipt was on a mildly corrugated paper, perhaps a book cover.

Mr. Rodger (to Mr. W. Smith, sub-manager of the Asia Banking Corporation)—Would you accept the signature of the receipt at the bank if you had accepted all the cheques?

Witness—I would question the signature for the time being, but I would not form an opinion now, even with the magnified specimens before me. I would hesitate to form an opinion without at least two hours' intensive research. I could after that probably give a much better idea as to the validity of it. I am willing to try it.

Judge Lobingier—That is what we wish, anything to assist justice.

Mr. Smith—Experts in criminology have studied this matter for many years and have evolved rules and procedure which may followed with remarkable correctness. It requires elaborate research into the angles and the general outline of the specimens rather than continuity. There is in Shanghai a volume prepared by a qualified man; his book is used with confidence by bankers in the Pacific Coast cities. I am willing this afternoon or to-morrow afternoon to give these thorough laboratory scrutiny.

After agreement by counsel to this procedure, Mr. Franklin reiterated that witness would question the signature, to which Mr. Rodger rejoined "after passing all the cheques." Witness then said that he would question "some of the cheques," asserting that the paper drawn in 1923 would by no means form as ample a test as those written at the time of the receipt in 1920, because of the time element.

The hearing as stated, was adjourned.

NEW YEAR CAFE FRACAS

Elmont and Johnson Sent for Trial for Alleged Assault: French Officer's Revolver

Sensational allegations against the French police were made at the U.S. Court on Tuesday when J. Emont, C. Johnson and R. Libby when charged on remand before Mr. N. E. Lurton with assault upon French police officers during the New Year's night fracas in the New Maxim's Café. Elmont said the police refused to allow him to communicate with his Consul, confined him in a "filthy cell, the floor and walls of which were dirty," and that when he asked for a drink he was spat upon.

Det.-Sgt. Douglas, who witnessed part of the affair, stated that he entered the café at about midnight and remained until after the trouble. When it started his view was obstructed by a pillar. He saw Johnson holding the constable Durocher with one arm, his hand crooked round the officer's neck and striking him with the clenched fist of his free hand.

In answer to Mr. F. J. Schuhl, who defended, witness said he heard some one say, "He's got a gun, he's got a gun," but the sound came from one side near the stairs and he could not see either the man who shouted or who had a gun. After the crowd had separated somewhat he could see that a number of people were holding Durocher and later saw him in a semi-conscious condition on the floor. In the crowd of 25 or 30 people, he did not notice any constables in uniform, though later he saw two men dressed as such upstairs. When he got to the half conscious constable he did what he could for him, assisting him to the lavatory.

Mr. Schuhl—Did you see Johnson strike anyone else?—He was swinging round wildly and I cannot say that I saw him hit others. Libby did not strike anyone as far as I know.

Having heard Det.-Sgt. Douglas's evidence, Insp. Dupuy applied for a warrant for one Taylor, who is alleged to have been a participant. Mr. Lurton replied that the formalities would have to be gone through as in all other cases—a formal complaint would have to be made.

Det.-Sgt. Tinkler said he heard a great noise and commotion, but was not greatly interested until he heard some one say, "He's got a gun." Then he began to get into the middle of things. Johnson was in difficulty and he tried to quieten him and was leading him downstairs when he met Taylor at the bend. Witness did not then know the latter's name. Without warning Taylor struck him and blacked his eye. "I had to let go of Johnson, but as I was striking to defend myself he hit me again," said witness. "I then hit and Taylor went on upstairs."

EVIDENCE FOR THE DEFENCE.

The first witness for the defence was Johnson, who stated that his real name was Charles Wilson. He had given the alias on the night in question because he hoped it would avoid publicity. He had joined company with Libby that night and the two had a table together in the eastern end of the room. They ordered drinks. Libby excused himself and went to the lavatory. Witness also went out for a moment. When he returned the drinks and table either had disappeared or some one had sat at their table. So he asked the man at the adjoining table whether they had taken them (he later found that his name was Sells). The man took offence and said, using a certain expression, "You must be looking for trouble." Witness then asked him to go downstairs, but the man swung on him while his hands were being held by Libby. The blow landed on his left eye, broke the glasses he was wearing and cut his eye badly.

Libby, in evidence, said "I asked Mr. Johnson to come and sit with me and have a drink, then we went out for a moment and when we came back the table was gone. The big question was, 'Where had it gone?' When that man Sells said to Johnson in answer to his question, 'You are a son-of-a-gun,' I thought maybe the table was not ours. I got between Johnson and the table and was holding him when I heard the spectacles crack and the air was full of names all round. Trouble began. I thought Durocher was a friend of ours because he was trying to keep people back from the fight. I know that I did not hit anybody. I was too busy holding Johnson, and I could get no details of the battle."

Mr. Schuhl—Did Johnson strike the constable?

A SERIES OF FIGHTS.

Witness—He didn't have a chance, I was holding him. The general brawling continued, There must have been many fights in the house. Then six or eight Chinese policemen took me away and at least six and more, perhaps 10, had Johnson. Some had him by the shoulders, the others by the feet and by the arms. The police seemed scared. They didn't appear to know what they were doing. They had lost their heads. I was asked to follow one of them, which I did. We passed Johnson and I saw the seat of his pants trailing on the ground as they were dragging him up Avenue Edward VII. He looked as if he were trying to stand up.

STRONG MAN OF THE EVENING.

A. F. Wilson, against whom no allegations have been made, told the Court that he saw the other man take off his coat and strike Johnson. He also saw Durocher try two or three times to pull out the gun. He got it out halfway several times.

A sensation was caused when Mr. R. O'Brien said he was the man who knocked Durocher down and sat on him as he tried to extract the pistol. While Johnson had his back to the wall witness say the constable trying to get out his gun.

Mr. Schuhl—What did you do?—I shouted that he had a gun and then I up and hit him under the chin. He went down, hit the floor.

What then?—I put my knee into his stomach until he got quieted. Then I lifted him up. When he went for the revolver again, I pushed him against the wall and took it away, reaching over his shoulder. All the crowd went for him when they saw the gun. I then turned the pistol over to the American authorities.

ELMONT "SPIT UPON."

The third defendant, Elmont, then gave evidence. In reply to Mr. Schuhl's question whether he hit Durocher or not, he replied, "No sir, but I saw O'Brien pop him under the chin."

Mr. Schuhl—Were you arrested?

Witness—No sir, I walked to the station to see what I could do for Mr. Johnson's bad eye, but they would not let me into the charge-room. One man asked me to follow him. I thought that he wanted to take my name and address, so I went along and found myself in a cell. A Mr. Goldman was there too as being mixed up in the affair, but he was let out the next day with a weak apology. I believe he tried to help Johnson in the cells. I told them that I wanted to be permitted to call my Consul by telephone, but I was not. I was cold, my gown was gauzy and the air got into it. The cell was filthy, the floor and walls dirty, spider webs hung down from the ceiling and excrement lay round the floor. I asked the warder for a drink, but was spat on for my trouble. They said that I stole a gun, but I told them that it was hardly possible with the clothes I was wearing. I then asked them to search me.

Reviewing the evidence, Mr. Lurton said it was sufficient to warrant the committal of Johnson and Elmont to the higher court on charges connected with the alleged assault on Delimatski and Pancrezé. The evidence against Libby was insufficient and he would therefore be discharged.

Formal Charges by J. Elmont Against French Police

The U. S. Consulate-General is in receipt of a letter written by J. Elmont, who was arrested on the night of December 31, after the alleged assault on French constables in Maxim's Café. The memorandum is a protest by Elmont with reference to the conditions to which he was subjected during the night and the subsequent morning, details which Elmont outlined at the hearing before Mr. N. E. Lurton. When asked for a statement last evening by the "North-China Daily News" Mr. J. K. Davis, Executive American Consul, declared that there was nothing to say except that Department correspondence is not given to the press. What action has been or will be taken was not divulged.

The complete text of the letter follows:—

"I wish to call your attention to the treatment I received at the hands of the French Police Authorities on the night of January 1.

"(1) I was imprisoned at the French gaol without knowing on what charge and was refused any information.

"(2) I was refused permission to telephone to the American Consulate or friends.

"(3) I was held a prisoner in an unspeakably filthy cell beside Chinese prisoners from about 2.30 a.m. until 8 a.m.

"(4) I was then only permitted to go free by paying M.$50 to the officers in charge as bail money.

"I respectfully request that you give the matter the attention it deserves, as it will prove to you the outrageous treatment myself and two other Americans and one Britisher received at the hands of the French authorities."

ALLEGED ASSAULT ON A CHAUFFEUR

Strained Relations Between Oculists Followed by Court Proceedings

The case against Dr. R. A. Thompson, who is alleged to have assaulted Liu Kwei-sung, the Chinese chauffeur of Charlesworth P. Rakusen, was heard before the U. S. Commissioner for China, Mr. N. E. Lurton, on Tuesday afternoon. The special assistant district attorneys, Messrs. H. R. Snyder and F. J. Schuhl prosecuted. Defendant was not represented by Counsel.

Liu Kwei-sung, the chauffeur, stated that on January 10 at the corner of Peking and Yuen-ming-yuen Roads, as Mr. Rakusen had entered the car and witness was about to drive on, the defendant came along, cursed at his master and tried to assault his master, who paid no attention but told witness to drive on. As he attempted to do so, defendant struck him on the face.

In cross-examination Dr. Thompson asked: "Is it not a fact that Rakusen told you to come up and tell a lie?" This was denied by the witness and Dr. Thompson then stated that he would prove that the charge was merely malicious persecution and that he would impeach the credibility of the witness.

The second witness was C. P. Rakusen, who stated that Dr Thompson jumped on the step of the car and began using obscene and abusive language. After hitting the chauffeur, he wrenched the side curtain off the car, and trampled on it, "Doing a war dance on it like a baby." When he saw witness getting out of the car he ran away.

In cross-examination Dr. Thompson asked: "Is it not a fact that you were compelled to leave Washington for conducting a fake business?" to which the witness responded "You should not judge every one by yourself" and later answered in the negative. When asked whether he had not bribed his chauffeur to perjure himself, the witness replied that the insinuation was "an unmitigated lie."

Recrimination on both sides grew so lively at this point that the Commissioner was obliged to rule out extraneous irrelevant testimony. He eventually ruled that the evidence was insufficient to to bind over defendant and dismissed the charge.

ENGINEERING CONCERN IN DIFFICULTIES

Assets of the American Engineering Corpn. to be Disposed Of

An alleged preferred claim involving $3,000 on a special order for American stoves against the American Manufacturing Co. of China, Inc., in liquidation, was the subject of an interesting application to Judge Lobingier in the U. S. Court on Wednesday.

Major A. Bassett attended on behalf of the applicants, Messrs. Mustard & Co.; Mr. H. S. de Vault for Haskins & Sells, the auditors Mr. J. S. Potter, receiver, for the company in liquidation.

The matter was stated to have been listed among the preferred claims unless objection was made, but the auditors, were not clear about a mortgage in connexion with the claim.

Major Bassett, a director of Mustard & Co., said applicants had let a contract with the American Manufacturing Co. to make a number of stoves according to patterns furnished, which were similar to an American brand. But before the contract was completed the insolvent organization requested for funds to carry on and was granted $3,000 to complete the stove business. In return they gave a mortgage for the output, any surplus parts and boxes (moulds). The funds were to pay off labour demands. Both parties were anxious to complete the terms of the first agreement.—one needed the stoves, and the other the profits from the lead. When the defunct firm could no longer carry on, it was found that something like $1,600 could be realized from the sale of surplus parts to a Mr. King, who was requested by Mustard & Co. to hand over this money to the Receiver which was done. Had the parts been sold as scrap, not more than $300 could have been received for them.

Mr. Bassett further stated it was his opinion that the mortgage was obtained on a special arrangement and was to be devoted to the carrying out of a contract of special benefit to the ordinary creditors, in that the labour always preferred, would have been satisfied. Replying to his Honour witness said that the company could not have made the stoves unless the money had been supplied.

"BADLY INSOLVENT."

Mr. De Vault said that at the time of the mortgage the American Manufacturing Co. was badly insolvent and therefore the mortgage should not be held against any of the assets.

Mr. Potter said that the material used had been bought from Anderson, Meyer & Co., who had not contested the claim. They had a claim of Tls. 11,000.

Several other claims were mentioned. Having suggested another report on the affairs as they now were, the Judge said that he would issue an order to dispose of the assets, plant, equipment and materials, which was the unanimous desire of the creditors.

witness should reduce this amount in order to pay some thing to plaintiff in the present case. Referring to the fact that plaintiff was now asking for costs and 8 per cent. interest, witness pointed out that this would amount to 40 per cent. of the original debt.

His Lordship: An allowance of 8 per cent interest on a judgment is not possible under our Rules of Court.

Defendant offered to pay $30 a month, but Mr Faithfull asked for more, saying that the money was advanced by plaintiff, who acted as defendant's compradore, within a month, during which plaintiff was discharged and was never paid.

Defendant I discharged him because he was incompetent.

His Lordship gave judgment for the amount claimed, to be paid at the rate of $30 a month, with 5 per cent interest, and warned defendant that if he got into arrears with a single instalment plaintiff could issue an execution warrant for the whole amount.

INDIAN PROPAGANDA CHARGE

Garlands and Rosewater for Accused at Police Court: But Found Guilty

Indians were present in force again at H M Police Court last Friday to hear further proceedings against four of their number charged before Mr G. W King with engaging in propaganda likely to produce or incite a breach of the public peace. The accused, Sandar Dass, Kapur Singh, and Abond Suntra, who answered to their bail, and Harbaksh Singh, who was remanded in custody, again were given a rousing reception, satellites with garlands of flowers and perfume to sprinkle over their heroes being to the fore again. The majority of sympathizers with the accused were black turbans, signifying their adherence to the Indian Nationalist movement.

Det Sub. Inspector Yorke gave evidence as to visiting No 327 Rue du Consulat and there finding the accused engaged in producing the newspaper complained of.

The Sikh constable who translated three articles containing attacks upon the senior officer of the Sikh Police Jemadar Budda Singh, was recalled and cross-examined by Mr Tycho Wing, who now appeared to defend Harbaksh Singh. A great deal of time was spent in going over the documents, and it was found that the originals and the translations were all misplaced, the Court according adjourning while they were put in proper order.

ALLEGED MISTRANSLATIONS.

Mr. Wing further cross-examined on the resumption to show that the translations were incorrect. Proceeding to address the Court on behalf of Harbaksh Singh, counsel said the documents on which the case was based had been presented to the Court in such a way that the charge must fail. He did not propose and did not think it was his duty to call evidence to show what the correct translation was, and contended that accused was entitled to be discharged unless the prosecution could show he did publish certain documents, the meaning of which it was for the prosecution to establish to the satisfaction of the Court. This counsel suggested the prosecution had signally failed to do.

After dealing with what the defence contended were inaccuracies in translation, inaccuracies which gave a sinister meaning to perfectly reasonable statements, counsel went on to say that the articles had nothing to do with rioting or sedition but were connected with a private quarrel. There was nothing in them which invited or suggested disturbance of the public peace, nothing relating to any public or class feeling. They all dealt with one particular person. They were attacks upon Jemadar Budda Singh and made certain charges against him: malversation of public or semi-public money, using his official position for his own private ends, bribery, and lies super or officers for the same reason. If there was any offence, the remedy was an action for libel, and it would then be open to defendants to plead justification and public interest. Counsel quoted remarks used by Mr Justice Cave in connexion with the prosecution of Mr John Burns, to the effect that newspaper articles of this description should be given certain latitude on the principle that, while abuse of the press should be checked, its liberty should be preserved. Counsel then commented upon the orderly character of the crowd which had attended the proceedings, and asked if that looked like an attempt to create disturbance.

His Worship: No, because they have been told that if they make any disturbance they will be dealt with summarily.

Mr Wing: No doubt they are aware of that. But they are not an angry crowd, they are just interested. If defendant had been trying to create a breach of the peace he surely would have been a little more successful than this, counsel added.

PRIMA FACIE CASE MADE OUT.

His Worship agreed that the translation had been shown to be inaccurate in one instance, but there were other very material words which had not been dealt with, such as the phrase in which Budda Singh was described as the servant of the "evil administration" (the Government), and another which said that "all persons should become familiar with the corrupt and evil policies of the Police." Was anything more likely to make public trouble than an attempt to get the Sikh police seething with dissatisfaction? Accordingly, his Worship held that the accused had a prima facie case to answer.

None of the accused elected to give evidence, but all contended that the translations were wrong, and one said that the writing was solely against Budda Singh.

Mr F T Maitland, Police Prosecutor, asked that the ringleader, Harbaksh Singh, be bound over in a surety of at least $2,000, and the others in smaller sums.

His Worship bound all the accused over to be of good behaviour, Abond Singh in the sum of $25 for one year: Sandar Dass and Kapur Singh also for one year on a personal bond of $150; and Harbaksh Singh for two years in a personal bond of $150 and three approved sureties of $250 each.

Upon leaving the court after having signed the bonds, the Indians were hailed by their friends with acclamation, rosewater and garlands being administered as before, and coppers thrown into the air a proceeding greatly appreciated by coolies in the vicinity. An organized and quite orderly procession then passed off towards the Gurdwara, chanting by the way, black turbaned revolutionists leading the choir.

THE MAN WHO FOUND A WATCH

Police Court Sequel to a Midnight Incident in Hongkew

A young man named A. Ismail, with aliases of Alfred Tip, appeared before Mr. G. W. King at H. M. Police Court on Tuesday charged with having stolen a gold watch valued at $95, the property of H Huddleston.

As the accused, described as a British subject, was the son of a Turkish father and an Arabian mother, and born at Hongkong, and now carried the papers of a Malay seaman, the hearing was adjourned till the afternoon in order that his nationality might be inquired into. It was found that he had a British passport issued by the Hongkong authorities, and accordingly the case was proceeded with. Chief Inspector O'Toole appeared for the police.

Det. Sub-Inspector Condur, who arrested accused at the Wayfoong Room on Monday, said that after denying he knew anything about the watch, accused said that he picked it up outside or beside the Astor Bar.

Complainant stated that owing to his war service he was subject to epileptic fits, and was overcome by one just as he was getting into a rickshaw outside the Astor Bar about 12.30 midnight on the 17th instant.

Other evidence showed that when complainant was seized with the fit, accused was among those who assisted him, calling out for some one to fetch a doctor and assisting to carry Mr Huddleston into the bar.

Accused admitted that he picked the watch up on the floor of the bar and put it in his pocket.

His Worship observed that the theft was a peculiarly mean one in the circumstances, and he could not deal with accused as a first offender. He would have to go to prison for one month with hard labor.

A FOREIGNER SHOT IN AVENUE JOFFRE

Charge of Assault Against British Subject Following Shooting of Foreigner

Proceedings were begun in H.M Police Court on Thursday before Mr G. W. King in connexion with the shooting affair which took place in Avenue Joffre on Wednesday evening. In view of developments likely to ensue, full details of the case cannot now be given, but it may be said that the French Police had occasion to visit the residence of a man named W. H. Shaw, known in local boxing circles as "Charlie White," having suspicions that he was interested in trafficking in drugs and arms and ammunition. It is alleged that money had been obtained from Chinese upon a promise to deliver opium or other drugs, but that the goods were not delivered, and this allegation was being inquired into. On two or three occasions a French detective visited Shaw's house at 280 Avenue Joffre, presenting himself as a prospective buyer, and it is understood that on Wednesday evening he called with the idea of receiving a sample. The detective had an interview with Shaw and alleges that he was attacked, whereupon he drew his revolver and fired, Shaw receiving a wound of a serious nature. It was learned yesterday afternoon that he lies in a critical condition and may not recover.

At 1.05 a.m. yesterday Chief Detective Inspector Cruickshank and Det. Sub-Inspector Conduit went to No. 86 Range Road and there arrested Charles Lowry, charging him with having assaulted George Emilianof, an officer of the French Police, at No. 280 Avenue Joffre about 8 o'clock on the previous evening. It was upon this charge that Lowry appeared in court yesterday.

Mr. H. E. Sidaine appeared on behalf of the French authorities, and Mr. P. W. Goldring represented the defendant.

AN ALLEGED TRAP.

The Magistrate asked whether the French Police proposed to bring more than one charge against Lowry, and Mr. Sidaine replied that they were charging him with assault and with laying a trap for the police.

The Magistrate—Another British subject will be implicated and for reasons which I need not state now will not be able to appear to-day.

Mr. Goldring—It will be some time before he is able to appear.

Chief Inspector Cruickshank then gave evidence of arrest. He stated that at about 12.30 that morning he received a warrant for the arrest of accused and, accompanied by Det. Sub-Inspector Conduit went to the Imperial Hotel, 86 Range Road, where they found accused just going to bed. He was told he was wanted and the warrant was read. As they left the hotel, Lowry began to talk, and was warned, then making the following statement: "I have nothing to say in the matter. The whole thing is this: this afternoon I was invited by Shaw, who is a friend of mine, to go to his house in the French Concession. I was there all the afternoon with him. Shaw and a friend went out for a ride and I stayed behind with the ladies. During the time Shaw was absent a man came in and requested to see Shaw. This was about 7 o'clock. He was told Shaw was not in, and came back at 8 o'clock and, as I thought he had private business to discuss with Shaw, my friend and I left the room. The Inspector interposed the remark that Lowry did not mention who the friend was. Continuing, Lowry said: "I heard a scuffle and then a shot, and I jumped into the room and saw that Shaw had been shot. I and my friend —you saw him there—took Shaw to the hospital. That is all I have got to say."

Mr. Goldring reserved cross-examination, and the case was adjourned for a fortnight.

The police asked for bail of Tls. 1,000 cash, but defendant offered two sureties of $500 each and the Magistrate agreed to this security.

It was ascertained late last night on inquiry at the General Hospital that the injured man is now out of danger.

THE U. S. SHIPPING BOARD SUED

Missing Cargo: An Interesting Question of Exchange: Judgment for Plaintiffs

Judgment was given on Saturday in the U. S. Court for China in the case in which the American Sales Corporation sue the United States Shipping Board for sums of G $1,752.42 and Tls. 377.39, on account of the loss of 146 bundles of corrugated concrete reinforcement bars, shipped by defendants for plaintiffs in a consignment from San Francisco to Shanghai by the str. West Calera in May, 1920, and missing on arrival.

Defendants admit the loss, but state that they paid plaintiffs Tls. 1,704.07 (the equivalent at the prevailing rate of exchange of G.$1,708.33) in May 27, 1921, in full settlement of all claims. To this plaintiffs' reply that "plaintiffs and defendants are American corporations: the goods were American goods valued in American money: and this case is being tried before an American Court."

Messrs. Schuhl and Schoenfeld appeared for plaintiffs and Messrs. Davies and Bryan for defendants. In giving judgment his Honour Judge Lobingier said:—

We do not find in defendants' brief any reasons advanced or authorities cited in support of the proposition that defendants' liability can be discharged in Chinese currency. That proposition seems to have been assumed without proof or argument, but the liability seems clearly one in United States currency. This case is different from some of those cited by defendant where payment in a foreign currency was expressly stipulated. Here there is no such provision. . . .

A contract of affreightment such as this is governed by the law of the place where it was made. This one, having been made in San Francisco, is governed by the American law under which damages for non-performance of the contract are payable in the legal tender of the country. Moreover this bill of lading fixes the limitation of liability in "dollars" which evidently means American dollars.

THE RATE OF EXCHANGE.

Had the amount been payable in Chinese currency we would be disposed to adopt defendants' contention that the rate of exchange should be that of the date of the arrival of the ship which should have carried the cargo. For, while the subject has been one of conflicting decisions by the Courts, the later and better rule appears to be that the date of the breach ordinarily fixes the rate of exchange. In an exhaustive article on the subject in one of the leading American periodicals the author sums up his conclusions as follows:

The general rule, therefore, in converting the amount of foreign currency found due to the plaintiff into currency of the forum, should be to apply the rate of exchange prevailing at the date with reference to which the damages are ascertainable whether the action be in contract or in tort. Ordinarily this date will be the date of breach of a contract obligation, whether for a liquidated or unliquidated amount, or in the case of tort the date the cause of action arose, or, as to any particular item of damage, the date on which that item became liquidated."

The date of breach is adopted in a recent Federal case containing a critical review of the authorities and also by the New York Court of Appeals. The arrival of the ship and the delivery of the cargo on the wharf would constitute performance of the contract and failure to deliver at that time would constitute a breach; so that we are disposed to adopt the view of those witnesses who testified that such was the customary date.

But even if this were a contract providing for payment in other than the currency of the country in which the contract was made, we would still be unable to apply the rule contended for because we find in the record no evidence of the rate of exchange prevailing on that date. Defendants allege, as we have seen, that the rate was 100¼, but no witness so testified and their counsel offered no other evidence. The only testimony in the record as regards the rate of exchange is that given by plaintiff's witness, who says that "when plaintiff settled with its dealers I had already paid for the missing cargo, the rate was 58¾." As the shortage was discovered at the time of delivery and both parties would naturally wish the settlement to be effected as promptly as possible, we might infer that the date of settlement was not far from the date of the ship's arrival. But in any event the rate of 58¾ is the only one mentioned in the evidence and being once established, it must be presumed to have continued. It is, therefore, the only rate which we could apply if we were to adopt the rule contended for by the defendants.

It appears that defendants' payment of Tls. 1,704.07 was accepted "on account only" and plaintiff is accordingly entitled to recover the difference between that sum and the amount of the G.1,752.42 for which defendants expressly admit liability.

Defendants' motion for judgment "notwithstanding the evidence" and their request for special findings which are not based on the evidence or the law and do not comply with the court rules, are therefore, overruled and it is hereby considered and adjudged that plaintiff have and recover from defendants the sum of dollars 1,752.42 United States rency, less the sum of Tls. 1,704.07, (to be credited at the proved exchange rate of 58¾) together with the costs of this action.

JEWELLERY OR JUNK?

Remarkable Document Alleged to Be Receipt for Valuables in U. S. Court Case

Before Judge Lobingier at the U.S. Court on Monday, the hearing was resumed of the action brought by Euly Greenfield to recover G.$5,500 worth of jewellery from Lucille Slegman, to who it is alleged, plaintiff gave the jewellery to sell for her as her agent. Evidence was called with regard to an exhibit, which plaintiff alleges is a bona fide receipt, but which defendant says is a forgery. The document read: "20/9/20. Received a lot of junk valued at about G.$5,000, Lucille Slegman (gold rings, precious stones, jades, bangles, pins, pearls, etc.)."

Mr. Mortimer C. Cooke (for defendant), who said he had three years' experience as a signature expert with the Park Union Bank and the Asia Banking Corporation and had examined at least 500,000 signatures, stated that he would question the signature Slegman on the receipt

SILVER.

The London market has been steady with an advancing tendency during the week Thursday's prices being 1/16d. higher for ready, and 7/16d. higher for forward delivery as compared with last week's when the quotation was 33½d. spot and 32⅞d. forward as against the present price 33 13/16d. ready and 33 5/16d. forward. Buying orders are being sent from Shanghai, Japanese banks being reported as buyers. The price of silver in America on Thursday was 63 13/16 small business done. Stocks of Sycee have declined Tls. 4 lakhs on the week but stocks of dollars have improved $12 lakhs. Dollars continue to be shipped in large quantities to the north and Manchuria. The Mints will close down to-day or to-morrow for at least one month.

EXCHANGE.

Business has been quiet during the week. A fair amount of export paper came on the market earlier in the week, but the supply appears to have dried up. The closing rate for T.T. selling last Friday was 3/3 1/16d. which remained unchanged till Tuesday, when rates opened at T.T. selling 3/3⅜d. There was a further rise on Wednesday to T.T. 3/4d. which was the opening rate yesterday morning, but banks finding a fair demand and no suitable cover the rate dropped shortly after the opening to T.T. 3/3⅜d. at which level the market is steady. G.$ T.T. is quoted at 70 for cash, 4 m/s L/C is quoted 3/4⅜d. January, and 4 m/s L/C G$72 January. The New York/London cross rate is 422½.

LONDON BULLION

Samuel Montagu & Co.'s Report

Reporting on the London bullion market on December 12 Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 5th instant, was £126,044,760, as compared with £125,945,270 on the previous Wednesday.

Fairly substantial supplies of gold came on offer this week, the bulk of which will be absorbed by the United States of America, as Indian and Continental requirements were only moderate.

We hear from Bombay that the bullion market there was very excited over the announcement of the Government sales of gold, and that there was strong opposition on the part of the Indian Chamber and the Bullion Merchants' Associations to the conversion of gold to sterling securities, notwithstanding the cogent reasons which actuate the action of the Government.

The Transvaal gold output for November, 1923, amounted to 780,639 fine ounces, as compared with 793,842 fine ounces for October, 1923, and 764,476 fine ounces for November, 1922.

GOLD IN AMERICA.

The American Mining Congress Bulletin thus deals with the import and currency use of gold in the United States of America:—"The Department (? of Commerce) reports that there seems little possibility of a renewal of a heavy inflow of gold. While our gold surplus will eventually flow outward, it says there is no very active world demand for gold, and that there are advantages for Europeans keeping their gold balances in the United States. Effort may be made at the coming session of Congress to repeal the Act of 1918 regarding bank reserves. This matter has been presented informally to the Congressional Commission investigating the Federal Reserve Bank system, but it is understood that it has not been favourably received. The 1918 Act was passed to permit credit inflation during the war, but there is sentiment to the effect that the act should now be repealed, which would permit of banks holding more reserve in bullion or specie than of Federal Reserve notes."

SILVER.

Again the market has remained fairly steady. The clearance of supplies involved by the large shipment last week to the East naturally rendered it rather difficult to cover bear transactions falling due, even though orders from India have not been much in evidence. Yesterday's sharp rise was an indication of a market depleted to a large extent of available stocks. Silver shipments are still being made on a large scale from San Francisco, whence consignments have left for China and are still on the way—amounting to 7,500,000 ounces—in addition to the very heavy shipments which have been despatched to Shanghai during the last month or so. In present conditions any marked improvement in the value of the pound sterling is bound to be reflected in a lower London price for silver.

AMERICAN INTERESTS.

The "Capital" of Calcutta thus refers to the proposed combination of silver mining interests in the Americas:—"It is, perhaps, not generally known that the first move in this direction of controlling the price of silver was made in Mexico, now the largest silver producing country in the world. In view of the continued fall in the price of silver, the Government of that country wanted to help the producers by forming a silver commission, the aim of which was clearly expressed by the following terms:—"It will be the object of this commission to help the silver producers, freeing them from the control of New York buyers, who through loans, it is declared, are able to force them to sell their silver under its market value. Besides granting loans to producers, the commission, which will be capitalized at 5,000,000 pesos will encourage silver producers and attempt to stabilize the market. It will be composed of two bankers, two miners and two representatives of the Ministry of Finance.' Recently the Financial Department of the Mexican Government suggested also to the banks that their reserves should consist of coins, specially of silver. This attitude of the Mexican Government encouraged the United States producers, the second largest in the world, to develop the plan of a silver export association, and in conference at Reno, practically all the American producers combined to make a common cause."

Mocatta and Goldsmid's Report

In their report of December 13 Messrs. Mocatta & Goldsmid state:—

Business has again not been very active during the past week, and the market has been sensitive to the orders received, the rate fluctuating between 33 7/16d. and 33d.

India has been a small buyer, and China has alternately bought and sold; there have been no offerings from America, as all spot supplies there are being eagerly bought up by China to arrive in Shanghai before their New Year.

In view of the scarcity of supplies no set-back of importance is to be looked for at present.

Gold.—There has been a better demand from India this week, and although the proportion of the arrivals which they have taken is still not large, they have also purchased gold from the Indian Government and for direct shipment from Durban. The price has varied between 94/9d. per ounce fine and 94/1d. per ounce.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Jan. 26.

This is practically the closing week of the Chinese buisiness year last piece goods auctions prior to China New Year have been held, and next week the Chinese will be employed in effecting their annual financial settlement. This is expected to go through satisfactorily, for with constantly rising values throughout the year most of the dealers have made money. The piece goods market has closed strong and the sentiment is on the whole optimistic.

Yarn and cotton have been under the influence of the New Year settlement and no special activity has been displayed. There is no news yet as to how many mills propose to close down for a prolonged period over the New Year.

In produce groundnuts seem to be the strongest article of export, but purchases of untanned goatskins at high prices have created much interest.

PIECE GOODS.

As was to be expected, the approach of the holidays has caused the volume of business in piece goods to diminish, but the year closes with a healthy outlook. What business has been passing has been largely on the part of speculators who, apparently anticipating higher prices when the holidays are over, have shown a certain eagerness to buy. It is understood that a few of the better known chops have been booked during the week, especially by those prepared to pay slightly over to-day's level of values.

As far as the auctions are concerned the demand for Italians has continued strong to the last sale, the market for Greys and Whites has again been largely in the hands of speculators. These have obviously hesitated to increase the value of chops which have soared very high during the past few months. For medium and lower quality Whites the tone continues strong. On the assumption that the better exchange ruling during the week with firmer forward rates and at one period a slightly easier tone in Manchester has enabled certain quantities of Greys and Whites to be booked by the trade, it may be expected that auction prices in the Spring may be influenced, but on the other hand it is doubtful whether stocks can arrive here in sufficient time to change the situation appreciably.

Woollens—The market for Woollens closes healthy. A little buying has taken place during the week, and deliveries have been better.

COOTTON AND YARN.

Chinese Cotton—The position so far as Chinese cotton is concened is practically unchanged since last week although in some respects the market is slightly easier. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange, however, there has been a rise in quotations, these being about 75 cents higher for January and between 40 and 50 cents higher for forward delivery. Yesterday morning's closing quotations on the Exchange were as follows:—January 47.30; February 47.35; March 47.35; April 47.35; May 47.30; June 47.40. Spot quotations:—Tungchow 47; Shanghai 45; Shensi 46; Hankow 43.

Yarn—Owing to the approach of China New Year no sales of yarn have been taking place. Prices remain steady, as is also the case with cloth, clearances of which have been good during the week. The position of most of the Chinese yarn dealers is understood to be satisfactory, but there is talk of a couple of concerns going into liquidation. On the other hand, it is believed that three or four new firms will make their appearance after the settlement. It will not be known until next week for how long certain of the mills will close by way of "holidays," but it is expected that some Chinese concerns may not re-open until a month after the New Year. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange the position of yarn is stronger, a rise of one tael being recorded for January although the forward months are unchanged. Yesterday morning's closing quotations were:—January 178; February 179.90; March 180.90; April 181; May 181; June 180.40.

American Cotton—After a rise American cotton declined through selling on the reaction theory as well as Wall Street selling. On Wednesday the Agricultural Bureau of the U. S. Government gave the ninth official forecast of the crop as 9,946,000 bales as against 9,808,000 bales in the eighth forecast. New York quotations are:—March 33.53; May 33.75; July 32.60; October 28.05; December 27.60; spot 33.80; highest March 34.15; lowest March 33.53. Liverpool quotations:—March 19.75; May 19.75; spot 19.75.

SILK.

The silk market has been dull during the week, with very little doing, and in certain silks some concessions might be obtainable. Most of the dealers seem to have fixed their financial settlements for the China New Year, and there is no pressure to sell, waiting for the developments after the holidays.

Tussah fil. best 1, 2 Tls. 800.

PRODUCE.

Adverse exchange rates have tended to hamper the negotiation of new business.

Sesamum Seed.—There is nothing of interest to report.

Groundnuts—A fairly steady demand is still in evidence. Home crushers apparently finding this article more suitable and priceworthy.

Hides—Both in America and Europe the markets are appreciably stronger.

Untanned Goatskins—A surprising feature of the opening of the season is the purchase of fair quantities by two or three operators at prices much above the parity of the current quotations in America.

Tobacco—There is a scarcity of stocks at present owing to large quantities having been absorbed by local factories. Prices are consequently high and this scarcity has forced European buyers to come into line.

General Produce—The markets are inactive.

Banque de France

Paris, Jan. 18.

The weekly statement of the Banque de France shows that during the last week individuals have paid into their current accounts more then Frs. 313,000,000 and the State has reimbursed Frs. 100,000,000 to the Bank. On the other hand, borrowers have repaid Frs. 49,391,000 on their loans on securities. These sums together largely explain the decrease of Frs. 494,000,000 in the note circulation. The "Temps" states that the Banque de France, the public and the State are thus making efforts to reduce the tension of the situation.—French Wireless through Reuter.

SERIOUS AFFRAY AT KAIYOSHA WHARF

Fatal Fight Between Firemen: Ship's Officers Severely Ill-treated

The story of a most serious fracas, which resulted in the death of a Chinese fireman and the sending of three others to hospital, on board the str. Paul Regendanz (lying at the Kaiyosha's Pootung Wharf) on Saturday morning at about 9.30 o'clock, was vividly described by the captain and the chief engineer to Mr. N. A. Allman (American Assessor) and Mr. Li Sieu-mei (Associate Chinese Magistrate) at the Mixed Court on Tuesday.

Seventeen Chinese, described as firemen, were charged "for that they; together with seven others not yet in custody, did unlawfully assault and beat the complainants, Captain Fuhrmann, First Officer Lexow, Second Officer Moltzau, Third Officer Haach, First Engineer Eggebrecht and Superintendent Engineer Munzel, thereby occasioning them bodily harm, on board the str. Paul Regendanz, whilst lying at the Kaiyosha Wharf, Pootung, Shanghai, at about 9.30 on January 19, 1924, contrary to Article 316 of the Chinese Provisional Criminal Code. The accused were Woo Keung-yoong (deceased), Yih Li-yuen, Oo Foh-nyen, Kuang Ah-yeu (No. 1 fireman)—the last-named three being still in hospital—Dzung Kyih-zung, Wong Ming-liang, Woo Zee-yoong, Tsang Ah-lai, Dzien Yoong-pau, Yue Z-kyung, Sung Zung-loong, Sung Tseu-yoong, Nyung Ah-ziang, Yah Yue, Kyung Da-hyung, Ting Ah-feng and Tsang Ding-mei.

THE CASE FOR THE PROSECUTION.

Mr. A. S. Allan represented the captain and the officers of the Paul Regendanz, Mr. L. K. Kentwell defended, and Deputy Superintendent W. C. Woodfield was present for the River Police. Chief Inspector J. E. Wheeler watched proceedings on behalf of the Municipal Police.

Chief Inspector Wheeler stated before the Court commenced with the hearing of the case, he would say for the benefit of the Magistrate that at the inquest a witness named Dzung Kyih-zung (the fifth accused at present before the Court) identified the body lying in the Public Mortuary as that of Woo Kyung-yoong (the first accused) whom he last saw alive at about 9.30 a.m. on Saturday last, January 19, after he had been shot aboard the str. Paul Regendanz. Dzung had stated that he had carried the deceased to the saloon. He (Chief Inspector Wheeler) would therefore ask that the inquest be adjourned pending the result of the present criminal case.

The Magistrate questioned Dzung, who admitted the facts given by Chief Inspector Wheeler. The inquest was thereupon adjourned and the criminal case was proceeded with.

EVIDENCE OF ARREST.

Joe Kittchok, a constable in the River Police, said that on Saturday morning at 9.30 o'clock, while on patrol duty, he noticed a ship on which were hoisted the police and hospital flags. He made for the scene and went aboard immediately, doing this against the tide in less than 15 minutes. Upon going aboard he saw the chief officer, who told him that there had been a fight between the old and new crews of firemen, that the engineers and officers were assaulted and wounded when they tried to interfere, and that the latter were obliged to use guns. Witness asked where the offenders were and was told by the chief officer that he had five men, of whom two were badly wounded, the other three of whom he had personally arrested. In compliance with witness's request, the five men were placed in his charge and he took them to the River Police hulk. Later on, at 11 a.m., two other men came back to the steamer and these also were arrested by the chief officer and handed over to him.

Deputy Superintendent Woodfield deprecating the charges of a Sunday newspaper that the River Police were late in reaching the scene, stated that the River Police had done extremely good work in view of the state of the tide, which was against them. At two o'clock in the afternoon on the day of the fray ten of the accused went aboard the River Police hulk and asked for permission to go to the Paul Regendanz and get their clothing. As witness had already received instructions from the American Assessor, he kept the men on board the hulk and sent for the captain and the officers. Upon the arrival of these gentlemen, accused were transferred to the Central Police Station, witness asking the Municipal Police to detain them. In all, 17 of the men were arrested, and these by the River Police, but seven were still at large.

Examined by Mr. Allan, witness stated that after sending the wounded men to hospital, he went to the Norwegian Consulate and asked the Vice-Consul to accompany him and to give him authority to take whatever action was necessary. The captain was a Norwegian, as were two of his men, the chief engineer and the other foreigners were all Germans, the accused were all Chinese, and the ship was flying the Panama flag, which came under the protection of the United States Consulate here. Witness therefore obtained warrants from the U. S. Consulate.

Cross-examined by Mr. Kentwell, witness stated that neither he nor the previous witness knew anything about the fighting personally, other than what they had been told. When they arrived, the fight was all over.

Mr. Allan opened the case for prosecution, and called Captain Fuhrmann, who said that the chief engineer came into his room with the No. 1 fireman of the new crew and complained that the old crew were stealing ship's parts, and that the old crew were complaining that they had been paid off after a few days' service, although they had signed on for six months. Witness suggested that he should go to the American Consulate with them and if they were in the right, they would receive all that was due them. If they were not, however, he would ask them not to cause any trouble.

"I was sitting down," said the captain, "when suddenly we heard an awful noise on deck and went down. The superintendent engineer, who was near the door, was there before me, but when I came out I saw the Chinese crowding the officers: the chief officer was lying on deck bleeding. All of the men were armed with iron crow-bars, pikes and so on, wrapped in canvas, evidently having made all preparations for the affair. I seized the bars from three of the men and managed to wrench them away. The superintendent engineer received a kick in the belly and could not come to Court this morning. I saw trouble and had to do my best to stop it. I told my officers to hoist the police and hospital flags and the Chinese retired. I tried to find out if they had any more bars in their possession, but when I saw the trouble was starting again and we had no chance against them, I went to my room, opened the safe and took out six revolvers. This took some time, because the safe is difficult to open. (Vehemently) I distributed the revolvers and told the officers to shoot if they were attacked. The chief officer struck one of the crew on the face, but I did not shoot as my revolver was out of order, so I had to use a file to strike.

"I heard shots fired, but could see nothing as everything was mixed up. Some men were lying on the floor, others ran away, and I put the head of the gang in irons and forced the others into the saloon."

Witness identified three of the men and stated that 14 or 15 were armed. He did not know about the impending trouble or its cause at the time, but was now sure that the first fight was one between the two crews, and the second one between the crews and the foreign officers. Accused were members of the old crew.

Mr. Kentwell (cross-examining): Did you ever have any trouble with the German crew you had. Witness: Yes. The German crew demanded heavier wages than they signed for, they created trouble and disturbances on board and they attacked me and several others. I took them aboard at Colombo (where I took over command), but at sea they demanded higher wages, as high as American seamen get. I protested, but promised them everything as I wanted to get the ship to Hongkong.

NO USE FOR REVOLVERS.

Counsel: Did you use revolvers?—No, I did not. When out at sea, the crew refused to do duty, the ship was let adrift and went 40 miles out of its course. I had no assistance from the crew, the officers or the engineers. I was more or less isolated, so I sent a radio to the commander of the Naval Yard at Manila for assistance. When we were nearing Hongkong I was knocked down by the German crew and sent to bed for three days. I was locked up until released by the Police. This set a very bad example to the Chinese.

Why did you not serve out revolvers? They were locked up. Besides I do not like to fire unless forced to. I have been to sea since 1890, but this is the first time I have had trouble with my crews.

Witness here repeated his story, stating that he had to step on the body of a man to wrench an iron bar from the hands of another man. He had no grudge against the old crew, nor had they any against him so far as he knew. He did not see the second officer fire and he certainly never fired himself. The crew had no revolvers. Witness did not get out the revolvers until the second fight.

CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE.

The chief engineer, Eggebrecht, (who appeared in Court with his head bandaged) said that he was a German and had joined the ship in Shanghai. He corroborated the captain's story and said that all of the men were armed with iron bars and files. He personally had told the new crew to come aboard and had ordered the old crew to leave. The two No. 1 firemen (the old and the new) started the fight and the others did not join in until the old No. 1 ordered them to take part. The old crew were all armed (their arms being hidden under their coats), but the new men were not. Witness tried to intervene but was hit six or seven times, after which he was rendered unconscious. He had blood all over his face which ran into his eyes. He was struck both on the head and about the body.

The case was adjourned until next day.

The Defence Opened

Proceedings were continued on Thursday morning.

Evidence for the prosecution was given by Second Office R. F. Moltzau and Third Officer O. Haach, these officers corroborating previous evidence for the prosecution.

Mr. Allan stated that another one of his witnesses, the chief officer, was still in hospital in a serious condition, hence he was unable to appear to give evidence.

CASE FOR THE DEFENCE.

Mr. MacDonald did not object to going on with the defence, allowing the complainants the right to call their witness when he had recovered. The accused, he said, all desired to give evidence, but he (counsel) would suggest that three or four of them be placed in the box. If any of the others had anything to add they might do so. He had four other witnesses of the affair to call.

The No. 1 of the old crew of firemen said that, on Friday last, the firemen had been ordered to remain on duty all night, which they did. On Saturday morning, some of the men had been ordered to go to bed, while the others remained. They had been given these orders by a man from the dock whom witness did not know. (This latter transpired to be Eggebrecht, the chief engineer. Eggebrecht, the chief engineer.) At 8.30 a.m., he said this man told him to get up and take his men out, saying: "We have finished with you and do not want you any more."

"DEFENDING OURSELVES."

Continuing, witness said that the captain told him to get out. He then went down on deck and there met the new crew and told them what had happened, urging them not to take his or his men's places and work until the matter was settled. Then, he told them, they could come to work. The new crew insisted, saying that they had been instructed by foreigners, whose order they would obey.

"The fight then started," said the No. 1, "and the chief officer and chief engineer, together with four other Germans and a couple of other hands, brought out crowbars and spikes and handed them to the new crew. With the assistance of these men, the new crowd licked us. We then picked up some files and snatched others from our opponents' hands and defended ourselves."

The second officer came out with a pistol and began to fire on us without any reason. Naturally we had to return this attack. There are a number of people who saw him shoot.

Witness said that after the fight was over, the police flag was hoisted and a number of the men decamped. He was seized by four foreigners, handcuffed and severely beaten with iron rods. After that the River police arrived and he was taken to the police Hulk. Witness stated that he and his men were treated very unfairly by the captain and the officers, the latter breaking their rice bowls and employing other men when they had been employed for a period of six months. They had their wives and families to look after.

Cross-examined by Mr. Allan, witness denied that the captain offered to take him ashore to the Consulate and company's offices. He simply had said, "Get out," and closed the door. He had no grudge against the captain or the officers, but simply asked to be sent back to Hongkong if the captain did not want him and his men for a six months' term. He admitted that the old crew started the fighting, and denied striking the foreigners until they came to the assistance of the new men and began to strike them and fire at them with pistols. Nobody was lying on the deck, Chinese or foreigners.

Witness said that he and his men had started the fight simply in order to try to stop the new crew from working until a settlement had been brought about.

Dzung Kyih-zung said that he had taken part in the fight, but did not strike the foreigners until they had fired and shot down one of his comrades. He was rubbing this wounded man and had asked the foreign officer to send for a doctor, but the latter refused, saying "Maskee." Soon afterwards he was taken into custody.

The case was adjourned until Tuesday morning next.

A Japanese seaman, of the str. Shanghai Maru, who was arrested with more than $400 worth of heroin in his possession, was sentenced at the Japanese Court on Wednesday to five days' imprisonment. It appeared from the evidence that he had safely got his contraband ashore, but was suspected of having it in his clothes, with the result that he was taken into custody. The drug was ordered to be confiscated.

EX-LABOUR LEADER CHARGED

Former President of the Seamen's Union on Bail from the Mixed Court

Described as a former President of the Seamen's Union, Dzung Bing-zung (Chen Ping-sung) was brought up at the Mixed Court on Wednesday charged with obtaining goods by means of false pretences by presenting native orders which he knew were worthless.

Det.-Sgt. Tinkler stated that two of the complainants went to Hongkew Police Station on the previous night and produced native bank orders for sums of money on the Teh Tah Native Bank, stating that these had been signed and presented to them by accused. The notes were payable ten days after signature. Complainants had told him that they had been to the native bank and were unable to collect, being told that accused had no money there. They also told him that they had reason to believe that accused would abscond.

Witness then accompanied them to accused's shop, where there were a number of creditors. He understood that some creditors had been at the store all the afternoon and that a number of civil actions were pending against accused. Upon reaching the shop and questioning accused, the latter admitted having made out the cheques, but stated that he hoped to receive some money in a few days. He did not intend to defraud anybody. He admitted also that he had no money in the bank either at the time of making the cheques or afterwards.

Zung Teh-ming stated that accused had given him the native bank order, which was payable 10 days after signature. Witness went to the native bank. He was told that accused formerly had an account there, but had no more money in the bank at the time of signing or afterwards.

The Magistrate (Mr. Li) asked witness who had written several characters on the back of the order asking him to call in a few days' time, to which witness answered, "The bank."

Have you been back to the bank since?—No, because I was told that he had no money there.

At this stage, Chief-Insp. Wheeler asked for a week's remand to allow the police to make further inquiries.

This application was granted and accused was ordered to furnish bail in the sum of $600.

THE family of the late Gen. Hsu Kuo-liang, former Director of the Shanghai and Woosung Constabulary, have addressed a petition to the Military and Civil Governors of Kiangsu and to the Military Governor of Shanghai, requesting them to hasten the trial of Li Dah-sung, found guilty of the murder at the Mixed Court three months ago, and now detained by Gen. Ho at Lunghua.

COL. Lu Yung-chien, acting Director of the Shanghai and Woosung Constabulary, has issued a proclamation forbidding the practice of extortion. The order states that a band of loafers and unemployed men have organized themselves into what is known as the "San-shih-liu-tang" (the Thirty-six Societies). When stores hold their opening ceremonies and when there are weddings, members of this organization approach those concerned and demand money from them, thus starting trouble and proving themselves to be a menace to the peace and safety of Shanghai. Hence, the police are ordered to keep a sharp look-out for these men and to arrest them when found. "You," the proclamation adds, addressing the members of the organization, "are hereby ordered to give up this life and lead one that is honourable and respectable."

CORRESPONDENCE

BANDITS, THE PEOPLE'S DEFIANCE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I would recommend any of your readers who have not read Mr. Sokolsky's article on the subject of China's Banditry in your to-day's issue, to read it, as an excellent supplement to the series Mr. Rodney Gilbert has been contributing to your columns during the last three weeks. With all deference to Mr. Rodney Gilbert, I would say he has not treated in his usual comprehensive way, this Chinese way of getting rid of an oppressive government, sanctioned by long traditions.

Mr. Sokolsky looks forward to the future for a proof of the truth of the assertion, that the rising of bandits in China is the people's way of showing their dissatisfaction and defiance to the reigning government. But if he refers to the records in our history, he will meet there sufficient evidences for this proof. With the exceptions where change of dynasties took place as a result of foreign conquest, it will be found in all instances that a general rising of the people was invariably heralded by small bands of marauders, apparently without any higher motive for their existence than that of making a living by it. The leniency some of the more honest and energetic officials have shown to the bandits may also be traced to their inner consciousness of this historical fact. At any rate, those of us who would read this significance in the banditry now rampant in the country, are not inventing, but only repeating the wisdom of experience.

In your last Saturday's Leader on "China and Its Treaties," you said that before foreigners could co-operate with the Chinese in redressing their wrongs, the Chinese must give them a lead to show in what way they could co-operate. This wide-spread brigandage in China is the only practical method we have in our power to make our sense of wrongs felt by those in authority. It would be, any way, a mistaken idea to think that this brigandage can be stopped by any temporarizing with the very elements which have forced the people to this crude way of expression.

We Chinese should all be grateful to Mr. Rodney Gilbert, and Mr. Sokolsky for their searching articles, and to you for your yesterday's leader, in which you expose the arbitrary powers invested by the new constitution in the President and the Parliament and the immunity afforded therein to the President from criminal charges. Articles like these shed a great deal of light on what otherwise must appear an inexplicable muddle to your general readers. Only when a problem is intelligently understood, can it be finally solved. Therefore, thanks to you all.

I am, etc.,
K. C. K.

Shanghai, Jan. 22, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Friends, who know my identity, have, since the appearance of my last letter in your columns, bestowed on me the complimentary sobriquet of "Bandit chief." Honestly, I have no insurmountable objection to being so styled. I prefer it by far to that of "President," "Tuchun," or any other honorific official title. There would be a reflexion on my character, while the name of "Bandit chief" only questions the soundness of my judgment.

But while I do not mind the nickname, I do not like the gentle insinuation behind it. These friends evidently thought I was trying to make a virtue of the necessity which I claimed to have driven the Chinese people, without means, training and organization, to adopt this form of righting their grievances. Really, nothing could be further from my motive.

If China were in the same isolated position as before the time of foreign intercourse, it might be possible that, after long periods of waste and bloodshed, a concentrated force would be evolved out of the present dispersed energy, with sufficient strength to subvert the ruling government. But all Chinese problems have now an international importance. If the Chinese people had the philosophy to wait for this primitive adjustment of their national affairs, would the foreigners share in their optimism and see their compatriots murdered, their possessions looted and their trade injured, without advocating drastic measures for their immediate suppression?

Besides, the important educational centres in this country are permeated with Bolshevistic propaganda and teaching. When the last Soviet Representative came to China, a deputation of the University professors in Peking, in a speech of welcome, expressed their willingness to learn from him the new lore of social revolution since the political revolution of 1911 had turned out a failure. And these same professors practically determine the course of education and the books to be used in the schools all over China. One sees a disquieting prospect in the day when the students should take it into their heads to transmit some of the doctrines they have imbibed through this channel from these professors, to the bandits.

But a more imminent danger is in the ignorance and lack of definite objective of these bandits. They are at the mercy of any unscrupulous and astute politician or official, and can be easily worked upon in such a way as to ascribe all their wrongs and hardships to the presence and interference of foreigners and foreign interests.

In the face of these considerations, it is hardly likely that I would conscientiously recommend that this brigandage in China should be left to take its natural course without check and hindrance. What I do advocate is this; that it can never be suppressed and may, on the contrary, be aggravated so long as we have a military force which wrecks people's homes, takes away their means of livelihood and drives them to the highway; so long as we have an official class who will waste a few hundred million dollars every year in maintaining gangs of riff-raff coolie soldiers, rather than spend one tenth of it on famine-relief measures, shifting the whole burden of them on the resources of foreign and native philanthropy; and so long as we have a code of laws stringent only to those who are too poor to buy, and too feeble to coerce, justice.

As Burke says, the people have no interest in disorder. If they do wrong, it is their error and not crime. Mr. Rodney Gilbert has made a splendid start for the discussion of how this error of the people may be stopped from taking greater dimensions. Will not other students and thinkers on the question of China's misfortune follow up the discussion, so important to the future welfare of all residing in the country?

I am, etc.,

CHINA'S SALT AND ITS REVENUE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—There are very few, if any, other nations who would take crude dirty salt for their diet. China is most probably the only one. Yet Chinese eat more salt than any other race of people and like salt better than sugar.

Now China's salt is controlled and monopolized by a few avaricious merchants, who with their divided territories granted hundreds of years ago, control the sole supply of this human necessity. Besides charging high prices for salt, they mix it with a great amount of dirt. In some districts the percentage of salt runs as low as only 40. People have to pay exorbitant prices for salt which would be prohibited by most nations to feed animals. This is probably one reason why disease in China is so prevailing and the death rate of Chinese people is so high.

Fortunately, a few Chinese Salt Refineries have been organized, but the output of those refineries is small, that very few people have enjoyed the privilege of getting clean pure salt to help their health. The refined salt, when analysed, is of the same quality as the table salt of western nations, yet the price is practically the same as that of the crude salt on the market.

In nations of strong financial position, the tax on human necessities is always exempted, but conditions are bad in China, and governmental expenditures are mostly dependent on such. The Salt revenue is one of the most important items. Through the improving and revision of regulations continuously, the salt revenue increases every year. But there is still a big leakage of tax which cannot be checked unless the salt is produced by organized companies and be taxed right on the spot of its manufacture, as the refined salt is.

Through years of experience, the writer is of the opinion that, if the salt Gabelle would encourage the people to establish more salt refineries, or make the crude salt merchants start compulsory refineries, the following advantages would follow. First; the salt revenue of the whole country will be known more definitely. At the present time, the crude salt is taxed upon its arrival at the point of destination for sale; the system of organization of those merchants is unknown, while from the producing region, much salt is shipped out and sold to different districts without being taxed.

With salt refineries, the case is different. These companies are organized on a modern system and the output of the factories is definitely known. Government tax every picul of salt produced, so there is no possibility that any salt refined could get away from tax.

Secondly; No discount or smuggling could exist. When the crude salt is being taxed, the merchants always demand a certain percentage of allowance as brine, but for refined salt the tax is paid in full, 100 per cent. As the crude salt is not taxed in the producing region, big amounts are smuggled to different districts without paying any tax. Both the brine allowance and smuggling mean a loss to the national salt revenue.

Thirdly; Recently, owing to the non-unification of China, much of the salt revenue is detained by provincial governors. If salt refineries are encouraged, this undesirable situation will be avoided, on account of the tax on the refined salt being prepaid and duly received by the central government. Fourthly; public health be improved, the culture of mental, moral and physical development will be more progressive; this will give great benefit to society.

THE PAPER HUNT CLUB

Mr. J. H. Liddell Wins his Pink in a Dead Heat with Mr. Sparke after Long Ride

Excellent weather conditions favoured the hunt on Saturday afternoon and the going was splendid, for the dust which has been such an unwelcome feature of recent hunts was conspicuously absent, thanks to the rain which had fallen earlier in the week. The paper was laid by the Master (Mr. G. Grayrigge) and the trail began at a village north of Rubicon Road, three-quarters of a mile from the junction with Hungjao Road. The hunt was remarkable in that it resulted in a dead heat for first place between Mr. J. H. Liddell and Mr. N. L. Sparke, the former winning his pink after five years of strenuous endavour.

On the finishing run, Messrs. Liddell and Sparke, on Spark Plub and Wild Chance, respectively, made a ding-dong race of it and, passing the flags neck and neck, were adjudged joint winners. They were followed closely by Mr. A. J. P. Heard, on Letchfield, and Mr. R. Moon, on Wee Mac. There were no heavy weights on the card, which read as follows:—

*1.—Mr. J. H. Liddell, on Spark Plug.
*1.—Mr. N. L. Sparke, on Wild Chance.
3.—Mr. A. J. P. Heard, on Letchfield.
4.—Mr. R. Moon, on Wee Mac.
5.—Mr. R. L. Read, on Wild Thyme.
6.—Mr. P. Stang-Lund, on Oldsmobile.

*Dead heat.

THE LADIES' HUNT

The third hunt for ladies this season took place on Sunday afternoon, 20 ladies going for the run after an address by the Master. The start was at Mr. Beith's Bungalow on Hungjao Road and the first jump was at Dallas's Grave. A great deal of misfortune occurred during the run, which went over part of the country beyond Rubicon Creek, the exact route not being ascertainable. Several ladies were on the ground at the same time on Pinkerton's Line and one or two of them had rather far to walk. One lady fell four times in all, but quite enjoyed herself.

There was an unpleasant incident at the Long Village, where Chinese waited with buckets of filth which they threw at the ladies as they rode past and several had their habits ruined. Mrs. Rodger endeavoured to remonstrate and was nearly pulled from the saddle. Fortunately, Mr. Rodger came up in time to intervene and saved her from further annoyance, but he had a worse time himself.

The hunt was won by Miss Billy Coutts, who has been successful in all the three ladies' hunts this season. Mrs. Fitzgerald won the prize for the first lady to finish on side-saddle. The finishing jump was at Marah, close to where the hunt started. It is understood that in future the ladies will have their own hunting organization, the hunts so far this season having been held with the permission and assistance of the Stewards of the Paper Hunt Club.

Alan Charlton beat Arne Borg, the Swedish champion, by 15 yards in an 880 yards swimming race to-day. Charlton's time was 10 min. 51⅘ secs., a world's record.

A RECORD BILLIARD BREAK

155 by Mr. C. W. Porter

Playing at the Shanghai Club on Wednesday evening Mr. C. W. Porter made a break of 155 at billiards. This is the highest amateur break recorded for the Shanghai Club, and is believed to be the highest for the whole of Shanghai. The previous best was that of Mr. R. C. K. Johnson who scored 154.

Mr. Porter played a beautiful all-round game while compiling the break, and there was never the suspicion of a fluke in the course of it. When it came to his final stroke he had the balls in hand, but to get position he had to try for a six shot into the middle pocket. He just failed, and concluded at 155.

Saturday afternoon's football was not of a particularly interesting order. Amongst the seniors the Interport trial game was the only one, and though the play, as indicated by the score, was level, it was of a very moderate order. In the Second League, the Navy again had to scratch, owing to their inability to get a team together, and of the other four games two were runaway victories.

INTERNATIONAL RUGBY

England Beat Wales by 17 to 9 after Fierce Struggle

London, Jan. 19.

The international rugby football match between England and Wales at Swansea to-day resulted in a win for England by 17 points to 9.

The weather was showery. Forty thousand people witnessed the game.

England pressed at the outset but after a quarter of an hour Tom Jones scored for Wales, Rees failing to convert. Soon afterwards Catcheside scored a try for England which was not converted. A minute later Jacob got over for England and Chantrill converted. Just before the interval Locke ran half the length of the field for a brilliant unconverted try. The score at half-time was England 11 Wales 3.

A minute after the resumption Catcheside scored another unconverted try for England. The Welshmen rallied and there followed desperate forward tussles in front of the English goal. The players went over in a heap but a try was disallowed. Johnson then gave Wales two tries in quick succession and towards the end Jacob added another unconverted try for England, who won a comfortable and deserved victory by 17 points to nine.—Reuter.

Welch (directors), and Mr. G. J. L. Stewart, representing Messrs. Wattie & Co. Ld., secretaries. Addressing the meeting the Chairman said:—

MEI LAN-FONG, China's leading actor, and his equally celebrated troupe, left for Peking on Monday night after a successful season here.

Thursday of last week, the 25th anniversary of his coming to China, was the occasion of a warm demonstration of regard by the Rev. C. E. Darwent's parishioners at Union Church, Tientsin. Mr E. W. Carter, who presided over the large gathering, the minister was surprised to find assembled on entering the church, said they were celebrating a unique event. In paying a tribute to Mr. Darwent's ministry, he said he had heard him Sunday after Sunday. Though it was only during the last few years that Tientsin had got to know him, the more they knew of him, the more they had a friend. Happily paraphrasing the stalwart captain, Miles Standish, the speaker described Mr. Darwent as "little of stature but great of heart, magnanimous, courtly, courageous." Mr. Hugh Mackenzie read a congratulatory letter from the Rev. Arthur Smith. Dr. J. C. Ferguson, Adviser to the Chinese Government, Mrs. G. W. Clarke and the Rev. A. King also spoke. Mr. Darwent, to whom a presentation was made, responded characteristically with a sincere, compelling speech.

CLUBS AND SOCIETIES

COLUMBIA COUNTRY CLUB'S NEW HOME

The New Premises in Great Western Road: Swimming Pool and 28 Tennis Courts: The Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Columbia Country Club was held in the club house in Route Doumer last Friday. Mr. L. Everett (President) presided, supported by the Board of Governors. The President's report having been read, the new officers were elected for the ensuing year as follows:—Mr. L. Everett (President), Mr. E. H. Staber, (Vice-President), Mr. R. T. Bryan, JR., (hon. secretary) and Mr. R. D. Bunn (hon. treasurer). With the addition of Mr. W. M. Morris, the Board of Governors is the same as last year and includes Messrs. George Brush, R. Buchan, R. D. Bunn, F.J. Courtney J. Eichwald, B. C. Haile, H. B. Lane, W. M. Morris, H. E. Page, E. H. Staber, J. S. Potter, E. W. Torrey.

The balloting Committee will be composed of these gentlemen and eight more as follows (new members):—Messrs. L. R. Andrews, J. J. Sheridan, W. R. Rice, A. Basset, W. Wilson, A. F. Kimball, C. Crow and E. B. Gregory. It will be noted that on the balloting committee, three British gentlemen are now serving, Messrs. R. Buchan, L. R. Andrews and J. J. Sheridan.

A large number of by-laws adopted in the past year by the Board of Governors was ratified by the meeting and included regulations on membership, initiation fees and dues. House rules, library, mah jongg, bridge and tennis by-laws, as well as an incorporation providing for the addition of two further members to the Board, making now 14 in that body.

In his annual report Mr. Everett, said that he was of the opinion that the club had had a most prosperous year and that a good sound basis assured them continued progress, while the establishment of the office of a paid secretary and the appointment of a new steward had served to bring the executives into closer touch with the various departments. The club had had a very successful financial year as the financial statement showed a net profit of $13,000.

The introduction of some bachelor quarters into the house made a more satisfactory arrangement and both guests and committee were highly pleased with the system. Not only was the new library introduced with great success, but it had had a steady growth and development throughout the year which had been furthered by a fund consisting of all the odd change from the Mah Jongg games and a thousand dollars was recently authorized to be spent. The growth of membership had been steady and a net increase showed.

With reference to the new Club House the speaker said, "I am sure that your next interest is as to when we can occupy the new premises, and I would announce that in addition to the filling, fencing and draining contracts which are well under execution, the contract has been let for the first unit which comprises the gymnasium, bowling alley, locker room and swimming pool, this contract to give us occupancy of this unit by July 1. The gymnasium and bowling alley will be fitted up temporarily for use as general quarters until the whole is completed. It is hoped that the specifications and requisite funds will permit the completion of the whole by the early part of 1925."

The club's new home will be an elegant and comfortable structure. As was outlined in Mr. Burns address last Sunday at the cutting of the first sod, it is the policy of the club to secure for members and friends a place of peace and tranquillity and a home-like atmosphere such as is not always encountered in China.

Working along these lines the Committee have secured this new piece of property consisting of 43 mow in Great Western Road for their new home. Situated within 20 minutes of the Bund by motor and a short distance from the present club house and within what is bound to be a popular residential district, the establishment will meet the needs of a large part of the membership, and its position will cause little inconvenience to those who reside the farthest away, thanks to the work done on Great Western Road. In order that site to the south of the throughfare, acquired a strip of land 60 ft. in width and 175 yards long and constructed a private roadway into the heart of the grounds. This may also be used as a parking space in addition to a large area reserved for that purpose to the side.

After consultation with the architects it was decided by those in charge to adopt the "Mission" style of building not only because of its simplicity and adaptibility to the climate and ease of construction (for Chinese labour), but also to conform with the policy of having everything restful for the family.

FACILITIES FOR SPORT.

Provision is being made in the new structure to give members the advantages which at present can only be obtained by belonging to several clubs. One of the most attractive features is an open-air swimming tank, 42 ft. wide and 100 ft. long, which is to be surrounded by a Spanish pergola. The space to one end will be allotted to spectators. The usual slides, diving boards and apparatus will be added. The refrigeration plant of the organization is to be diverted in winter-time to the pool and an artificial rink for ice skating will be the result. Further sporting activities will be housed in the gymnasium, 48 ft. by 80 ft. this being large enough for basketball. Adjacent to this room are four bowling alleys, while three squash courts to the rear, enclosed and roofed over, will give devotees an opportunity during the winter months and inclement weather to keep in trim.

The larger portion of the lawn has been designed to accommodate tennis players and courts of mud, asphalt and turf have been set out—20 double and eight singles. Additional lawns have been set aside for croquet, lawn bowls and clock golf and the minor sports which appeal to the individual. Surrounding these activities will be erected decorative devices drawn out by the landscape expert.

INDOOR RECREATIONS.

As a country club must also cater to the social wants of its members, the committee has arranged for space for cards, dancing, eating and drinking. A dining room, 32 ft. by 56 ft., bar and grill, 26 ft. by 42 ft. and a ball room nearly 100 feet long by half that distance in width, the clubhouse should not be on the road itself, the Committee after purchasing the principal are situated in the east end of the main building. Edging round the actual dancing surface is to be a raised circle 10 ft. in width to accommodate the tables at which those participating may be seated. The area will be large enough to allow 250 couples to dance in comfort. Towards the west are the card room and mah jongg room. The portion of the building which will appeal mostly to those desiring to lunch and lounge is the loggia, facing to the south, open in summer and glass-enclosed in winter while on a lower level is a much larger terrace directly facing the tennis courts.

— SOUTH ELEVATION —

This Sketch Shows what the New Columbia Country Club Will Look Like from Outside

The entire building is to be constructed of good quality local brick, lined with hollow bricks to allow for the dampness of the atmosphere of some seasons, and will be faced with stucco cement, rough trowelled. Foundations of reinforced concrete will form the basis for the structure while the roof will be of red Spanish tile.

THE CLUB'S ACTIVITIES.

The social activities of the club extend throughout the entire year, beginning with the New Year, Day "At Home" to the New Year's Eve party, 365 days later. March finds the Red Dog party in full swing, April has its Easter festivities for the children and a spring ball for the grown-ups, while July Fourth is celebrated in fitting style. The big Jinx party in October, the Hallowen Party (children) and October 31, the Thanksgiving dance and the Christmas party for the children are notable events, and every Sunday afternoon a tea dance takes place.

To meet the cost of building debentures to the extent of Tls. 350,000 have been issued which the finance committee report well subscribed. The club with a membership of over 400 is international in its scope, its members being of the different nationalities represented in Shanghai.

HARDING MEMORIAL

American Association to Raise Funds in China

The annual meeting of the American Association was held at the American Court on Thursday evening. Dr. W. T. Findley presided, supported by Messrs. George Brush, J. S. Potter, Leonard Everett, Major Bassett, and Captain Eisler.

With the adoption of the President's report and the treasurer's statement of accounts, the meeting proceeded to elect officers. Messrs. H. A. Wiley, E. C. Stocker, George Brush, Stirling Fessenden, E. L. McCloskey, J. B. Powell, J. Eichwald, Dr. W. T. Findley, Dr. C. S. Lincoln, Major Bassett and Capt. Eisler were chosen as the new Executive committee. From these Major Bassett was elected President in succession to Dr. W. T. Findley (retiring), Mr. E. C. Stocker Vice-President, Mr. J. B. Powell secretary and Mr. J. Eichwald treasurer.

A communication from the Harding Memorial Association of which the President of the United States, Mr. Calvin Coolidge, is honorary President and the Cabinet members are on the Executive Committee, was read. It invited Americans of China to associate themselves with the movement, Dr. Findley brought to the notice of the meeting the suggestion of Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General, that the Association should assist the scheme. It was resolved that the new committee should investigate the conditions of the Memorial. The Harding Association desire to raise funds amounting to G$2,000,000, of which $1,250,000 is to be devoted towards the actual construction of the monument and purchase and improvement of the Harding home, while the remaining three-eighths, $250,000, is to be invested and the interest applied to the upkeep. Should there be any surplus, it is to endow a chair in some American University.

A vote of thanks to the retiring committee was adopted and the assembly adjourned.

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

BRITISH LABOUR'S RISE TO POWER

Government's Defeat on Amendment to Address: Mr. Baldwins' Resignation: Mr. Ramsay Macdonald Summoned by the King to Take over the Premiership

PERSONNEL OF THE NEW CABINET

London, Jan. 18.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, Labour Member for Derby, resumed the debate on the Address from the Throne in the House of Commons to-day before a thin House. He said that the Labour Party did not regret and were not going to apologize for their association with the Internationalists. Labour was resolved to spare no efforts to give the world and civilization a common organization which would bring people together and enable then to understand each other. The more they understood each other, the more difficult it would be for other people to plunge them into war. (Loud Labour cheers.) He declared that British prestige had never been lowered so much as it was to-day.

The speaker declared that a situation was being created in Central Europe necessitating expenditure on our own defence. No party was entitled to claim party advantages out of danger to the nation. The Ministerialists asked how Labour was going to deal with France and by implication suggested that it would be by war, but it was not real friendship to pretend that all was well when it was not. No nation paid greater tribute to another nation paid greater tribute to anotner nation than we did to France, but that did not mean that, if we believed France was heading for disaster, we ought not to say so. God forbid that any word should be construed as meaning that Labour was anxious to break with France or to talk about war, but it was not surprising that France did not believe the Government and treated them with contempt in view of their vacillating policy.

Mr. Thomas described Mr. Asquith's speech yesterday as one of the greatest in his life.

The statements that the first steps of the Labour Government would be to corrupt the Army, the Navy and the police, to abolish marriage and to introduce free love, he declared, were rubbish. Decent men and women of all classes were anxious to remedy social conditions.

Mr. Thomas added that the Labour Party had graduated in a very hard school. They would make mistakes, but experience of the responsibility of government would good for them and in spite of difficulties, they would work with the single desire to make the country worthy of the citizens who showed patriotism in the time of the greatest trial.

The Dominions' Offer.

Mr. Neville Chamberlain said that the Government had plainly told France that they would not answer for the continuance of friendly relations if she continued to occupy the Ruhr. All desired to avoid war but it might come to a point when the nation had to choose whether to carry out its views by force or to take the other alternative. Mr. Thomas was opposed to war in any circumstances and it did not lie with him to accuse the Government of not taking action which would inevitably lead to war.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer begged the Labour Party not to dismiss hastily the Imperial preference proposals out of any pedantic theory. He emphasized the enormous importance of Dominion trade, instancing how preference had stimulated trade in Australia. He hoped that the Labour Government would treat the proposals with all the sympathy possible. Mr. Chamberlain predicted that the Labour Party would find it impossible to abolish all food taxes, and if they could be satisfied that the proposals were expedient, they might well, without departing from their principles, re-arrange the food duties so as to enable them to be carried out. The proposals were in the nature of a moral gesture and the direction in which the gesture was made might affect very seriously the future attitude of the Dominions to Britain, when a generation or two hence the Dominions were among the greatest nations of the earth. The action of the British Government to-day might determine the value they would be to the Empire and the help they would be to the people of Britain. (Cheers.)

A Chameleon Flag.

Mr. Chamberlain commended to the Liberals the letter from Mr. Churchill declaring that a Socialist Government would be a national misfortune. He said that the red flag appeared to resemble the chameleon in changing its shade according to its environment. If they always had speeches like Mr. Thomas's, he would call it only a very faded pink (laughter), but a powerful section of the Labour Party, which made up in vociferousness what it lacked in respect for the rules of the House, was determined to exercise a powerful influence on the fortunes of the Party. A prominent member of this section had recently declared that it would be political madness to leave the impression that the Labour movement did not menace the vested interests (loud Labour cheers) and it would be betrayal of those who voted for them unless they destroyed Liberalism.

The speaker added that the Imperial preference proposals would not affect the question of unemployment now, but they would have a profound effect on trade and employment in Britain in the future, perhaps the not very distant future (cheers).

The Duchess of Atholl (Conservative member for Kinross) in her maiden speech supported the Government's proposals to develop juvenile unemployment centres, to protect children born out of wedlock, to amend the law relating to maintenance and separation orders and to call an agricultural conference. She declared that if the Liberals elected with the help of Conservative votes were true to their election pledges, they would save their Party the odium of turning out the Government.

Mr. George Lambert (Liberal Member for South Molton) emphasized the necessity for continuity in foreign affairs. He said that he would vote for the amendment without enthusiasm, reserving liberty of judgement.

The debate was then adjourned until Monday.—Reuter.

Mr. Churchill's Gloom

London, Jan. 18.

Few members of the House of Commons yesterday evening were aware of the issue of Mr. Churchill's manifesto which caused a flutter in political circles when the contents became known.

Sympathizers with Mr. Churchill's point of view expressed the opinion that his eleventh hour intervention was too late to affect the Liberal wavereres as the Liberal members generally were undoubtedly delighted with Mr. Asquith's speech and the Labour Members still anticipate an Opposition majority of at least 70 on Monday night.

The Whips of all parties have warned members not to leave London for the week-end as the railway strike, which is now regarded as inevitable, may prevent them from returning in time for the division.

In connexion with Mr. Winston Churchill's letter it is noteworthy that the Parliamentary Industrial Group have given notice of an amendment to the Address saying that, as an overwhelming majority of the members returned are definitely against Socialism, it would be a violation of the expressed will of the electorate to place in power a Government which manifestly cannot on its own declared policy effectively carry on the administration.

The Defeat of the Government

London, Jan. 21.

The Government was defeated in the House of Commons tonight. The Labour amendment to the Address from the Throne was adopted by 328 votes to 256.

After the division had been taken on the Labour amendment, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald requested the House to adopt the Address forthwith and let the House meet the new Government. Amid strong Conservative protest the amended Address was carried by 328 votes to 251.

The Inquest on the Government.

Cries of "Speech," at question-time in the House of Commons to-day when ardent Members pressed supplementaries marked the impatience of the Members to reach the final stages of the decisive debate.

The debate was resumed by Sir John Simon, Liberal Member for Spen Valley, Yorkshire, who described the proceedings as not the execution of the Government, but the inquest on them. When referring to the Labour Party, Sir John Simon was exhorted by the Ministerialists to call them the Socialist Party. He did so amid loud back bench Labour cheers. He continued that he would support liberal measures and would oppose unliberal measures proposed by Labour, declaring that the verdict of the elections showed that the country was as firmly opposed to Socialism as to Protection, but the vast majority favoured the new spirit of Government.

Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Conservative Member for West Birmingham, said that Sir John Simon's speech reminded him of the dog who "to gain his private ends went mad and bit a man" (loud laughter). Nobody would be in the Socialist camp sooner than Sir John Simon when that camp became popular (Ministerial cheers). Mr. Chamberlain predicted that Mr. Asquith would be the last Liberal Prime Minister and that the country at the next election would vote Labour or Conservative.

Miss Margaret Bondfield, Labour Member for Northampton, in her maiden speech said that the arguments of Sir John Simon and Mr. Austen Chamberlain had little to do with the paramount question of unemployment and proceeded to make an attack on the Government for failing to deal with it.

Naval Construction.

Mr. L. C. M. S. Amery, the First Lord of the Admiralty, dealt with the Government's special programme of naval construction with a view to relieving unemployment in the shipbuilding centres. The Government proposed to lay down immediately eight light-cruisers of 10,000 tons, armed with 8-inch guns, three of which would be constructed in the Royal Naval Dockyards and the remainder would be submitted for tender. In addition to this special unemployment programme, this year's programme would include three submarines and one submarine depot-ship, two destroyers and one destroyer depot-ship, two gunboats for special service in the Persian Gulf, one aircraft-carrier and one mine-layer, all of which were urgently needed. The whole programme would employ 32,000 men and would involve a special addition of £5,000,000 to the Navy estimates. Mr. Amery was confident that the present Opposition were not indifferent to the needs of naval security and the urgent situation in the shipbuilding yards, but would give the proposals prompt and sympathetic consideration when Parliament reassembled.

The Premier's Speech.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Stanley Baldwin, who was loudly cheered by the Ministerialists, termed Mr. Asquith an obstetric physician about to bring a child into the world and saying, "If this child is not such as I fancy when it is born, I shall smother it" (Ministerial laughter and cheers). He declared that the Liberal Party only got its numbers at the last election by telling the voters to keep out the Socialist Party.

Mr. Baldwin reviewed the Government's achievements, like the settlement of the American debt, the maintenance of the entente with Turkey and the practical settlement of the Tangier question and the boot-legging difficulties with the United States, leaving relations with the United States better than they had ever been. He said that the Government would leave their successors no outstanding problems (Opposition cries of "Oh!") except reparations, which were looking more hopeful, and unemployment.

A Clean Conscience.

The responsibility for the policy with which the Party went to the country, Mr. Baldwin said was his alone. He had not been driven into it by someone else, but the decision to go to the coutry was the decision of the united Government. He had a clear conscience.

The Prime Minister declared that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald would not be able to build up a Socialist State on the shifting sands of one-fifth of the national vote. The Conservatives looked to the future confidently and without apprehension, standing on three basic principles, namely, maintenance of the institutions of the Empire, preservation and development of the Empire, and improvement of the conditions of our own people. He asserted that the future lay between the Labour Party and the Conservatives.

Referring to the decision to go to the country, Mr. Baldwin said that he had for himself no regrets but many for those who fell in the fight.

Liberals and Socialism.

Captain F. E. Guest, Liberal Member for East Dorset, intimated that he would support the Labour amendment in order to condemn Protection, but wanted other amendments taken in order to give the Liberals an opportunity of recording anti-Socialist views, otherwise he would vote against the closure.

Commander J. M. Kenworthy, Independent Liberal Member for Central Hull, declared that the Conservatives during the past five years had disgraced the British name in Ireland, India and Russia.

The galleries were packed for the concluding stage of the debate, the spectators including the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York.

Labour Leader's Address.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald said that the House was going to take a step which he believed with all his heart and soul would be marked in the history of the country for good. He appealed to the House, if the amendment were decisively carried, then to adopt the Address forthwith and let the House meet the new Government. The remainder of the sentence was drowned by Ministerial and some Liberal cries of "No!"

Resuming Mr. Macdonald said that a Labour Government might create many fears, but what would be still worse would be action which would degrade the House, bring it to a deadlock, produce a sort of stalemate and thus show their incapacity to govern. He claimed that the chief reason for the foreign position improving was the prospect of a change of Government. One of the great continental diplomatists had said to him: "Since you had an election in England the ice, which was getting thicker round about us, is beginning to break."

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald thereupon moved the closure, which was carried without a division. The House then divided and adopted the Labour amendment to the Address from the Throne by 328 votes to 256.

Amended Address Adopted.

Immediately after the division, which was taken in the keenest excitement, Mr. Macdonald claimed the main question, namely, that the Address be put. The Speaker accepted this, which is allowable, thus wiping out the other amendments. Amid strong Conservative protests the amended Address was then carried by 328 votes to 251.

On Mr. Stanley Baldwin's motion the House adjourned until to-morrow.

There were wild Labour cheers as Mr. Ramsay Macdonald left the chamber. Mr. Stanley Baldwin was also rousingly cheered by his supporters as he departed.

The following Liberals voted for the Government: Sir Beddoe Rees (South Bristol), Sir Thomas Robinson (Stretford, Lancs.), Sir Ellis Griffith (Anglesey), Mr. C. H. Duckworth (—), Mr. Hugh Edwards (Accrington), Mr. John Leng Sturrock (Montrose Burghs), Mr. H. Hogbin (North Battersea), Mr. W. A. Jenkins (Brecon & Radnershire), Mr. W. E. Robinson (? Chelmsford), and Colonel Abraham England (Heywood & Radcliffe).

The Premier Resigns.

London, Jan. 22.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin has resigned.

Mr. Macdonald's Responsibility.

Later.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald is forming a Cabinet.

"It is not a moment for elation, it is a terrible responsibility. Fail or succeed, no Government responsible for affairs will more honestly try to serve."

These were the words in which Mr. Ramsay Macdonald replied to congratulations on the result of the division and judging by the present attitude of the Liberals as holders of the balance of power, Mr. Macdonald is embarking on an historic adventure assisted by much sympathy and goodwill.—Reuter.

MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS

Water Supply.

Further correspondence with the Waterworks Company in continuation of that published in the issues of the Gazette of April 18 and June 21, 1923:—

Shanghai, Dec. 12, 1923.

SIR,—I am directed to refer to your letter of May 31, 1923, my reply of June 5, to the visit of the Treasurer and Comptroller and the Commissioner of Public Works on September 4, and to the interview between the Chairman of the Council and the Chairman of this Company on November 19. At this last interview the Chairman of the Council, on hearing that the Company had received a telegram containing the opinion of Sir John Simon, K.C., requested that the Council be informed of this in writing.

Sir John Simon, K.C.'s opinion is that the Company cannot be compelled to accept a price based on maintainable income.

The attitude of my Directors in adhering to their demand for a price based on the value of the Company's assets, as more fully set forth in my letter of April 13, 1923, is the result of advice obtained from experts in England; they desire me to express a hope that the Council will appreciate that they cannot do otherwise than follow this advice including as it does the opinion of Sir John Simon, K.C., stated above.

In addition, my Directors' attention has been drawn to a considerable discussion in the United States of America on the valuation of public undertakings of this nature to determine the price payable for the same by Municipal and other similar Authorities, which discussion culminated in a decision of the Supreme Court this year that the value of any such undertaking is properly measured by the cost of its reproduction, or, more elaborately, the cost of construction to-day at prevailing prices of materials and labour.

I am directed to draw the Council's especial attention to the fact that the Company has been required to expend large capital sums to maintain and improve the efficiency of the service, that during the same period the cost of supply and the consumption per head have very largely increased, but that the Company has enjoyed no commensurate increase in revenue during the same period.

I am further directed to urge my Directors' desire for an expression of the Council's views as soon as possible, to point out that the negotiations for a new Agreement began a considerable time ago, and that the Company is only reasonable in asking for some early decision, either that the undertaking is to be purchased, or that a new Agreement is to be made.

Council Chamber.
Shanghai, December 17, 1923.

SIR,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 12, on the subject of the method of computing the purchase price in the event of the municipalization of the Waterworks undertaking, and informing the Council of the opinion of Sir John Simon, K.C.

In reply, I have to inform you that this matter is receiving the Council's careful attention and that I shall address you further on the subject in due course.

F. B. PITCAIRN, Esq.,
Engineer-in-Chief & Manager,
Shanghai Waterworks Co., Ld.

Council Chamber,
Shanghai, January 18, 1924.

SIR,—With reference to your letter of December 12, 1923, and to former correspondence relative to the purchase of your Company by the Municipality, I am now directed to inform you that for some time past the Treasurer and Comptroller has been engaged on an investigation of your Company's accounts with a view to preparing for the Council's consideration a counter offer to that contained in your letter of April 13 last.

At the conference which took place on September 4 between officials representing the Company and the Council, a verbal intimation was given of the Council's attitude on the question of the "basis of valuation," which was to the effect that the price to be paid should be based on an agreed number of years' purchase of the net maintainable profits. The tenor of your letter now under reply, however, suggests that any attempt to discuss the matter on comprehensive lines would at the present time be valueless by reason of the fundamental difference of opinion which exists on the basis of valuation to be taken. If it is possible to reach an agreement on this all-important principle, the Council is of opinion that the remaining points at issue could be reconciled without any great difficulty by local Chartered Accountants acting for either side, thus avoiding what may possibly develop into a long and costly arbitration. To enable your Directors to appreciate more fully the grounds upon which the Council's attitude is based, extracts are appended from a Joint Opinion from the Hon. Sir Malcolm McNaghten, K.C., and Mr. S. B. J. Merlin —

"It is to be observed that, although the contract provides that in the event of the Company and the Council failing to agree as to the price to be paid, such price should be fixed by arbitration, it does not prescribe on what basis the arbitrators or umpire (as the case may be) should ascertain and fix the price. All that the contract does is to prescribe the subject matter of the sale namely, "the Company's business and undertaking" and "all the lands, buildings, plant, machinery and effects belonging to the Company.

Since, however, the subject matter of the sale is an undertaking for the public supply of water to the inhabitants of Shanghai, we think that the arbitrators or umpire ought to value the property, the subject matter of the sale, on that basis and on no other; that is to say, they ought to have regard to the profits which the property will earn as an undertaking for the public supply of water and disregard the value which any particular parts of the property might have if used for some other purpose.

For the purpose of ascertaining what profits the undertaking will earn in the future the arbitrators or umpire should ascertain the profits which the undertaking earns at the present time; and they should consider whether those profits will in the future be maintained, or increased, or diminished. Having ascertained what in their opinion is likely to be the net maintainable trading profit of the Company year by year, the arbitrators or umpire should award so many years purchase of that net maintainable profit.

The dividends paid by the Company in recent years are, in our opinion, irrelevant on the question of price. These dividends may have been much less than the profits earned by the Company in recent years; on the other hand they may have been provided out of profits accumulated in past years and considerably exceed the profits actually earned in the years for which such dividends were paid.

So also the appreciation of the capital assets such as land and the pumping plant is, in our opinion, irrelevant. So far as the land is concerned it must be treated as appropriated for the purpose of the water undertaking. The fact, if it be a fact, that the land could be sold for a high price for some other purpose than that of a water undertaking, ought, in our opinion, to be entirely disregarded. With regard to the pumping plant, we apprehend that this cannot have appreciated in value, except in the sense that the cost of erecting such plant to-day would be greater than the cost that was actually incurred in erecting it. But this fact is also, in our opinion, irrelevant. The question which the arbitrators or umpire have got to consider is not what it would cost to-day to buy the land and erect the plant, but what is the value to-day of the land and the plant for the purposes of a water undertaking. That must, as we think, depend upon what profit can be derived from the undertaking as a whole, though the condition of the works, including the pumping plant, must, of course, be one of the factors which have to be taken into consideration in estimating the capacity of the undertaking to continue to earn profits.

There are also various other matters which will have to be taken into consideration in arriving at the price payable, e.g.,

The debenture or mortgage debt of the Company may or may not be taken over by the Council; if it is taken over by the Council, then the annual interest, which has been payable upon that debt hitherto, would have to be deducted from the net maintainable trading profit for the purpose of fixing the price.

The Company cannot make any claim for compensation in respect of the fact that the undertaking is acquired compulsorily since the Council have an absolute right to purchase under Clause 9 of the Agreement of 1905, and the considerationn for such compulsory purchase has already passed to the Company."

I am directed to express the hope that the detailed support of the Council's views outlined above will influence your Directors to reconsider their attitude on the question of basis of valuation, and on this assumption I am authorized to state that the Council is prepared (subject to the Ratepayers' approval to be sought at the next Annual Meeting) to purchase the Company's business and undertaking, and all the land, buildings, plant, machinery and effects belonging to the Company at a price to be arrived at on the basis of 15.3846 years' purchase of the profits earned during the year 1922. Your Directors can rest assured that should this basis be agreed upon, the resulting negotiations will be conducted by the Council's representatives in as conciliatory a spirit as possible, having due regard to the conflicting interests involved. The actual amount of the purchase price cannot be definitely ascertained at the present stage as it will depend very largely on the question as to whether or not the Council is prepared to take over the debenture obligations of the Company.

I am also directed to refer to Resolution 6 passed at the Annual Meeting held on April 18, 1923, and to inform you that the Council is advised that the effect of passing this Resolution, with the proviso contained in Sub-section 3, is that the Council cannot exercise the powers already definitely entrusted to them except with the authority of a Special Meeting at which a quorum is present. Under the circumstances it may be necessary to lay the whole matter de novo before the Ratepayers at the next Annual Meeting.

In order to meet the views of your Directors as to an early expression of the Council's views on the matter of purchase, it is now suggested that this letter be accepted by your Directors as an intimation of the Council's intention to purchase, subject to confirmation at the next meeting of Ratepayers.

Police Report for December.

Serious Crime.—This includes the murder of a pawnshop assistant who was shot at and fatally wounded on December 5 by armed robbers at a shop on Woosung Road where he was employed; the attempted murder of a member of the Police Reserve who, whilst functioning with a search party on the night of December 12, was fired at and seriously wounded by one of the members of an armed gang which was attempting to cross the Fokien Road Bridge in a motor car; the murder of a Chinese who was fatally stabbed in an alleyway off Tongshan Road on December 25 during a quarrel arising out of an affair connected with a woman; and the murder of a coolie who was fatally wounded by a bullet fired by armed robbers in the Harbin Road District on December 31. Six arrests were made in the first mentioned instance, two in the second, four in the third and six in the last. All the accused were under remand at the end of the month. One man arrested on a charge of murder committed in Kompo district in October last was handed over to the Chinese authorities concerned.

The case against the foreigner charged with the attempted murder of a Chinese female on November 3 was concluded on December 11 when he was acquitted. One further arrest was made, in addition to the man already in custody, in connexion with the murder of a Chinese in a field off Kwenming Road on November 11. In this case one of the accused was sent to the Court of the Military Governor while the other received a sentence of two years' imprisonment. The case of attempted murder in the Wayside District on November 19, mention of which was made in my report for November, was concluded during the month when the four accused were sentenced to imprisonment. A Cantonese who has been sought for since the end of 1919 in connexion with a murder perpetrated in a teashop on December 12, 1919 was captured during the month, tried and sentenced to 12 years' imprisonment.

Robbery.—Ten reports of armed robbery from dwelling houses and shops and two of armed highway robbery were received during the month. In three instances where an alarm was given shots were fired by the robbers, resulting in the wounding of four persons, two of whom subsequently died. In connexion with the foregoing and reports of armed robberies occurring prior to December 1, sixteen persons in possession of four pistols and two revolvers were arrested. Two were sentenced to imprisonment and the remaining fourteen were under remand at the end of the month. Three men arrested for armed robbery in territory under Chinese jurisdiction were handed over to the Chinese authorities concerned, and five men apprehended in connexion with an armed robbery committed in the French Concession were handed over to the French Police. Six of the sixteen persons mentioned in my report for November as being under remand charged with armed robbery, were dealt with, two being remitted to the Court of the Military Governor, three to imprisonment and one to expulsion from the Settlement. The trial of the remaining ten had not concluded at the end of the month.

Property Stolen.—527 reports made under this heading during the month represent a total estimated loss of $115,662 and include 28 cases of burglary, 12 of house-breaking, 7 of godown-breaking and 8 of shop and office-breaking. Successful investigation was made in 168 cases, resulting in the recovery of property valued at $53,151, in addition to which recoveries to the extent of $12,155 were made in connexion with reports received prior to December 1.

Trafficking in Firearms.—Three foreigners arrested in connexion with the traffic in firearms were sentenced respectively to 18 months, 6 months and 20 days' imprisonment. Eighteen pistols and revolvers were seized together with 595 rounds of ammunition. Eight automatic pistols were seized by a Police search party in the Settlement on December 10. The carriers made good their escape.

Hwo Wei Lottery.—Eleven Chinese were charged in connexion with the promotion of Hwo Wei lotteries and sentences ranging from a month's imprisonment to a fine of $3.00 were inflicted.

Crime beyond Settlement Limits.—Three cases of murder and fourteen of robbery and piracy were reported during the month as having occurred in territory under Chinese jurisdiction in the neighbourhood of Shanghai. In four instances the occupants of houses or boats plundered received bullet or knife wounds. Three boatmen were carried off and held to ransom.

Executions.—Eight Chinese, six of whom had been found guilty of armed robbery within the Settlement limits and two of the murder of a Chinese female in the Wayside District, were executed at Lunghua in the presence of representatives of the Municipal Police. Eight prisoners, found guilty of armed robbery, attempted murder and piracy outside Settlement limits, were also executed during the month, six at Lunghua and two outside the West Gate of Paoshan City.

Fire Brigade Report for December.

The total number of calls received was 47, of which 40 were genuine fires, 36 (including one chimney fire) occurring within the Settlement and four outside. The remaining seven were either false alarms, or else not traced.

The damage on assessed property within the Settlement was estimated at Tls. 11,000 (Foreign Tls. 250: Chinese Tls. 10,750), whilst the property at risk was estimated at Tls. 2,512,000 (Foreign Tls. 1,860,000: Chinese Tls. 652,000).

Six lives were lost at fires during the month, and nine other persons (including three firemen) were injured.

Three houses were destroyed and 34 were damaged.

In dealing with these calls Brigade machines travelled approximately 408 miles. Hose used 25,260 feet, and time occupied approximately 175 hours.

December 6, 7.54 a.m., 11 55 Newchwang Road.—These premises were practically gutted on arrival. A girl aged eight years lost her life, and four other persons and three firemen were injured.

December 18, 4.08 p.m. LC 4 SeZang Line—off Canton Road.—Four bodies were found in the debris and a woman was badly burnt about the face and body.

Loss (1923).—The total loss during the year on buildings and contents within the Settlement is estimated at Tls. 253,513 (Foreign Tls. 69,715: Chinese Tls. 183,798) being an increase of Tls. 18,210 on the previous year. It is interesting to note that excluding the abnormal fire at North Soochow Road in 1921, the average loss for the past four years has been under 2¾ lakhs, i.e., Tls. 267,630.

Risk (1923).—The total property at risk on buildings and contents within the Settlement is estimated at Tls. 18,542,665 (Foreign Tls. 14,943,980; Chinese Tls. 3,598,685) being an increase of Tls. 493,965 on the figures of the previous year. A risk is considered as Foreign when the building comes under the Foreign Building Rules, and Chinese when under the Chinese Building Rules.

A communiqué states that at a meeting of the Cabinet to-day which lasted two hours, preliminary decisions were taken with regard to a number of questions, including unemployment, housing, agriculture and those affecting ex-Service men, with a view to effecting immediate improvements in the administration and working out the details of the policy to be announced when Parliament meets.

Later.

The Stock Exchange opened to-day with a confident disposition. The Cabinet appointments are viewed favourably. Gilt-edged securities were one half per cent. above yesterday's closing rates. Consols were quoted at 55½ and War Loan at 99⅝. Railways were a half to one point higher, and industrials also participated in the rise.

Small Committees for Domestic Phases of Policy.

Jan. 24.

An interesting innovation in the Cabinet system was agreed to at yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet in the shape of a plan for small committees to deal with separate phases in the domestic policy and to prepare schemes and decisions for the full Cabinet to enable the latter to devote its time to a broad policy.

Mr. William Leach has been appointed Under-Secretary of State for Air.—Reuter.

India's Approval.

Bombay, Jan. 24.

The constitution of the British Ministry is generally acclaimed as a able, well-qualified combination.

The "Hindu," a Madras daily paper, publishes a message from Mr. Ramsay Macdonald pleading for peace and goodwill between India and Great Britain and declaring that "no party in Britain can be moved by threats of force or measures designed to bring government to a standstill, and if any Indian sections imagine such events will sadly disappoint them."—Reuter.

Washington, Jan. 23.

Mr Victor Berger, the only Socialist Member of Congress, has cabled congratulations and best wishes to Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, adding: "To-day Americanism and Capitalism have come to mean the same thing. The working class of Britain is the hope of the white race and the world. Therefore, down with the hellish Versailles Treaty." — Reuter's American Service.

GOVERNMENT REPLIES TO MANY QUERIES

Empire Wireless: Singapore Base: White Crews for British Steamers

London, Jan. 21.

In the House of Commons to-day Sir Laming Worthington Evans, the Postmaster-General, stated that no agreement had been reached between the Post Office and Marconi's with regard to Empire wireless.

Mr. L. C. M. S. Amery, the First Lord of the Admiralty, told Captain A. U. H. Hudson, Conservative Member for East Islington, that the Admiralty did not propose to abandon the Singapore scheme.

Replying to Lieut.-Comdr. A. Cooper Rawson, Conservative Member for Brighton, who asked whether regulations could be adopted for manning passenger ships with white crews, thereby contributing to the greater safety and comfort of passengers and to the relief of unemployment in Britain, Lord Wolmer, Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, said that the exclusion of Lascars, who were mainly British subjects, from British ships would require legislation and there were very serious objections to any such proposal.

Anglo-Persian Oil Shares.

Mr. Neville Chamberlain, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, informed Commander Kenworthy that the proposal for the sale of the Government's shares in the Anglo-Persian Oil Company had first been made by the Managing Director of the Burma Oil Company, but it was understood that the Shell and the Royal Dutch Companies were also interested.

Replying to further questions, Mr. Neville Chamberlain said that the Anglo-Persian Board had not been officially consulted. The Government did not feel able to take a final decision as it had intended to refer the matter to a Cabinet committee prior to a decision. The two Government directors of the Anglo-Persian Oil Company had been consulted, but it would not be in the public interest to disclose exactly what their advice was, because the question was undecided and might be decided by some Government in the future, who would desire to have the information given to them.

Asked who conducted the negotiations on behalf of the Government, Mr. Chamberlain said that the proposals had originally been submitted to the President of the Board of Trade. He himself, the First Lord of the Admiralty and the Secretary of State for War had also been consulted.—Reuter.

THE RAILWAY STRIKE IN BRITAIN

Mr. Thomas's Call to Men Not to Repudiate Representatives' Undertakings

London, Jan. 18.

An important circular issued by the National Union of Railwaymen this morning, signed by Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Parliamentary Secretary, and Mr. C. T. Cramp, the Industrial Secretary, declares that it is incumbent upon all members of the Union to realize that the honour and prestige of the Union are at stake.

Any member ceasing work is a blackleg to the signature of his accredited representatives and a traitor to the decision of the special general meeting.

The circular appeals to all members to be loyal to the Union and to the great causes of trade-unionism and collective bargaining.

Jan. 19.

Mr. J. Bromley, the secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, has issued a statement declaring that he is astounded by the circular of Mr. J. H. Thomas cabled yesterday. Publicity is thus given to the disagreement between the railway leaders, which threatens to nullify the earnest efforts of intermediaries who, under the auspices of the General Council of the Trade Union Congress, conducted negotiations throughout yesterday in an effort to effect a setltement. The negotiations were adjourned until to-day.

Twenty thousand drivers belonging to the national Union of Railwaymen will remain at work thus enabling essential skeleton services to be carried on. The air transport companies are mobilizing every machine.

The Ministry of Transport is planning food conveyance by road, but the steadiness of prices in the commodity markets, especially coal, bespeak prevailing confidence that the strike will be short-lived.

Miss Margaret Bondfield, M.P., presided at the meeting this morning of the Council of the Trade Union Congress and the three railway unions. The fact that the secretary of the Council, Mr. J. Bromley, arrived late is interpreted optimistically. It is understood that he interviewed the railway managers with a view to settlement.—Reuter.

Further Discussion.

London, Jan. 20.

A day of crowded industrial conferences ended at 2.30 this morning when it was announced that the delegates of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen had refused to agree to tentative proposals which had been drawn up as a result of an earlier meeting of the General Council of the Trade Union Congress and the railway managers, but there still remains a possibility of another meeting with the managers to-day. After the fruitless meeting of the delegates of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen with the General Council yesterday morning, the latter immediately requested a meeting with the managers and suggested temporary postponement of the wages award. The meeting adjourned to-day to enable the railwaymen to discuss the proposals separately with the aforementioned result.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 20.

It transpires that the representatives of the Trades Union Congress Council and the executive of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen sat separately and never held a joint conference, although Mr. Fred Bramley, the secretary of the Council, consulted the executive and reported the efforts of the Council to meet the grievances of the Union.

The Council representatives, while awaiting the call from the Union, sang songs led by Mr. Ben Tillett, M.P. They appeared very disappointed at the failure of their efforts at mediation and at the decision of the executive to proceed with the strike.

Mr. Bramley stated that, as far as the Council were concerned, there would be no further conference with the railway managers to-day. The Union's decision had rendered this unnecessary.

Mr. John Bromley, the secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, said that the position was exactly the same as before the intervention of the Trades Union Congress Council, whose efforts had been rendered abortive by the attitude of the railway managers. The arrangements for the strike would stand. He had every confidence in the loyalty of the men to fight it out to a successful issue.

Railway Managers' Terms.

Later.

The railway managers have issued a statement that the terms which were agreed on between the Trades Union Congress and the managers yesterday, but which were rejected by the Locomotive Engineers' Society, were as follows:—

Provided the strike notices are withdrawn, the companies give the assurance that an immediate meeting with the two unions concerned will be held with a view to considering and alleviating any hardships affecting individuals or groups of individuals arising out of the findings of the Railway Wages Board, which after discussion both sides are satisfied should be so alleviated. Any agreement reached would be applied immediately. The companies also give the assurance that there will be no dismissals arising out of the application of the decisions.

Labour circles now regard the railway strike as inevitable. It is learned that the decision of the executive of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen was due to the refusal of the railway companies to offer putting the Wages Award into operation.

There is considerable uncertainty with regard to the attitude of the members of the National Union of Railwaymen. It is believed that many of them will support the Locomotive Engineers' Society.

A Strike Inevitable.

Later.

Determination to adhere to their decision to go on strike marked the crowded final meeting of the London members of the Locomotive Engineers' Society, held at the South London Palace this evening.

The secretary of the Society, Mr. John Bromley, was warmly received and greeted with cries of "Honest John" and "We are going to strike back!"

Mr. Bromley declared that he had received a message threatening to shoot him if the strike occurred, but such a threat would not prevent their protest. The general managers of the railways seemed to believe only in their pound of flesh. He contended that the men paid on a mileage basis would lose 20 per cent. under the award and said that the Society were determined to stop the never-ending slide down into pre-war conditions.

The speaker continued that they would not object to any Government running mails and carrying food for the people, but any Government, even a Labour Government, which helped to run private railways during the strike, would be black-legging. They would stop nine-tenths of the passenger and goods trains.

Mr. Bromley asserted that the companies had been told that the Union were bluffing, but at mid-night they would have the surprise of their lives. He intended to go calmly to bed knowing that their men would cease work at midnight from one end of the country to the other.

The Strike Started

Jan. 21.

The headquarters of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen shortly after mid-night announced that the strike had officially started and that the men had obeyed the call throughout the country.

Later.

Early morning reports throughout the country confirm the claim of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen that its members are striking solidly. Few cases are also reported of men of the National Union of Railwaymen striking in sympathy. Thus members of both unions have made it a common cause at Warrington while a number of N.U.R. men at Crewe are acting as strike pickets.

The most optimistic strike timetable is that of the London, Midland and Scottish Railway, which is promising 60 per cent. of the normal service, but the extent of N.U.R. defection on which everything depends cannot be determined until later in the day.

Stoppage of Traffic Only Partial.

Later.

While Paddington is congested with derelict mainline trains, the situation in the other London termini is not so bad. All officials at Waterloo stated this morning that two or three mainline trains had been run since midnight and that the suburban trains were arriving very well. St. Pancras is comparatively busy. An official at Euston optimistically declared that they could get passengers on their system anywhere to-day with luck.

It is understood that the railways, buses and trams were crowded to capacity this morning, while thousands of motor-cars were employed to bring workers to the city.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 21.

Mr. John Bromley, the secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, stated this morning that the response to the strike call had exceeded expectations, and asserted that the position would strengthen in the next two or three days. He claimed that locomotive engineers belonging to the National Union of Railwaymen were in a great many cases already with the strikers.

Contrary to Mr. Bromley's claim, it is stated at the offices of the railway managers that a vast majority of drivers and firemen belonging to the National Union of Railwaymen are remaining loyal to the Union. A few men here and there have struck in sympatly with Mr. Bromley's Union, but most of the N. U. R. men reported for work this morning and more are expected this evening.

Reports from various parts of the country this afternoon show that the railway stoppage is only partial. Substantial services are being maintained. Boat trains are running from Victoria and from Waterloo.

Inter-Union strife in connexion with the strike is further exemplified by the fact that the N. U. R. executive have telegraphed to the secretaries of their branches throughout the country declaring that Mr. Bromley's speech last night "clearly shows that efforts are being made to prejudice the position of our Union for propaganda purposes and to disintegrate our organization. It is therefore imperative that our men should be solid in their loyalty to their organization."—Reuter.

The Labour Government's Dilemma.

London, Jan 22.

All eyes are watching to see how the new Government will deal with the strike which, although in no way complete, seems more serious than the statements of the companies before the strike foreshadowed. The National Union men are generally carrying on. Little inconvenience to travellers is reported in a number of centres, notably in Birmingham and Manchester, and mails are everywhere being handled expeditiously, but N.U.R. defections in several districts have upset the temporary schedules and have caused severe disorganization, especially in the South of England. Liverpool Street and Waterloo stations closed down early yesterday evening. An indication of erratic running is provided by the Scottish express which arrived six hours late. Up to the present the Ministry of Transport considers it unnecessary to provide food transport, although plans for it have been prepared.—Reuter.

4,000 Welsh Colliers out of Work

London, Jan. 22.

The chief feature of the railway strike continues to be the conflict between the leaders of the National Union of Railwaymen and of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen.

Mr. Thomas Cramp, the industrial secretary of the N. U. R., in a statement this morning declared that the position was even better than yesterday, dwelling on the loyalty of the members of his union, in spite of the offen

An Audience with the King.

Later.

The Baldwin Cabinet held its final meeting this morning, after which the Prime Minister motored to Buckingham Palace and tendered his resignation. He advised his Majesty to summon Mr. Ramsay Macdonald.

Mr. Macdonald arrived at the Palace at noon, accompanied by Messrs. Clynes and Thomas and other Labour leaders. The audience lasted for an hour and Mr. Macdonald was sworn in as a Privy Councillor.

The party analysis of yesterday evening's division on the Labour amendment to the Address was as follows:—

Eight women voted, five against and three for the Government.

The House Adjourned

Later.

The House of Commons was crowded to-day. Mr. J. H. Thomas provided a novelty in dress for Labour members, appearing in a morning coat. Mr. Ramsay Macdonald entered later, attired in a frock coat which is the regulation dress for an audience at Buckingham Palace. He took a seat on the front Opposition bench and was greeted with Labour cheers.

Major M. Mackenzie Wood (Liberal Member for Central Aberdeenshire) in a successful ballot on a private Member's motion, announced that he would raise on the Naval estimates the question of the Singapore base.

Mr. Baldwin, moving an adjournment until February 12, announced that the resignation of the Government had been accepted. He said that the date of reassembly had been chosen to suit Mr. Ramsay Macdonald.

Mr. P. A. Harris (Liberal Member for South West Bethnal Green) protested against three weeks' adjournment with a railway strike.

The House agreed to the adjournment.

Mr. Macdonald did not speak. Major G. M. Kindersley, Unionist Member for Hitchin, during the ballot on motions, gave notice that on the Civil Service estimates he would move a resolution on the subject of Empire development.

Several Ministerialists gave notice that they would call attention to the position of the Air Force.

A meeting of Liberal Members of Parliament to-day passed a unanimous resolution, declaring, inter alia, their steadfast determination to resist every attempt to destroy private enterprise and to establish socialization of industry.

Chamber of Commerce Support.

Later.

At a meeting of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce at Birmingham, Sir Arthur Balfour, the President, said that as long as the Labour Government was not controlled by Communists, the Chambers of Commerce would give it all possible aid in its undertakings for the benefit of the country. We were on the verge of an improvement in trade. The Chambers would oppose nationalization. He believed that a capital levy would be disastrous.

Sir Arthur Balfour understood that the coming budget would show a million or two surplus, but economy was necessary to relieve taxation.

The meeting by a large majority passed a resolution urging on the Government the desirability of a Bill carrying out the economic resolutions of the Imperial Conference, and also passed a resolution in favour of an Imperial penny post.

Another resolution urged the Government to approach the French and Italian Governments with regard to their debts to Britain.

A Banker's Views.

Baron Colwyn, the Chairman, speaking at the annual meeting of the Lancashire & Yorkshire Bank, said that, if the bankers were called upon to give their advice and assistance to the new Government, they would render any help in their power whatever their personal political views. The nation was greater than party.

Cabinet Surprises.

Jan. 23.

The announcement of the constitution of the Macdonald Cabinet came quite unexpectedly. It was made within two hours of the Prime Minister obtaining the Royal approval of the appointments. This Mr. Ramsay Macdonald sought in the course of a second visit to Buckingham Palace during the day, when he kissed hands on his appointment. Most of the appointments as already had been announced, but very great surprise has been caused by the inclusion of Viscount Chelmsford as First Lord of the Admiralty, which had been kept a dead secret. His name had not even been mentioned among the possibles.

A Sympathetic Reception.

On the whole the personnel of the first Labour Government meets with a remarkably sympathetic reception. Even the extreme Conservative organs, noteworthily including the Rothermere and Beaverbrook anti-Socialist press, give a blessing to the new experiment. A large degree of its popularity is undoubtedly due to the diverse and well-balanced nature of the Ministry, which comprises trade unionists and intelligentsia in somewhat equal proportions and a good leavening of experienced administrators, while except for Mr. John Wheatley, the President of the Ministry of Health, who is probably a hostage for the good behaviour of the Clyde extremists, the complexion of the Ministry is decidedly moderate.

Surprise is expressed at the non-inclusion of women, but amends for this will probably be found in the list of Under Secretaries. Mr. Macdonald's list necessitates at least one new peerage in conformity with the law requiring that at least one Secretary of State shall sit in the House of Lords. This will probably be Sir Sydney Olivier, the Secretary of State for India.

The Singapore Dockyard.

The "Daily Mail," in a leading article which is unusually sympathetic towards Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, urges the Government to adopt the strictest military economies and incidentally to cut out the Singapore dockyard. "There is no reason with sane diplomacy why Britain should fear a quarrel with her old friends, the Japanese."—Reuter.

French Press Comment.

Paris, Jan. 22.

The newspapers of the Right foresee nothing but ill from the advent of a Socialist Government in Britain, but the papers of the Left and Extreme Left hail the event as a triumph for democracy and the opening of a new era. The Centre and Governmental organs confine themselves to the hope that things will be all right.—Reuter.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES ON NEW MINISTERS

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's Career.

Mr. James Ramsay Macdonald, who attains the proud position of being Britain's first Labour Prime Minister, was born at Lossiemouth, Scotland, in 1866 and educated at a board school. He early threw himself into the Socialist movement, and not long before long, as organizer and writer, an important figure in it. He was appointed secretary of the Labour party in 1900 and held the position to 1912 and became editor of the Socialist Library in 1907. He naturally turned to politics and served on the London County Council from 1901 to 1904.

In 1906, according to the biography in the Encyclopædia Britannica, he was elected by a plurality as Labour member for Leicester, and held the seat for a dozen years. It was as chairman of the Independent Labour party—the section held by Mr. Keir Hardie—that he entered the House of Commons; and he explained at the congress of the party in April, 1907, that its object was to mould society into the Socialist State. He adapted himself easily to parliamentary conditions. One of the points which he constantly pressed, with eventual success, was that the terms of Government employment should be as good as those offered by the best private firms. In the controversy with the House of Lords he openly proclaimed himself a Single Chamberite man. On the National Insurance bill in 1911 he pointed out that a fundamental change of opinion had taken place, both parties now accepting the principle that social welfare was the care of the State. In that year he became the chairman of the Labour party in Parliament. He brought the whole weight of his party to bear in favour first of the Parliament bill, and afterwards of the Home Rule bill. But he was suspicious of Sir Edward Grey's policy, which he thought too slavish in its following of Lord Lansdowne; and he opposed the naval increases of the years before the World War, as the socialists in Berlin had opposed the German increases which provoked British rejoinders.

Anti-War but Anti-German.

His devotion, indeed, to the ideal of international socialism caused him, at the outbreak of the World War, to lose touch not only with British public feeling in general, but even with the sentiment of the Labour party which he led. In response to Sir Edward Grey's statement in the House of Commons on August 3, 1914, he contended that no proof had been given that the country was in danger; that the conflict could not be confined to the neutrality of Belgium; that the action of Russia was suspicious; that France could not be annihilated; and that, in consequence, virtue Britain should remain neutral. He found, however, that the ranks of the Labour party were cemented by the words of Sir Edward Grey and by the action of Germany; and he resigned the leadership of his party, being succeeded by Mr. Arthur Henderson.

He remained a pacifist throughout the war, and used his influence in this direction in the labour and socialist movement, but he seldom spoke in Parliament, though he associated himself with the occasional anti-war demonstrations of Mr. Snowden and Mr. Arthur Ponsonby, and claimed the right of public meeting and free speech for pacifists. He endeavoured unsuccessfully to prevent the Labour Conference in January, 1916, at the time of the first Military Service bill, from pledging themselves to support the Government in the prosecution of the war; but he declared at the same time, to the general surprise, that he and his friends were the most bitterly anti-German section of the people.

Penalties of Pacifism.

He was active in the summer of 1917 in promoting the participation of representatives of the English Labour and Socialist parties in an International Socialist Conference at Stockholm, to which German representatives were coming, and he went to Paris with Mr. Arthur Henderson on a fruitless mission to secure the co-operation of French and Belgian socialists. He himself did not go to Stockholm, as the Soldiers' and Fleet's Union, whose distrust of Germany was based on practical knowledge of the crimes at sea, refused to grant him a pass. His constituency first chose him his successor, Leicester at the general election of December, 1918, he received only 6,347 votes to the 20,570 polled for his opponent, Mr. J. F. Green, a leading member of the Coalition Unionist party. However, in the election of November, 1922, he got back again, for Aberavon, and became Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Macdonald has published several works on socialism and labour, besides a couple of books on India, which he visited in 1913 as a member of the Public Services Commission.

ciates found ready support from the funds of the German secret service, and it happened eventually that the Kaiser, who deemed himself the champion of monarchical principle in Europe, assisted Lenin and his retinue to reach Russia after the overthrow of the Tsar.

From that time onwards his career has been merged in the general history of Russia, where he established himself as President of the Soviet Government. At the Eighth Congress of Soviets convened a Moscow on December 23, 1920, Lenin was head of the so-called Right Wing. Meanwhile he had been elected President of the Council of People's Commissioners in Moscow in November, 1917, and his speeches influenced greatly the Fourth All-Russian Congress of Soviets in 1918.

On January 1, 1918, when leaving the Mikhailovsky School, where he had just made a speech to the first contingent of the soldiery leaving for the front, several shots were fired at the back of his car, but he was not wounded. On August 30, 1918, there was another attack on Lenin, this time from the "Left Wing" Socialist Revolutionaries, and he was very seriously wounded. On the verge of death for several days, it was not until September 6 that he was said to be out of danger.

He became seriously ill again in June, 1922, and since that time had been in a very weak state of health, but was strong to the end in upholding his personal ideas on the subject of communism.

Mourning for Lenin has been proclaimed throughout Russia for one month. Local Soviet commercial enterprises will close their offices for one day and the Russian Plenipotentiary Mission's offices will close for three days.

THE REBELLION IN MEXICO

Houston, Jan. 17.

A wireless message picked up from oil tankers in the Gulf of Mexico states that Mexican rebel gunboats are bombarding Tampico Beach.—Reuter's American Service.

Tampico, Jan. 17.

The blockade ordered by General Huerta has not become effective and the rebel ships have disappeared. Shipping of all classes entered and cleared yesterday unhindered. Railway traffic is also not impeded.—Reuter's American Service.

The U. S. S. Tacoma.

Washington, Jan. 17.

The Navy Department learns that three compartments of the stranded cruiser Tacoma are flooded. It is hoped that the cruiser will be pulled into deeper water when the heavy seas subside. —Reuter's American Service.

Chinese Houses Shelled by Rebel Gunboats

Tampico, Jan. 18.

Rebel gunboats here and at Saragoza yesterday sent four shells into the suburb of Varadero on the left bank of Panuco River, destroying several Chinese houses. The number of casualties is not known. Shore batteries forced the warships to retire out of range.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 19.

The cruiser Omaha and six destroyers from Panama waters have been ordered to Vera Cruz. The repair ship Prometheus will accompany the flotilla for operations to the Tacoma and to maintain the destroyers in seaworthy condition. The Tacoma is aground on the Bantauillas Reefs.

Rear Admiral Magruder, on board the Richmond, which is standing by the Tacoma, is in command of the force as senior officer. He states that he has no instructions except to relieve the Tacoma, but the opinion is expressed that the gathering of the ships at Vera Cruz will constitute a demonstration that is likely to convince the de la Huerta party and its leaders that the United States does not intend to permit inerference with American commercial shipping at Tampico and other Mexican ports.

The United States Hydrographic Office has warned mariners that the Salina Cruz Harbour in Mexico is mined and that the revolutionaries intend to mine Puerto Mexico, Vera Cruz, Frontera and other ports.—Reuter's American Service.

Federal Troops' Trip Through U. S. Territory

Naco, Ariz., Jan. 20.

About 2,000 Mexican Federal troops began crossing the international boundary this morning on a 19-mile trip through American territory, intending to reenter Mexico viâ El Paso.

Authority to allow this movement was received by the immigation inspectors from the State Department. — Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 21.

The U.S.S. Richmond has arrived at Vera Cruz. This is intended to serve as a warning that the Mexican rebels must not interfere with American vessels in their attempted blockade of Tampico.—Reuter's American Serships.—Reuter.

New York, Jan. 21.

Following threats by General Huerta to destroy the Mexican Petroleum Company's property at Tampico unless $400,000 in advance taxes is paid to the rebels, the State Department at Washington has advised the Company to protect their property by paying the demand, adding, however, that this should not be done unless the rebels actually seize the property or indicate their intention to carry out the threat.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 21.

The blockade of the oil port of Tampico by the revolutionaries has been postponed until the end of January, according to a despatch from Rear-Admiral Magruder, commanding the United States flotilla on the Mexican coast, to the Navy Department.

Navy officials say that this really signifies that the blockade will not be revived, the warning of the United States emphasized by the presence of American warships having sufficed.

The U. S. S. Tacoma.

Owing to the heavy weather it is feared that the light-cruiser Tacoma, which is stranded on the Bantauillas Reefs, has been battered beyond hope.—Reuter's American Service.

London, Jan. 22.

The American Consul at Vera Cruz has informed the de la Huerta party that if the mining operations reported by the United States Hydrographic Office to have been carried out in Salina Cruz harbour and to be projected at Puerto Mexico, Vera Cruz, Frontera and other ports are carried out partially or wholly, the United States Government would be constrained to adopt appropriate measures for the protection of its commerce.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 23.

The United States Government has sold to President Obregon more war material, including 5,000 rifles and 2,500 automatic pistols.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 23.

The United States Consul at Vera Cruz reports that Captain Sparlow and two wireless officers of the cruiser Tacoma were accidentally killed while performing their duties during the storm.

The Mexican revolutionary leaders have informed the United States Consul at Vera Cruz that they have decided to raise the blockade of Tampico.

The Mexican Embassy has been officially advised that the entire line on the Jalisco front has collapsed.

Jan. 24.

It is stated that the rebels, while nominally respecting the American protests and affirming that the bockade has been technically lifted, will declare a zone of naval warfare off Tampico, through which merchant ships will pass at their own risk.—Reuter's American Service.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Too Much Centred on Europe: Chinese Member's Complaint

London, Jan. 17.

Addressing a meeting of the League of Nations Union, Mr. Chu Chao-hsin strongly supported the League, but urged that its methods of policy and its debates should not be dominated by European politics. If it ever ceased to be a world-wide concern, the American nations would establish their own League and those of Asia would follow suit.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 19.

Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, addressing a meeting of the League of Nations Union on January 17, complained that the League paid more attention to Europe than to the rest of the world. He declared that when China was ousted from the Council it would not have been unreasonable for the Asiatic members to withdraw from the League.

With regard to the irregularity of the Chinese contribution, which was second only to that of Britain, Mr. Chu pointed out that China was not alone in this respect and that the arrears were now being paid up.—Reuter.

The Traffic in Drugs

Geneva, Jan. 20.

The Secretary-General of the League of Nations has invited all Governments belonging to the League or parties to the Opium Convention of 1912 to take part in a conference at Geneva on November 17 to seek measures to limit the manufacture of morphine, cocaine, heroin and their respective salts to the needs of doctors and scientists, as well as the production of raw opium and coca leaf to the amount necessary for the manufacture of alkaloids.

The programme of the conference will be drawn up by a committee of six members, appointed by the League of Nations Commission for the Suppression of Opium Traffic, including a representative of the United States and two European assessors of the Opium Commission.

In order to facilitate the drawing up of the programme, the Secretary-General has asked the States concerned to transmit any proposal that they wish to make to the committee for preliminary examination.—Reuter.

League of Nations and Hungary

London, Jan. 23.

The sub-committee of the League of Nations has concluded its work with regard to the financial reconstruction of Hungary by unanimously accepting the loan proposal. This will be forwarded to the Reparations Commission for approval.

The loan will be of 250,000,000 gold crowns, to be used for two and a half years and repayable in 20 years, during which time the treaty charges will be limited.

Certain securities, on which the Reparations Commission will raise the liens, will be pledged for the service of the loan.

The terms of the protocol which has been drawn up with regard to the political conditions of the loan provide that there shall be no political disturbances between Hungary and other nations.—Reuter.

LLOYD'S REGISTER OF SHIPPING

Decrease in British Output for 1923: Lowest on Record in Peace Years

London, Jan. 2?.

Thirty per cent. lower tonnage was launched from British shipbuilding yards in 1923 than in any peace year since 1892, states Lloyd's Register of Shipping, namely, 645,000 tons, a decrease of 385,000 tons as compared with 1922, representing 39.2 per cent. of the world's output for 1923 as compared with 41.8 per cent. in 1922 and 58 per cent. in 1913.

Tonnage launched in all parts of the world during 1923 totalled 1,643,000, a reduction of 824,000 tons as compared with 1922, and no fewer than 5,250,000 tons as compared with the record year, 1919.

The tonnage being built in all parts of the world on December 31 was 2,444,000, a reduction of 510,000 tons as compared with twelve months previously.—Reuter.

SHENANDOAH'S AIM AT NORTH POLE

1,000,000 Sq. Miles of Unknown Territory which America Must Control

Washington, Jan. 19.

Mr. Edwin Denby, the Secretary of the Navy, addressing the House of Representatives Naval Committee to-day, said that the prime purpose of the proposed flight of the airship Shenandoah to the North Pole was exploration of the Arctic regions with a view to annexation of the land in that area to the United States.

Mr. Denby said that "the mere fact that there is an unexplored area of a million square miles adjacent to the United States constitutes a constant challenge to the United States. We cannot permit that vast territory to fall into the hands of another Power. If we do not make this flight this summer, the entire Arctic region will be photographed and mapped by another Power within a year. We are not trying to discover the North Pole, we do not question Rear-Admiral Peary's feat: we want to explore and the Shenandoah is admirably fitted for the task."

The Secretary of the Navy added that the airship showed no structural or navigational weakness during its recent runaway flight. He estimated that the cost of the proposed exploration would be $183,000. The Shenandoah would follow a zigzag course over Northern Alaska in order to get data but it would not attempt to pass over the Pole unless weather conditions were favourable. If the airship succeeded in reaching Spitzbergen, it would visit England on its way back to the United States and might later attempt a flight round the world.—Reuter's American Service.

Guns to Protect the Pole

New York, Jan. 21.

The "New York World," commenting on the proposed trip of the Shenandoah, suggests that after the annexation of sufficient ice-fields it will be necessary to cover them with long-range guns to protect the Pole.—Reuter's American Service.

Claims of Canada to Arctic Icefields

Washington, Jan. 23.

It is reported from Ottawa that the Canadian Government has requested the British Embassy at Washington to keep it fully posted with regard to the United States plans for the airship trip to the Arctic, where Canada claims vast areas by reason of adjacency and exploration.—Reuter's American Service.

ARCTIC ROUTES FOR AERIAL COMMERCE

What Expeditions by Airship to the North Pole May Initiate

Washington, Dec. 8.

A prediction that air commerce by Arctic routes will be possible in the near future was contained in a letter from Mr. Vilhjalmur Stefansson, received to-day by the Naval Air Board, which is planning an expedition next summer to the North Pole and Arctic regions.

Mr. Stefansson predicted that the day would come "when the Arctic would be covered by a net of airways somewhat as the Atlantic is now covered by the track of steamers." The explorer placed at the disposal of the Navy Department his wide experience and knowledge of Arctic conditions.

"If this enterprise succeeds in initiating such an era," Mr. Stefansson wrote, "then it will, in my opinion, be in the class of the voyage of Columbus, doubtless not quite so important, but nevertheless entitled to comparison in that very exclusive group. The Arctic, after having been a barrier between North America and the Old World, will now become a connecting link."

Rear-Admiral William A. Moffett, head of the Air Board, announced to-day that "as soon as the project takes definite form and the decisions have been approved by the Secretary of the Navy, all details of the naval expedition will be given to Captain Roald Amundsen, who is preparing for an independent expedition by air to the Polar regions next summer."—Reuter's American Service.

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN LIQUOR TREATY

Signed at the State Department; Conditional Clause as to Abrogation

New York, Jan. 19.

The British schooner Kwasing has been ordered to be returned with her cargo of liquor to the master of the vessel. It is understood that she will be escorted to the three-mile limit and will thence continue her voyage to Halifax.

The Kwasing was seized by United States authorities off Wilmington, North Carolina, after the vessel, which was carrying intoxicating liquors, had put in for repairs.—Reuter's American Service.

London, Jan. 18.

The diplomatic correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" learns that the Dominions have now forwarded their comments on the subject of the draft Anglo-American Rum-running Treaty. The comments are generally favourable. Consequently no further delay can be expected in connexion with the signing of the Treaty.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 22.

The Embassy at Washington has been authorided to communicate to the American Government the draft Liquor Treaty as approved by the British Dominion Governments. It is understood that the treaty entitles the United States to search within an hour's steam or sail of the shore, as stated by Mr. Baldwin in the House of Commons on January 16, and British vessels are permitted to carry sealed liquor into American ports for use on the return journey.—Reuter.

Washington, Jan. 23.

The State Department announces that following each signing of the Anglo-American Liquor Treaty similar treaties will soon be negotiated with other maritime Governments. — Reuter's American Service.

of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen to take N. U. R. men into their membership immediately with full benefit. Mr. Cramp stated that the N. U. R. refused to accept into membership members of their rival society. "It seems a pity that the public should be embroiled in a question of Union jealousy over membership."

Mr. Bromley, secretary of the Associated Society, in a statement claims that the position of the strikers is strengthening every hour. He estimates that at least 75,000 men are on strike, including thousands of N. U. R. locomotive men.

Mr. Robert Williams, secretary of the National Transport Workers' Federation, has issued a statement denying the report that the Federation had telegraphed wishing the locomotive men success.

The railway strike threw 4,000 South Wales colliers out of work yesterday and it is expected that 40,000 will shortly be idle unless means can be found to return empty wagons from the ports to the pits and to maintain clearances.

Stoppages have already occurred in certain steel and tin-plate works and in three coalpits at Leigh.

Mail Traffic Maintained.

Jan. 23.

With the exception of a slight improvement due to organization of the men available, the strike situation yesterday did not improve. The essential food and mail traffic is maintained. The passenger services throughout the country are dislocated. The companies are endeavouring to cope with the situation in South Wales, where coal export is practically at a standstill.

A meeting between the managers and representatives of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen will be held to-day at the request of the latter.—Reuter.

30,000 Colliers Idle in South Wales: Increasing Defection of N. U. R. Members

London, Jan. 23.

The railway strike position is easier in London this morning, there being a fair number of trains running. Further Welsh collieries have been rendered idle. The defection among the members of the National Union of Railwaymen is increasing at Carlisle, where a joint strike committee has been formed.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, M.P., has resigned the Political Secretaryship of the N. U. R.

Later.

The dislocation of industry in South Wales owing to the railway strike has become worse. It is estimated that over 80,000 colliers are now idle.

The strike committee claim that 150 locomotive men belonging to the National Union of Railwaymen have joined the strikers at Derby.

Attempt to Wreck a Train.

Officials of the London and North Eastern Railway report an attempt to interfere with an express from Glasgow to Edinburgh this morning. Pieces of wood and a heavy coping stone were found on the line near Bishopbriggs. A goods train which was preceding the express cleared the obstruction without damage.

Shortage of Coal at Liverpool.

Meanwhile the strike continues to affect industry in various parts of the country and has led to a serious shortage of coal at Liverpool. Cargo-boats are already delayed and a partial hold-up of shipping is threatened. A large oil mill has closed down and work at the Hull docks has practically come to a standstill. Some large coalpits at Doncaster [illegible] thousands of miners in South Yorkshire will be thrown out of work by the end of the week failing an improvement in the situation.

Later.

The meeting of railway managers has adjourned without arriving at a decision in regard to the locomotive men's request for a joint conference.—Reuter.

POINCARE'S FOREIGN POLICY

Vote of Confidence Passed by Large Majority in Chamber of Deputies

Paris, Jan. 18.

After M. Poincaré had given a long review of France's foreign policy, the Chamber of Deputies passed a vote of confidence in the Government by 415 votes to 151.

In the course of his statement, the Premier said that France had rightly rejected the frequent British proposals for a revision of the German debt which had not been accompanied by an offer of compensation in respect of France's debts to Britain.

Referring to the means to apply possible recommendations of the committee of experts, M. Poincaré suggested that reparations payments might be obtained by the working of the railways in the occupied regions by inter-Allied companies. France was willing to agree that a portion of the prospective German loan should be devoted to the restoration of German finances, but the bulk must be handed over for reparations.—Reuter.

The French Wireless report says:—

The Premier, replying to previous speakers, notably M. Herriot, pointed out with satisfaction that M. Herriot, as well as the Government, would accept no reduction of France's credit on Germany. He recalled: "I have always asked for united action of the Allies in the Ruhr and considered our isolated action only in the event where an understanding on this matter could not be reached." After having recapitulated the succession of events after he had advised the necessity of taking pledges, he expressed the hope that the Allies would finally reach an agreement for the publication of the documents which would form a Yellow Book giving an exact account of the exchange of views.

Fiscal Measures in France

Paris, Jan. 22.

The Finance Committee of the Chamber, concluding the examination of the fiscal measures, adopted the proposal of M. Isaac, which had been accepted by the Government, and later began the discussion of the measure for the increase of postal charges.

The "Matin" publishes statistics showing (1) that in the last five years the civil and military expenses of France have decreased by more than Frs. 11,000,000,000; (2) that the revenue from taxes is advancing in constant progression, increasing by nearly Frs. 2,000,000,000 in 1923; (3) the reimbursement of loans to the Banque de France is continuing and that there was due on December 23, 1923, Frs. 22,400,000,000; (4) that France is having less and less recourse to loans, having borrowed Frs. 44,000,000,000 in 1920 and only 13,000,000,000 in 1923; and (5) that the commercial balance, which showed a deficit of Frs. 23,000,000,000 in 1920, tends to recover its equilibrium, now being only Frs. 1,400,000,000 in arrears. —French Wireless through Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 18.

Fiscal measures embodied in the Bills adopted by the Finance Commission include an increase by 20 per cent. of all taxes, a heavy increase in the excise duties, imposition of severe penalties for default and also administrative reforms involving a saving of Frs. 1,600,000,000 annually.—Reuter.

THE BRITISH ZONE IN GERMANY

French Order Cutting Down Railway Transport

London, Jan. 19.

Surprise is expressed in official circles in London at news from Cologne to the effect that the French Regie have issued a proclamation practically prohibiting all railway goods traffic with the British zone except foodstuffs and military transport, but comment is for the present being withheld on the ground that information is insufficient to explain the the reason for the measure.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 19.

It has been ascertained from Mayence that the Regie's action in respect of the Cologne zone is due to their inability to utilize the lines traversing the zone salient and the consequent use of another route, which necessitates withdrawal of facilities for considerable traffic at Cologne in order to avoid congestion. The Regie are of opinion that the situation will not be altered until utilization of the Cologne lines in obtained.—Reuter.

Protest Against Action of Rhineland Regie

London, Jan. 21.

The Marquess of Crewe, the British Ambassador in Paris, called on M. Poincaré yesterday. It is understood that he conveyed the British Government's protest and requested an explanation of the action of the Rhineland Régie in issuing a proclamation practically prohibiting all railway goods traffic with the British zone except foodstuffs and military transport, in which connexion the diplomatic correspondents of the newspapers comment warmly. They anticipate another Anglo-French crisis and declare that the action is a reprisal for Britain's refusal to hand over the Cologne railways to the Régie.—Reuter.

BAVARIA OPPOSED TO AUTONOMY

Separatists Largely Composed of Outside Elements: The British Zone Blockade

London, Jan. 21.

Mr. Ronald McNeill said that Mr. Clive, the British Consul-General at Munich, who was making inquiries in the Palatinate, had telegraphed after five days' hearing of the views of every class that he had reached the conclusion that the overwhelming mass of the population was opposed to autonomous government; which could never come into existence without French support. Mr. Clive said that 75 per cent. of the Separayists came from outside and included a large criminal element.

Commander J. M. Kenworthy, Independent Liberal Member for Central Hull, referring to the ordinances of the French Régie prohibiting the import and export of articles in the Cologne area, asked if this virtual blockade of the British zone continued, whether any form of reprisals could be adopted. Mr. Ronald McNeill, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, admitted that such ordinances had been issued, but was not prepared for the moment to accept Commander Kenworthy's description. He said that the Government was making inquiries into the matter and the attention of the French and Belgian Governments were being called to it.

PARIS, Jan. 16.—Exploitations under the direct control of the Régie in occupied Germany and under the management of French engineers yielded on January 14, [illegible] tons of coal 6,213 tons of coke, 73 tons of sulphate of ammonia 83 tons of benzol, and 2,533 tons of lignite briquettes. On the same day 12,932 10-ton waggons were loaded, including 8,450 waggons of coal.—French Wireless through Reuter.

GERMANY'S FINANCES INVESTIGATED

First Meeting of Committee of Experts: The Evidence of Herr Schacht

Paris, Jan. 21.

This afternoon the first committee of experts, charged with finding means to balance the German budget and to stabilize Germany's currency, heard Herr Schacht, the Governor of the Reichsbank, on Germany's financial situation and the plans of the German Reichsbank to issue gold notes.

The inaugural sitting of the second committee, charged with estimating German capital abroad, took place this morning. M. Barthou opened the sitting, and the reply was made by Mr. McKenna, representing Britain and President of the Committee. The members of the Committee are as follows:—United States, Mr. Robinson, President of the First National Bank of Los Angeles; Italy, Signor Mario Alberti, Director of the Credito Italiano; Belgium, M. Janssen, Director of the Banque Nationale de Belgique; France, M. Laurent Allhalin, Director of the Banque des Pays-Bas. M. Barthou explained the objects of the second committee. He said that the Germans had formed abroad in the form of deposits and in partnerships in existing businesses a considerable capital which affects Germany's capacity and in consequence diminishes her powers of payment.

The "Temps" expresses the hope that the present inquiry is preparing the way for a settlement of reparations and emphasizes the declarations made to the "Observer" by Herr Luther, the German Minister of Finance, that as a whole it can be said that the revenue of the Reich is equal to its expenditure.—French Wireless through Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 22.

A communiqué states that the First Committee of Experts has concluded that an independent gold bank should be established in Germany with the co-operation of foreign capital.—Reuter.

Berlin, Jan. 23.

The President of the Board of Directors of the Rentenbank has informed the Ministers of Finance and Foreign Affairs that stabilization of German currency cannot be effected if it is necessary to continue to pay the costs of the garrisons of the occupied territories, as these cannot be met by loans or available resources and meeting them would lead to further inflation. The Ministers promised to submit the matter to the Cabinet.—Reuter.

SUDDEN DEATH OF M. LENIN

London, Jan. 22.

The Russian Telegraph Agency in London announces that M. Lenin died suddenly in Moscow yesterday.

Later.

A Soviet communiqué says that M. Lenin died at the hills near Moscow. His health had recently considerably improved, but his condition suddenly became worse yesterday evening. He lost consciousness and died of paralysis of the respiratory centres.

The All Russian Congress of Soviets is now sitting in Moscow to take the necessary decisions to continue M. Lenin's work. "The Soviet Government stands firm at its post, watchful over the conquests of the proletarian revolution."

M. Lenin's body will lie in state in Moscow till the funeral, which will take place on January 26.—Reuter.

Communists Carrying on Former Leader's Policy: Bolshevist Activity

Paris, Jan. 23.

The autopsy on M. Lenin proved that he succumbed to cerebral hæmorrhage. M. Zinovieff affirmed his determination to continue M. Lenin's work.

The "Matin" publishes the instructions addressed by M. Zinovieff to French Communists on the subject of the forthcoming electoral campaign and recommends this text to the attention of the American Senate, which is opening an inquiry into Bolshevist activities. M. Zinovieff declares that "it is not by Parliament that Socialism can be instituted, as the leaders of the British Labour Party imagine but by the overthrow of the whole bourgeois state, including Parliament." Fortunately, the journal adds, M. Zinovieff's predictions will not readily be realized in France.

The Italian newspapers, commenting on the death of M. Lenin, emphasize that he saw before his death the ruin of revolutionary hopes beyond the Russian frontiers. The solid and healthy organisms of the great nations of the West, the "Corriere Italiano" writes, have resisted the threatening Muscovite epidemic.—French Wireless through Reuter.

The late M. Vladimir Ilich Lenin (originally Oulianov), the Russian Communist leader, was born in 1870 at Simbirsk, where his father held an official position as district inspector of schools. In 1887 his elder brother Alexander was hanged for being concerned in a plot to assassinate Emperor Alexander III. M. Lenin entered the University of Kazan as a student of law, but was expelled for taking part in revolutionary agitation. Later he went to St. Petersburg and passed his Bar examination there. He did not practise law for long, however, but joined a secret organization of professional revolutionists. In the late 'nineties he was arrested, but made his escape and went abroad. In the meantime he had joined the Social Democratic movement, which in those days was spreading widely in Russia. Struve and Plekhanov were at that time the chief exponents of Marxism, in which scheme the rise and the growth of capitalism was considered to be a necessary preliminary to social revolution, and it was thought that Russia was not yet ripe for a social upheaval. Lenin was in agreement with these views for some time, but while Struve and Plekhanov were induced to seek an alliance with Liberal intellectuals in their struggle against Tsarism, Lenin and others forsook the Liberal platform and strove for a violent outbreak of downright class war. This produced a split in the ranks of Social Democracy in 1903 and at the Third Congress in 1905 it led to the formation of two parties—the Bolsheviks meeting in London and the Mensheviks in Geneva.

The revolution of 1905 saw Lenin again in St. Petersburg, but he did not play any part in the Soviet of workmen and disappeared when it became clear to him that the troops and people were not on the side of the revolutionists. During his second stay abroad (1906-17) he published several pamphlets and books in which he announced that terrorism was inevitable as a weapon in the hands of revolutionists and heaped abuse on idealistic philosophers and religious teachers of all schools and creeds.

When the World War brought about the long-expected upheaval of European society, Lenin was one of the leading spirits of the Zimmerwald and Kienthal meetings, and urged a general revolution of the workmen of all countries against the war, but felt that the social catastrophe would be most likely to break out in Russia, as being the worst governed and least civilized country. Therefore he upheld to the full extent of his influence the cause of Germany against the Entente. He and his [illegible]

OUR AUSTRALIAN LETTER

Shipping Subsidies for Eastern Trade: Forlorn Attempt to Restore Influence in China Markets: Good Wheat Harvest and Trade Outlook for 1924 Generally Promising

From Our Own Correspondent.

Melbourne, Dec. 22.

It may be accepted that politically, not only considering the time of year, but also the results of the British elections, politics in Australia are dull. There is little question that it is a false calm, one of those with which quite inexperienced novelists invariably presage a storm. Some one has said that the centre of a tornado is absolute stillness. It may be so; I never was there. The political calm in Australia is not the prelude to a storm Australian political storms mean so very little, that to speak of a storm is preposterous supererogation.

In Victoria the State government has dragged itself clear of the tentacles of a State Treasurer who was piling up surpluses and at the same time making every person pay, except those declaring handsome dividends. In other States the people who can pay are doing so. Even Queensland, the Labour State with an Unemployment Insurance Act, can only show that those receiving doles, allegedly collected from all parts of the Commonwealth, are only some 2.5 per cent. of the unemployed, involving a payment of about £8,000 a quarter. As one-third of this money has already been collected from the workers, and another third from the employers, it is difficult to understand the extreme conservative Press which throws handsprings on the subject.

On some of the coalfields of New South Wales there is continuous talk of overwhelming grievances, with accompanying threats of strikes. These last matter but little; several collieries have actually closed down. In due course they will re-open. In the base metal area of Broken Hill, which has been the shocking example of bolshevism for some time past, we find that in 1922 nearly £1,000,000 sterling was paid in dividends, and there are other profits forthcoming early in the new year. These facts all make for poltical calm, though it must be admitted that the average member of the political public does not regard (through his newspapers) a political calm as something to be desired.

EASTERN TRADE.

It is questionable whether the Commonwealth Government will, within the present generation, wipe out the reproaches which can be heaped upon it for the neglect of Australia's Eastern trade.

Mr. E. S. Little was summarily got rid of, for strictly political reasons, but the same Mr. Little is being extensively quoted as an authority upon the shortcomings of Australian exporters. It is all a sad and sorry business, and goes a long way to create a faith in dominum ressort, not in private enterprise but in the very interference which the protagonists of such enterprise denounce.

The Commonwealth Government some time ago promised to subsidize a shipping line in order to develop the Eastern trade. A suggestion that certain Commonwealth steamers should be placed on the Eastern berths was dismissed with ridicule, yet the very same government is now considering the question of granting subsidies to privately-owned steamships.

This country is still miles behind other competitors in the trading race. The faults of packing are at least not denied, and lately some explanations have been laggardly forthcoming for complaints that once shrieked to high heaven. Thus canned Australian fruits were opening up with a taste of kerosene. Complaints were met by a flat denial, and a charge that the price of Australian sugar was too high. It now transpires that during the war scarcity of materials kerosene was used in the soldering of tins, and the penetrative odour affected a comparatively small consignment, before the trouble was discovered. Seeing that the Commonwealth assumes the right to control all exports its failure to protect the reputation of the canning trade, at the proper time, carries its own condemnation.

"OUR" POST OFFICE.

At last there seems a not unreasonable claim that the Australian Postal Department is once again becoming the servant and not the master of the people. Perhaps it is hardly realized inside the Commonwealth, certainly not outside, that the service employs about 23,000 persons, and pays salaries amounting to £5,000,000 a year. There was a time when the employees used to send deputations to the Postmaster-General, and there came a day when the latter advised his own employees to form unions, so that he could deal with them collectively. The unions were formed, the Minister disappeared, and for quite a time the unions amused themselves extracting "their rights" under threats of hanging up the whole service. Something seems to have happened. The Government, has arranged the retirement of the permanent head, and in his stead, mirabile dictu, is placed a rank outsider at double salary.

But more things are happening, and Australia will, in a few weeks, hardly know herself. It may be added that the postal officials will hardly know themselves. To let the postal sorters enjoy a Saturday half-holiday to the full it was decided to suspend the sorting of inter-state mails arriving in Melbourne on Saturdays and the suburbanite thought himself fortunate if upon returning home on Monday evening he found awaiting him the inter-state letters which had arrived on the previous Saturday morning. This may sound wildly improbable but it was a fact. Now, if a man pays for a box at a suburban post office, he can get his letters at any time during the week end. Lettergrams, which are nowadays a commonplace, have been restricted to domestic messages only, and could not be lodged for transmission until after 6 p.m. The telegraph operators who were accustomed to sleeping through the night have suddenly found that they have something to do. The public is getting quite cheery. It is even said that the Postal Department will in future make itself liable for losses up to £50, whereas in the past it has regulated its maximum liability down to £2. There would almost seem to be a Mussolini at work.

Whether it is the Postmaster-General, Mr. Gibson, or the newly imported autocratic Secretary, Mr. H. P. Brown, remains to be discovered. Mr. Brown was an alleged discovery of Sir Auckland Geddes or his brother when the re-organization of the British and French railway systems was undertaken during the war. An electrical engineer, he is considered the last word in telephonic experience, and as the Department is spending some £10,000,000 in bringing the telephones up to requirements, he was borrowed from the Home government and duly installed as permament head of the Department, which double the salary of his predecessor, who agreed, for a consideration prematurely to retire.

CHRONIC STATE OF FISHING INDUSTRY.

Both the New South Wales and Queensland State governments have been trying to establish trawling for fish, and in each case considerable losses have been made. For several years the Commonwealth government maintained a steamer, the Endeavour, and paid a well-known Norwegian fish expert to supervise the operations of the vessel, identify the old and name the new fish caught, and chart the fishing grounds along the coasts. There is a perfect mine of valuable information, but private enterprise has not troubled to make use of it.

Fish in Australia is practically unobtainable, on a modern scale. A few men go out in boats, and fish with lines, and the distribution is almost entirely in the hands of Greeks. People living in the country get no fresh fish, except such as may be caught in the limited number of rivers and creeks. Mr. Danrevig, the Norwegian, and able son of an able father in the fishery business, went down with the Endeavour, which was despatched in 1914 upon a foolhardy expedition to Macquarie Island, to relieve the crew at the wireless station. The ship has never been replaced. The failure of the above two States in the trawling business has been welcomed with much rejoicing by the good folks who are mad on the virtues of private enterprise, and chronically disgruntled if government should ever invade that domain. Their newspapers breathe the spirit of Cobden, who would not even help to get slavery abolished in America, because that was the Americans' own business. When Lord Jellicoe reported on naval defence of Australia he particularly emphasized the necessity of developing the trawling industry in order that we might have ready at hand the means to clear our waters of mines in the event of war. As the trawlers have been sold private enterprise may now at last give the industry some attention.

Whaling in the Southern Seas has once more been taken up, and the other day a fully-equipped fleet of half a dozen whalers left Tasmania for Ross's Ocean, which lies to the south of New Zealand.

STATE PREMIER'S VISIT TO LONDON.

Considerable interest centres in the departure of the Queensland Labour Premier for London during the next few days. Mr. Theodore, who has Slav blood in his veins, is undoubtedly a man of exceptional ability. After eight years of office he still manages to control the outside Labour organizations, and secure their suffrages at elections, while retaining the confidence of thousands of small men who are settled on the land.

It is said that he has wasted immense sums upon Socialistic experiments, but this is largely mere political talk. He established two new central mills and created out of the tropical jungle two new sugar districts, containing the homes of nearly 400 farmers. So well have the mills succeeded that he proposes to hand one of them over to the farmers, and let them manage it, just as similar co-operative mills are managed in other parts of the State. He has now let tenders for the erection of a third sugar mill, at a total cost including tramway services of about £750,000, and already new farmers are breaking up the land to feed the mill, which should be at work in 1925. That sort of Socialism is much more important than a score or so of State butchers' shops, but the latter are the more attractive for political window-dressing.

In 1924-5 Mr. Theodore has to convert something like £24,000,000 of old loans, and this is the reason of his visit to London. He has also got to face the charge that his government repudiated the pastoral leases, when it decided to increase the rents at a higher rate than provided in the leases. As the money to convert the loans is usually forthcoming from the big pastoral companies in London, Mr. Theodore's outlook is not very hopeful. The loans falling due chiefly date from the Griffith régime of the early eighties, and in order to get the money pastoral leases, mostly with a 42 years tenure, were granted, rent to be appraised every 10 years, but not to involve an increase of more than 10 per cent. at any-one time. But the 40 years have seen great changes, and much progress. Railways have been built into the interior, meatworks have been established, and what was at one time a precarious way of making a living, chiefly out of the hides and offal of the cattle has developed into a highly profitable export trade. The Labour government decided to amend the leases, so as to be able to increase the rents. Governments and parliaments are by no means averse to committing acts which some people call repudiation, but it was unfortunate that the people affected in this case happened to be the creditors of the State. Queensland is not much in sympathy with the pastoral companies in London. The charge of repudiation has not moved the electors who have twice, since the passing of the measure, returned the Labour government to power. The parliamentary Opposition is maintaining silence in order not to embarrass Mr. Theodore, and a barrister, who was at one time a bitter opponent of the ministry, has pointed out that the Government cannot with reason be expected to repeal its measure. It is probable that Mr. Theodore will succeed in his mission. The fact that the pastoral leases are nearing their expiry will give him a useful weapon to bargain with.

THE FRUIT INDUSTRY.

Anyone who had read the columns and columns of declamatory matter in the newspapers, in which the fruitgrowers were all "ruined" because they grew too much fruit, the canners were "killed" by the cost of sugar and therefore advised the growers of fruit to destroy their trees, the failure of Australian canned fruit to compete with California, and the overwhelming stupidity of the State governments which settled returned soldiers on the land without first of all seeing that they had a market for their produce, and then turned to Prime Minister Bruce's Imperial Conference campaign for preference, and the promises of the Baldwin Government to help "nuts and raisins"—must rub his eyes to-day and see if perchance he has not awakened from a post-prandial nap. Grocers in Australia are complaining that they cannot get canned fruits; at Mildura, the home of the dried fruit industry, American raisins are being sold in the shops and preferred to the local production; in England the whole of the Australian canned fruit stock is selling like hot cakes, despite the unpropitious Christmas season; the thrip has cut down the supplies of berry fruits, which a few days ago the jam-makers said were excessive; sugar in Australia is half the price of sugar in Great Britain and well below the cost of any sugar which could be landed from America, even if there were no import duty. All the correspondence has suddenly ceased, and only a few canners are still murmuring about the conditions imposed by the Commonwealth Government if they want to earn the subsidy of £140,000 which is offering. A strange world, my masters! Can we wonder that Australians are as prone to gamble as any Latin race?

RINDERPEST HERDS CREMATED.

Generally the outlook for the coming year is a satisfactory one—entirely satisfactory to a people who seem almost Oriental in their fatalism. Officially we are told that the outbreak of Rinderpest in Western Australia is considered to be well in hand. A few additional herds have been cremated, and a buffer area around the affected districts converted into a desert.

The dairying industry generally is pulling itself together and, thanks to recent rains, the pastoral industry throughout Australia is good for cattle and excellent for wool. The price of the last named is something to conjure with, and that despite the still unsettled condition of the European markets.

As mentioned already the mineral industries have responded to the increased price for metals, and there is no immediate prospect of a change for the worse, while copper, with a European settlement, may recover its pre-war status.

The wheat crops, now being harvested, are coming up to expectations. West Australia anticipates a record output.

In most of the Queensland sugar districts the new crops on a greatly increased area have received good early summer rains, and the latter half of next year will probably see a crop of well over 300,000 tons of sugar harvested. There is a downward tendency in costs, especially of coastal shipping.

The railway from Brisbane to Townsville—some 700 miles—is now working, and travellers from the Queensland capital can reach Townsville by rail saving two days in time and about £2 in the cost of the journey. The cotton industry continues to grow, and the prospects are that last year's crop of 13,000,000 lb. will probably be doubled.

IMMIGRATION BACKWOOD.

Immigrants are not coming into Australia as rapidly as could be wished, but they are being readily absorbed. At present the bulk of the immigrants are going to Victoria and Western Australia, New South Wales only just beginning to move in the matter. The figures which are given to the public are by no means illuminating. We are told that of 26,368 immigrants 9,366 came to Victoria, 7,366 to West Australia, 5,015 to New South Wales, 2,367 to Queensland, 1,648 to South Australia and 106 to Tasmania. What period these figures cover is not disclosed. In 1922 the excess of arrivals over departures for the whole Commonwealth was 38,138 persons, though of course many of these could not be classed as immigrants. The New Settlers' League, which gave the figures quoted above, also stated that the immigrants brought in with them declared capital amounting to £433,550, which, it was considered, really represented about £600,000 actual cash.

OUR SCOTTISH LETTER

The Lesson of the General Election: Rising Tide of Socialism in the North

From Our Own Correspondent.

Edinburgh, Dec. 12.

Unionism has held its own, but Liberalism has lost heavily to Socialism—that in a nutshell is the outcome of the polls in Scotland.

The Unionists now hold 16 seats instead of 15; the reunited Liberals 24, as against 28; the Socialists 34, as against 29; while Mr. Scrymgeour in Dundee remains as a party by himself. Thus the Socialists have made a net gain of five seats.

This advance of Socialism in our midst is the most unpleasant feature of the situation. Formerly its strength lay mainly in Glasgow and the Clyde and the industrial part of Lanarkshire, but it has now spread its tentacles in Eastern Scotland, particularly in the mining areas bordering on the Forth. In the North and in the South of Scotland the hard-headed sons of the soil remain proof again ,its blandishments. A factor in Scotland undoubtedly of importance has been the relaxation of the party organizations of Unionism and Liberalism consequent on the Coalition period. The Socialists, on the other hand, kept their activities at the highest pitch of efficiency. The Unionists have suffered even more from this defective preparation of the ground than have the Liberals. In no fewer than 10 cases Socialists will sit as minority representatives. That is a consideration which should surely bring home to both the constitutional parties the folly of recklessly splitting the

The Anglo-American Liquor Treaty was signed at the State Department to-day.

Later.

The British Ambassador, Sir Auckland Geddes, and Mr. Hughes, Secretary of State, signed the liquor treaty, which, however, requires the ratification of the Senate.

The treaty can be terminated at three months' notice after a twelvemonth. One clause provides that, if owing to a judicial decision or legislative action the terms are modified the whole treaty shall be abrogated. Provision is also made for a joint commission to settle claims for compensation where a British vessel suffers loss or injury through any unreasonable or improper exercise of the rights conferred by the treaty.—Reuter's American Service.

BOK PEACE PRIZE COMPETITION

Washington, Jan. 21.

Mr. Edward Bok, who organized the recent competition for the best plan whereby the United States could co-operate with other nations to prevent war, was called to-day before a Senate committee and charged with carrying on propaganda designed to influence the action of Congress and the Government's foreign policy. It is stated that the committee's purpose is to determine whether relations exist between the Bok award and the organizations whose purpose is to secure American adherence to the League of Nations.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 22.

Mr. Edward Bok has written to the Chairman of the Senate Committee, before which he was called yesterday to answer a charge of carrying on propaganda designed to influence the Government's foreign policy, offering another prize of $100,000 for any peace plan selected by the Committee.—Reuter's American Service.

CLAN KENNEDY ASHORE

Bumping Badly: Insurance Involved £59,500

London, Jan. 18.

It is reported from North Foreland that the steamer Clan Kennedy is badly ashore on Sizewell Bank, bumping badly. The main engine is broken but prospects of salvage are good provided the weather becomes moderate. It is understood that the vessel is insured for £59,500. It is loaded with nickel ore from Pagumene for Glasgow and copra from Papeete for Hamburg. Cargo was discharged at Rotterdam and Hamburg.

A message from Blackwall says that the Dutch steamer Holendrecht, which was beached after a collision with the steamer Corea, has been refloated and docked.—Reuter.

SWARAJIST OBSTRUCTION IN INDIA

Government Bills Blocked

Nagpur, Jan. 17.

The Swarajists, who command the majority in the Central Provinces Legislature, have successfully obstructed five Government bills by voting for their postponement or re-circulation. A two-day programme was thus finished in two hours.

Jan. 19.

The political deadlock in the Central Provinces consequent on the refusal of the Swarajist majority to undertake Ministerial responsibility is intensifying.

An exciting debate in the new Legislative Council, which lasted seven hours, 17 speakers taking part, resulted in the passing by 44 votes to 24 of a motion to be submitted to the Governor declaring that the Ministers do not enjoy the confidence of the House and should be requested to resign.

The Council has adjourned sine die.—Reuter.

EMERGENCY MEASURES IN INDIA

The Revival of Revolutionary Conspiracy: Statement by Lord Lytton

Calcutta, Jan. 24.

At a meeting of the Legislative Council yesterday the Governor of Bengal, the Earl of Lytton, referred to the revival of revolutionary conspiracy and explained that the Government's use of emergency measures was in order to strike at the leaders and commented on the fact that notice had been given of resolutions recommending the release of political prisoners.

The Earl of Lytton did not doubt that the whole public opinion of Bengal would support the Government's action if they knew the facts. The Governor did not believe that any Member of the Council would demand the release of the men at present interned if he believed they were guilty of organising robbery and murder. He announced that the Government had submitted its case to the impartial examination of two judges who concluded that the existence of revolutionary conspiracy had been proved. The Governor strongly appealed to the Council to support the Government's efforts to prevent Bengal from reverting to past anarchy.—Reuter.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

HOPELESS OUTLOOK IN RLWY. STRIKE

Financial Support from Australian Engineers: More Miners Out of Work

London, Jan. 24.

The railway companies regard the position as about the same, but certain industries are feeling increased effects from the strike. Over 100,000 miners in South Wales and 6,000 in the Lothians are idle.

The railway managers this morning replied to the request of the executive of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen for a fresh conference. This is being considered by the executive. Mr. Bromley, the secretary of the Society, stated that the reply still refused to recognize the findings of the National Wages Board as other than a compulsory arbitration award. He claimed that the position of the strikers was strengthening and mentioned the receipt of a telegram from the Federation of Engineers in Australia offering the utmost financial assistance, which, he said, the executive had decided to accept.

The reply of the railway managers to Mr. Bromley, it was later learned, was in the form of a letter which was sent at midnight. It emphasized that the managers are not prepared to discuss a revision of the decision of the National Wages Board but, if the locomotive engineers' executive will indicate the "existing differences" they have in mind, a meeting will be arranged if the differences are such as can usefully be discussed at present.

Later.

The executive of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen have decided to inform the railway managers that the strike must continue.—Reuter.

BRITAIN'S ABILITY TO LEND MONEY

Best Market for Foreign Loans: Danger of Labour Disputes and Shadow of War

London, Jan. 24.

Dr. Walter Leaf, presiding at the annual meeting of the London County, Westminster and Parr's Bank, voiced a definite feeling of confidence and hope that in the coming year Britain would have resumed her place as a lending nation.

The London market was the best for the foreign borrower. Foreign and Colonial loans issued last year amounted to £130,000,000. These overseas loans formed the best foundation for expansion of the export trade. The fact that imports had risen from £1,000,000,000 to £1,098,000,000, while we were at the same time lending freely abroad, conclusively proved a satisfactory growth of invisible exports, but, while the outlook was good, any real advance was conditional upon the absence of serious Labour disputes, anxiety regarding which constituted the darkest spot on the horizon.

It was vain to talk of prosperity while the shadow of veiled war overhung Central Europe. The industrial collapse of Germany was now complete. The new currency, the rentenmark, as soon as it was thrown open to sale and purchase, would follow its predecessor, the Reichsmark.

One thing was certain and that was that the payment of reparations by Germany was only possible through excess of German exports over imports. We must be prepared to accept German goods on an unheard of scale, mostly in direct competition with our own, but it was impossible to contemplate with equanimity an increase in Germany's competitive world trade by 40 per cent. over her best year, 1913, which was requisite for the payment of reparations.

In conclusion, Dr. Leaf said that the election had dissipated the fears of rash experiments like the capital levy, and hence there was no occasion for alarm by nervous amateur investors.—Reuter.

THE RECOGNITION OF SOVIET RUSSIA

Almost a Foregone Conclusion: Capt. O'Grady Suggested as Ambassador

London, Jan. 24.

Reuter's Agency learns that it can now be stated definitely that should the Russian Government be accorded recognition by Great Britain, the appointment of Captain James O'Grady, M.P., as Ambassador at Moscow will be announced immediately.

The opinion is expressed in Ministerial circles that diplomatic recognition of Russia is a foregone conclusion as a result of the General Election and of the attitude of manufacturers generally.

Note:—Captain O'Grady, Labour Member for East Leeds, is a furniture maker and secretary of the National Federation of General Workers. He was sent by the Government on a special mission to Russia in the spring of 1917, and also in November, 1920, to meet a representative of the Russian Soviet Government at Copenhagen and negotiate the exchange of British prisoners of war and the repatriation of all British civilians at that time in Soviet Russia.—Reuter.

MOSCOW'S TRIBUTE TO M. LENIN

An Impressive Procession: No Change in Foreign Policy of Soviet Regime

Riga, Jan. 24.

A telegram from Moscow states that the body of M. Lenin, in a red coffin covered with wreaths and flags, was brought into the city to-day with much ceremony. It was accompanied by his widow and relatives and hundreds of delegates and was conveyed through draped streets, lined with troops, to the Trade Union House, where guards of honour, composed of prominent officials, will take ten-minute turns. The public are being admitted to view the coffin.

It is stated that the Congress of the Soviets will elect MM. Kameneff, Ryoff and Tsurupa joint successors to M. Lenin in the presidency of the Council of Commissars and that there will be no change in the home and foreign policy of the Soviets.—Reuter.

THE CHARGES AGAINST MR. A. B. FALL

U. S. Ex-Secretary of Interior Accused of "Graft": An Alleged Deal in Oil

Washington, Jan. 24.

Mr. Edward L. Doheny, the Californian oil operator, testifying before the Senate committee which is investigating the charges against the ex-Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Albert B. Fall, in connexion with the Tea Dome Oil leases, stated that he lent Mr. Fall $100,000 on November 30, 1921. The loan was made by the witness personally and the money did not belong to any oil company in which he was interested. The purpose of the loan was to enable Mr. Fall to enlarge his ranch-holdings in New Mexico. There was no discussion at the time of any contract between the Government and the Doheny oil interests and the loan had no relation to any subsequent transactions relative to oil leases. Mr. Doheny declared that he left Los Angeles on January 17 in order to give this information, travelling via New Orleans to apprize Mr. Fall of his intention. He did not regret not giving the facts when he was previously before the Committee, for to have done so would have been "volunteering something in no way connected with the contracts with the Pan-American Petroleum and Transport Company." Mr. Doheny said that he had known Mr. Fall intimately for 30 years and his only thought was to help an old friend. He intended to require Mr. Fall to repay the loan.

Mr. Doheny's attorney suggested that President Coolidge should be asked to appoint a board of experts to examine all facts with regard to contracts with the Pan-American Oil Company and if the board reported that the contracts at the time of making were not wise, desirable and advantageous for the Government, the Company would re-convey to the Government all interests in such contracts.—Reuter's American Service.

REPORT ON IMPERIAL DEFENCE

London, Jan. 24.

The report of the sub-committee of the Imperial Defence Committee dealing with the co-ordination of the Army, the Navy and the Air Force has dismissed as impracticable the proposals for subordinating the Ministerial heads of the three services to a Minister of Defence or for amalgamating the three services.

On the other hand, the subcommittee are of opinion that the existing system of co-ordination by the Imperial Defence Committee is insufficient to secure full initiative and responsibility and needs strengthening.—Reuter.

CHINESE MINISTER AS FREEMASON

Mr. Chu Chao-hsin at Gallery Lodge in London

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Dec. 5.

Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, Chinese Chargé d'Affaires in London, was the guest of honour at the Installation night of the Gallery Lodge, London, on December 1, this Lodge being the one to which Parliamentary journalists belong. He was asked to respond to the toast "The Guests" and did so as follows:—

"I appreciate very much the honour you have done me by calling upon me to respond to the toast of the visiting Brethren.

"My Blue Lodge is called the International Lodge at Peking under American jurisdiction. I have been raised to the 32nd degree under the order of a Scottish rite, and I am also a Shriner of the Islam Temple at San Francisco. I understand there is no barrier between the English-speaking Lodges and therefore, as a member of an American Lodge, I am admitted as a visitor to your Lodge here. We cherish the best spirit in the Masonic Order. There is no discrimination between different nationalities or different races; one from the East is treated as a brother by one of the West. Kipling said: "East is East and West is West and ne'er the twain shall meet." This is untrue to-day. Confucius said: "Within the Four Seas all are brethren." If you were to tell the man in the street that you call a Chinaman your brother, he would be surprised—he would not believe it. I feel quite at home here with you, since you treat me not only as a guest—through your politeness—but as a brother in the spirit of fraternity.

"I am very glad to come here to-night to get acquainted with our brethren. This is a good opportunity for me to present myself to you, and through our acquaintance we hope to be able to bring about a still better international understanding. Some of you, no doubt, have quite a wrong impression of my countrymen, especially if you judge your views on what you may see on the film or on the stage. In fact, to take the rôle of a Chinaman on the stage is becoming a bit overdone. If you knew us in person you would realize that we are not the terrible creatures we are often depicted to be. After all, we are ordinary human beings and we possess a considerable amount of Eastern culture.

"I note with great satisfaction that this Lodge is known as the Press Lodge, all its members being journalists. I am delighted to meet our brother journalists for I, also, was engaged in journalism before I joined the Government service. Some officials are afraid of talking to journalists because they do not want to be quoted. I do not mind your quoting me and furthermore, I prefer to be quoted, not merely for sake of personal propaganda but for the sake of my country which should be made better known to your country. I would welcome your paying a visit to my country. There you would see the real Chinese life, entirely different from that depicted by the moving pictures and stories written by those who have not yet been in the Far East.

"I have great confidence in journalists who, like we diplomatists, always do their best to promote international interests and better international understanding."

CHINA AND LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Recent Arrears of Payment

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Dec. 13.

A problem has come to the front within the last few days with respect to the League of Nations China has, as is well-known, been somewhat in arrears with the payment of her assessments of the funds of the League, but now it is understood that she has remitted 310,000 gold dollars, a sum which roughly brings her up to the middle of 1922. It also seems that she has promised the payment of the balance at an early date.

At the same time, the Foreign Office at Peking, while announcing that the money has been remitted, has once more put on record its strong dissatisfaction at the elimination of China from the Council. It points out that the non-permanent members ought, by resolution of the Assembly, to be re-elected on a geographical basis and this has been absolutely disregarded on the occasion of the last vote which resulted in the substitution of China by Czecho-Slovakia.

Most people rather sympathize with China's point of view and deem it rather a mean device to eliminate her. I am beginning to understand, however, why Czecho-Slovakia wanted to secure membership of the Council of the League. It is because this body has a goood deal to do with the coming loan to Hungary which all surrounding nations do not seem particularly keen about. Of course, Czecho-Slovakia always poses as the Good Boy of Europe, but as a matter of fact, its policy is rather selfish and ultraracial.

LUDENDORFF'S BAPTISM OF FIRE

Scornful Story of Bavarian Rising

It has now been established (says the Berlin correspondent of the Central News) that the battle of the Odeonplatz, in Munich, which made an end of the short-lived Bavarian rising, also meant the baptism of fire for General Ludendorff. There is a witness in the person of Max Schoberth, of Asch, who stood next to the police sergeant who fell in the fight and was next but one to Ludendorff. His testimony is also borne out by members of the police troops.

The police had taken up a position across the end of a street and waited the oncoming of the revolutionaries. Captain Schraut, the commander of the police troops, advanced a few steps and called to Hitler: "Stop, and dissolve ranks." Without stopping Hitler called back: "Come with us." The left flank of the police Everybody, all Bavaria, is with us." To left flank of the police made a movement as if about to run over to Hitler, but Captain Schraut controlled them by a motion of his hand and shouted sternly back: "I don't negotiate. Don't come nearer."

At the same moment, without a word of command being given, the first shot was fired by someone in the Hitler ranks, and Captain Schraut fell dead on the pavement. Several policemen started firing then without waiting for an order, and the troops of the revolutionaries replied. A sergeant who carried two boxes of ammunition under his arm was the second to fall on the side of the police. Directly the police replied to their fire the Hitler troops became confused. They were only armed with revolvers and Hitler was pulled to the rear by some of his men.

Only Ludendorff ran up to the firing police, greatly excited, and shouted: "Stop firing. It's all up." He then walked to a police officer standing in the second rank. The shooting had stopped at once, and Ludendorff, after talking with some of the police officers, entered a motor-car standing in the rear and was driven off. All this had taken but a few seconds.

The "Prague Tageblatt," an old German daily newspaper, voices what a large number of Germans think when it says: "The moment was historical, not because Ludendorff was captured but because for the first time in his life he heard the whistle of a bullet and smelled the smoke of powder." Better late than never. A symbolical moment. The cadet receives his baptism of fire as ex-field marshal. So his military career is rounded up to perfection. Even the death of a hero, to which he so often sent his men, turns away from this field marshal the first time it meets him. The chance for Ludendorff was better than it had ever been in the whole five years of the world war. But Ludendorff threw up his hands—"Stop firing, please!"

SEEING BY WIRELESS

Scientist on a Dream of the Future: Experiments for the Amateur

"The day will come when people sitting in a picture theatre will be able to see a horse race on the screen while it is being run."

Not yet, however, is the scientist's dream of television completely fulfilled. The above prediction of Professor A. M. Low, the consulting engineer, of Victoria Street, S.W., may come true within the next 20 years, which he thinks is the earliest time that television will be a commercial proposition.

The Professor, who had been reading the accounts of Mr. C. F. Jenkins's recent success in television in America, began making experiments in wireless vision in 1914.

SEEING LIGHTS.

"To reproduce sight to a certain extent," Professor Low explained to a "Daily News" man yesterday, "is an easy thing. It is, however, very complicated and expensive, and the results are hopeless from a commercial point of view. I have not seen any suggestion that the main difficulty has been overcome.

"Any amateur who cares to spend the necessary time and money can fit up an apparatus in his house by which he can see whether a light in a room, say 20 miles distant, is burning or not.

"He may also be able to say that three lights, arranged in a certain way, are burning. But that is a long way from the stage when one can actually distinguish a face or the figure of a man or an elephant. At present that stage is incalculably difficult."

WIRELESS PICTURES.

"A picture to be wirelessed consists of thousands of little spots, and to reproduce a picture three inches square spot by spot may take an hour. It is rather coarse, after the fashion of a half-tone block printed on paper.

"If you could reduce that time," said the Professor, "to the period of cinematograph retentivity of vision, say, four-fifths of a second; the result would be wireless vision, but it would flicker badly."

There was nothing new, he went on, in reproducing lights and shadows by wireless, but it was a distinct advance if a method had been found of reducing the coarseness on the screen, so that it showed not merely rather shapeless shadows, but detail.

He thought that all that had been accomplished in this latest experiment was to use a mechanically-improved screen method.

ANGLO-POLISH COMMERCIAL TREATY

The Foreign Minister, M. Dmowski, the Minister of Commerce, M. Szydlowski, and the British Minister, Sir William Max Muller, signed the Anglo-Polish Commercial Treaty at the Foreign Office on November —. Both the public and the press express the greatest satisfaction at the signature.

The "Gazeta Warszawska" writes:—The treaty assures British and Polish citizens so-called national treatment, granting them equal commercial and industrial rights, and imposing equal taxation with the citizens of the country in which the business is carried on. Amongst the commercial treaties already signed the Anglo-Polish Treaty takes a special place. It differs from others in several characteristic clauses, opening wider scope favourable for both countries. The treaty forms a solid basis for economic co-operation between both countries, which, although it is as yet unsupported by treaty, is developing favourably, the last example being the credits opened by Sir George Talbot representing a union between British electrical concerns and Polish electrical concerns for the purchase of equipment. Thus Great Britain, who is already interested in the beet sugar and textile industries of Poland, is now co-operating also in the electrification of the country."

SKIN POISONED BY INSECT BITES AND BAD WATER

Inflamed Sores Soothed and Cured by ZAM-BUK

Bites from disease-carrying insects and the use of bad water so badly poisoned Mr. C. Breakspeare's skin that it broke out into terrible sores, through which he had to be invalided home. Mr. Breakspeare, who, with the Berkshire Yeomanry, served in the Eastern campaign, writes from Waverley Rd., Reading, England, as follows:—

"My terrible skin trouble developed whilst I was out on service in The East and it was complicated by insect bites and by poisoning through washing in unclean water. In spite of four months' treatment from a Military doctor, the fiery disease never showed sign of abating, and I had to be invalided home with the 'unfit.'

"It was then that I was persuaded to get a supply of Zam-Buk. After only two dressings of this wonderful herbal balm my sores were a deal better, and there was less pain. Thanks to Zam-Buk it wasn't long before my skin was completely freed of the poison and the sores perfectly healed."

Mr. E. H. Burnes, of Tamkohi P.O., Gorakhpur, N.W Province, writes: "Through the effects of heat, hard itching, inflamed lumps, similar to those caused by mosquitos, appeared on my chest.

"The places bled, discharged, and formed into scabs. Medical treatment failed, but in this powerful herbal Zam-Buk I found speedy ease. It soon stopped the irritation, softened the scabs, and healed the sore places quickly and permanently. I also find Zam-Buk an excellent first-aid for everyday cuts, burns and wounds."

No mere "dressing" or compound of animal fats and crude drugs can possibly possess the unique curative virtue of Zam-Buk, which is a pure, concentrated balm made of rare and costly herbal extracts. For its great value in bad legs, eczema, itch, heat sores and rashes, piles, ulceration, abscesses, inflammation, sore feet, insect bites, and all skin injuries, a box of Zam-Buk should be kept always handy. Of chemist and dispensaries everywhere. Direct from agents:—Messrs. Wakefield & Co., (China), Ld., S. Y. Sheng Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

anti-Socialists vote. It will be noted that in each of these cases, with the exception of the Kilmarnock Division, it was the Liberal nominee who was at the bottom of the poll. Liberals would have been well advised to avoid these suicidal contests, but unfortunately local difficulties generally intervened. The desire of each side to have a candidate of its own is natural and intelligible. But under the new conditions it can be indulged in most cases only with highly unpleasant results.

The results of the Election in Scotland contain a vital lesson for the moderate voter, who is less concerned with the return of a Unionist or Liberal candidate than with defeating Socialism. If we had Scottish Home Rule to-day, and the same short-sighted electoral tactics on the part of the opposing parties, Scotland would have a Socialist Government in power, with such extremists as Mr. Wheatley or Mr. Kirkwood, as Prime Minister, and with Mr. Maxton at the head of the Scottish Education Department. Yet such a Government would represent a hopeless minority of the people of Scotland, for the anti-Socialist vote was in the ratio of more than two to one. Nevertheless, the Socialists are only six short of having an absolute majority on the Scottish Grand Committee.

COMBES IN EVIDENCE

Quite a number of gaffers of respectable attainment have been returned to Westminster. Though the two games go together very much, golf does on the one is seldom assisted by a noticeable flair for the other, indeed only two Prime Ministers have ever won the Parliamentary Handicap and Balfour has done quite to lose count off a handicap in the region of seven, and if years ago, when his handicap was 16, the late Mr. Punch Law came out on top. The golf of David Lloyd George is as erratic as we might expect it to be. One cannot help thinking that some bunkers must have heard the Limehouse touch. Yet there is a tablet on the New course which says: "Mr Lloyd George did this hole in one." There's fame for you.

LOCAL OPTIONISTS

Polling in Scotland on the Local Veto Vote was practically concluded, and, taking the country as a whole, "No Licence" has lost ground during the last three years instead of gaining it.

The leading Prohibitionists are themselves admitting a disappointing result. Further, in almost every case, especially in the cities and large towns, in which "dry" areas have been created, the result has merely been to increase the custom of licence-holders in adjoining "wet" areas.

There is no reason to believe that organisation by the Prohibitionists for another three years will alter the mood of the country in any substantial way. Those who voted "No Change" did not mean to affirm that they wished no change in the licensing laws—the third option, "limitation" of licences obtained only a negligible number of votes. Indeed the desire for change may be said to be unanimous in Scotland; even the Trade professes an anxiety on that score. What is eagerly looked for is a reform which is practical and will do something definite and tangible to mitigate the admitted evils of the drinking customs of this country.

AN UNWILLING "SPORT"

A West Stirlingshire canvasser who volunteered to amuse the baby so as to permit a female voter to go to the polling station and was off on a charge of the milk for a prolonged period has suffered more, he says, from the chaff than from the experience. It seems that he had had a fellow victim at Edinburgh. This second one was not kept waiting for long but when the voter returned she announced to his chagrin that she had voted for the other fellow. "But you're a nice man all the same," she added by way of compensation and his comment was a grudging "Oh, I'm a sport." But Echo heard stronger language later on.

WHEL IT BE A "KILL JOY"

In the opinion of that good judge, C. B. Macfarlane, the golf ball with the lighter core—if it does come to be the standard fixed upon—will sound the death knell of the mashie niblick, a club which, he says, is responsible for many failures. The game, he admits, however, will become even more interesting, and scoring will be just as low. That, of course, may be quite all right from the point of view of the first-class golfer. But what about the rank and file? The greatest joy of the ordinary player is to get in a hefty drive. The heavy core (31 pennyweights) suits them nicely. They have come to like it. And now with the lighter core they are going to lose at least 10 yards with their drive, and a like distance with the second. There is certainly not much for them to enthuse over in the proposed change.

HE COLLECTED HALFPENNIES.

The much-paragraphed Wiltshire man who has just died after having spent the last dozen years of his life collecting halfpennies, and who, when offered his choice of a sixpence and a copper always chose the latter coin, may not have been so eccentric as he was believed to be. In fact, there may have been method in his madness, as there was in the case of the old Scots worthy who had the same peculiarity. He was once challenged by the village minister on the matter. His reply was illuminating in the extreme. "Eegs, but I ken fine the saxpence will buy me mair tobacco. But it's just like this. Gin I tak' the saxpence I'll no get another chance at the bawbees." Which was good reasoning on the half-penny wise, six-pence foolish basis.

LAUGHTER IN COURT.

In the course of a lecture on "Humours of the Scottish Bar," Sheriff Orr told the following stories. A prisoner who was charged with theft at first pleaded guilty, then withdrew his plea, and the case went to trial. After the case had been heard the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. Discharging the accused, the Judge addressed him thus—"Prisoner at the bar, you have admitted you are a thief, the jury have found you are a liar, you now leave the Court without a stain on your character."

In another case the jury had retired to consider their verdict. By and by they rang the bell to ask if they could have a glass of water. According to the law of Scotland, it should be said, the jury are forbidden meat or drink once they have been enclosed until they have returned their verdict. The Judge, looking quite grave, delivered his decision slowly and deliberately. "Well, ye canna' ca' it meat; and it certainly isna' drink: they can have their water."

LABOUR IN THE GENERAL ELECTION

The Women's Vote Taking Place as Arbiter of National Destinies

From Our Trade Union Correspondent

Manchester, Dec. 10.

A reporter who visited the headquarters of the Conservative Party on the eve of the General Election was informed that the leaders had a quiet confidence in the result. At the Liberal headquarters they were more optimistic and foretold a great victory. At the Labour headquarters he was told that Labour expected to come out of the contest with 171 seats. At the time of writing there are 16 results to come in and those cannot materially affect the result. The Conservatives have lost 87 seats, and now number 252. Labour has made a net gain of 47, and now number 192. The Liberals have made a net gain of 33, and now number 153. All parties are amazed at the result. The Conservatives were dubious of success, and disturbed if they had not foreseen such a crushing defeat. The Liberals, who had the most known stockers, the support of the whole of the popular press, the most attractive election cry, "Everything you buy will cost you more," and a definite unity between its long-united leaders, are astounded that all these advantages have only achieved so small an advance, for the united party has less than a quarter of the seats in Parliament. But the Party that is most amazed at the result is Labour.

LABOUR "READY TO FIGHT"

Labour strongly objected to the General Election. Its leaders saw in the Tariff Reform proposals a serious menace to Labour's monopoly of votes for dear bread, and foresaw that its enemies would reunite the Liberals. They were also very short of money for a new electoral campaign. Nor had they any immediate cure to offer for unemployment. The Capital Levy is not advocated as a cure for unemployment. They thought they would be lucky if they lost no more than 50 seats. But as the campaign proceeded they became more optimistic. Candidates were nominated who were compelled to borrow the nomination fee, and who collected the money at out-of-door meetings to have accommodation for indoor meetings. Everywhere canvassers reported that working women were taking a great interest in Labour propaganda. It was thought that the Party would not, after all, use any seats. Younger members thought it might gain some. The result surpassed all their expectations. Constituency after constituency in which a Labour candidate had been put up for propagandist purposes and without any expectation of success fell to Labour. It polled 4,348,379 votes and came so near success in many constituencies that 20,000 more votes distributed where they would be most effective would have made Labour the strongest party in the House of Commons. If their present rate of advance can be maintained they should, in a year or two, be more powerful than all the other parties combined.

All Parties are united in agreeing that the women have achieved this. On the whole this cannot be denied. Prior to the extension of the franchise to women there used to be great differences of opinion on how women would vote when they had a vote. Some said it would be for the nicest and most pleasant spoken man. Others thought it would be for the policy. Events have proven both theories to be right. The most handsome and best groomed men had a walk-over in the 1918 election as far as the bulk of women's votes were concerned. Money was plentiful, employment was good, voting was a new game that two could play at in those halycon days. And bloody revolution was always a sure anti-Labour card to play. Labour and Bolshevism were then almost synonymous terms in anti-Labour propaganda, and every woman dreaded civil or any other kind of war.

THE PROMISED HEAVEN UNREALIZED.

But in 1920 a change began to take place. Wages came down heavily, unemployment grew, and universal peace seemed as far off as ever. Women were unlike their menfolk in that they had not been born little Liberals or Conservatives. Their outlook was more matter of fact and utilitarian. They began to realize that the vote might mean better houses, more housekeeping money, cheaper food, and greater security against unemployment and sickness. It had a money value. Its use or misuse might affect their babies, or start and stop wars in which their sons might fight.

It was widely remarked in the 1922 General Election that women were beginning to take a deep interest in politics and were asking the candidates very pertinent questions. Their great mistake was a disposition to take election promises on their face value. No small part of the disorders that have been a feature of Conservative and Liberal meetings during this election have sprung from the women voters' indignation that the candidates who promised them a new heaven and earth at the last General Election have not delivered the goods yet. The consternation of some of the older politicians at being taken so literally has been very amusing to witness. They are slowly beginning to realize that the women do not know the elementary rules of the game.

THE ADVANTAGE OF NO PAST.

It can be seen by this that Labour's major asset is the fact that it has no past. It promises much and has never had an opportunity to show what it can perform. Its success lies not so much in its own positive virtues as in the vices and mistakes of its opponents. And the things it does promise are those calculated to make the greatest appeal to women. A noticeable feature of the election has been the way in which many small Labour majorities at the previous election have been increased. It is normally supposed that the swing backwards and forwards of the electoral pendulum transfers this kind of seat to the opposing party at the following election. It is now evident that electors who in the past have swung from one side to the other are sticking to Labour until it has shown what it can do when in Power.

We have asked the Labour workers in several constituencies where Labour men have been returned what they consider to be the most effective propaganda work. The answers are the same in every case. Persistent house to house canvassing and a wide circulation of the anti-Labour candidates' Parliamentary record. Labour meetings and the Labour press were said to have very little value. It is difficult to persuade any but Labour enthusiasts to come to the one or buy the other. Systematic canvassing is now almost exclusively confined to the Labour Party. It is an unpleasant task demanding great enthusiasm. Liberal and Conservative organizations are now sufficiently grateful for any working class support at the ballot box and do not expect their proletarian supporters to actually work for the cause. Personal canvasses by the candidate or his wife are going out of fashion. The electorate is too big to make it feasible. The old type election literature, doggerel verses, and cartoons, have no effect on women.

A SIMPLE TEST FOR CANDIDATES.

The great vote-catching device of Labour is a comparatively new development. It is well known that Labour moves many amendments to Parliamentary Bills and that all these amendments favour the workers. Many people consider it a waste of time as there is no possibility of any of them being carried. They would not think so if they saw the use made of them in the constituencies. If Labour is attacking a seat held by a member of one of the older parties that member's record of votes on all these Bills and amendments is ensured enormous publicity by huge posters on the walls and handbills delivered from house to house. It is useless for him to plead the Party Whips. The question put to him is quite definite. Did he, or did he not on such a date vote for a reduction in Old Age Pensions, or against the Labour Amendment to increase the unemployment allowance, or against any other item that personally touches the querist?

If a Labour member is endeavouring to retain his seat a different form is used. All the pro-Labour votes for working class measures are given in one column, and all the anti-Labour votes of his predecessor are given in another. "Who is your friend now?" and an invitation to ask the anti-Labour candidate his reasons for so voting is the customary conclusion to this, the strongest propagandist weapon Labour now possesses.

FAILURE OF THE PRESS.

Another great cause for satisfaction among Labour workers is the surprising impotence of the syndicated popular press to do them any harm. All the London and provincial newspapers of Lord Rothermere and Lord Beaverbrook; including this recently acquired Hulton group, were unanimous in advising their readers to do one thing—vote against Labour. Its first favourites were Winston Churchill, McCurdy, and the other ex-National Liberal members. After them the rest of the Liberal Party, and the rank and file of the Conservatives. Then came Lord Curzon, and Mr. Baldwin, and last of all; disguised under a German rendering of the Second International—the British Labour Party. It is noticeable that the most sensational defeats were suffered by members of the first group. Churchill, McCurdy, Sanders Sir Alfred Mond, and others were easily defeated. The most sensational successes achieved by Labour, and in those parts of the country where the Beaverbrook and Rothermere newspapers have the largest circulation. 22 seats were won in London, 13 of them being net gains.

Few features of the election are so surprising as the mistaken estimates of the older Party leaders on the mentality of the working classes. Liberal organizers appeared to think that Winston Churchill was a strong candidate. He is the most hated man in politics by the workers. They distrust his cleverness and will always associate him with some of the most disastrous episodes in the war. To a lesser extent this distrust and antipathy is felt for all the better-known pre- and post war politicians. Hardcastle, the best known man in the Labour Party, has been defeated. Asquith has only retained his seat through a division in the local Labour ranks that resulted in two Labour candidates putting up for election. Their joint votes exceeded his by over a thousand. Lloyd George, for all his famed oratorical wizardry, would not stand any chance in an English industrial constituency.

COMMUNISTS EJECTED

Another noticeable feature of the election was the defeat of all the avowed Communist candidates and all those well known Communist who put up for election with the Labour ticket. There are no avowed Communists in the new Parliament but many Communist sympathizers. Among the unsuccesful were Saklatvala the Parsee windbag; Paul, the editor of the "Communist Review," who polled just over 5,000 votes in Rusholme, Manchester; and Phillips Price, who nearly achieved success in Gloucester. A surprising feature of the elections was the size of many of these extremists' polls. Communists believe that if a Communist candidate was put up in every constituency the Party would poll a million votes.

With the termination of this General Election Labour believes that the older political parties have played their last and most powerful card, and lost. With the solitary exception of Commander Kenworthy all the old Radical elements in the Liberal Party have left it or joined the Labour Party. It has nothing to offer the worker. Its ultimate end is fusion with the Conservatives. Protection will come in due course. It is inevitable. But it will be Labour that will put it on the Statute book.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19. As a consequence of opposition on the part of the Philippine Government and people to the application of the United States Shipping Laws to the Islands for the present.—Reuter's American Service.

ern Kuangtung, from among whom Chen Chiung-ming prefers to recruit his troops, are much more closely akin to their neighbours in Kuangsi than to any breed in Kuangtung.

There are 13 languages spoken within the geographical bounds of the province of Kansu, six to the writer's knowledge in Sinkiang and no one knows how many in Szechuan, Yunnan and Kueichow. In Fukien the Foochow and Amoy people regard each other as foreigners and speak a different language. The Kansu Mohammedan differs as radically from the Kansu son of Han as the German does from the Frenchman, and the two breeds like each other no better. One could cite these illustrations by the column and the further one goes the more obvious it becomes that if provincial lines were to concide with lines of breed or language China would be a much worse patchwork than modern Europe and that its division into 50 provinces would not satisfy the Chinese people if they were all breed-conscious self-determinists.

TENDING ONLY TO DISRUPTION.

The propagation of the local autonomy idea serves to foster prejudices in China which make for disruption and distintegration. It serves no good purpose to help the Chinese crystallize their prejudices along provincial lines. Everyone who has lived in the interior of China knows that inter-community prejudices are often stronger than inter-provincial suspicions and dislikes. The rank outsider from the Occident is received more tolerantly in any unspoiled Chinese community than the northerner is in Canton or the Shanghai man in Peking. The Pekinese regards the Tientsin man with suspicion, dislikes his mannerisms cordially and finds his dialect more annoying than the sputter and lisp of a Southerner trying to speak Mandarin. The villager in China makes every allowance for the "distant guest" and feels called upon to overlook his peculiarities with a fine magnanimity, but he has no patience whatever with the benighted barbarian from the other side of the mill stream who says lei for lai, or tsang for chang, who goes through his funeral rites in a slightly different fashion, or puts a different sort of roof tree on his house. In one sense of the word the untravelled Chinese people are intensely provincial, but the less difference there is between any two breeds of them, the more do these differences grate upon them. Neither a brogue nor a burr are barriers to any stratum of society in London, but Cockney puts a man in a class from which there is no exit. An English accent is neither a social nor a business disadvantage in Chicago. It may even elicit sympathy and make friends for the afflicted one. But there one has to live down a Boston or a Georgia accent.

Chinese provincialism is no more a conscious provincial feeling, split into 22 and coinciding with 22 provinces, than is inter-district provincialism in America a state feeling, split into 48 parts coinciding with 48 states.

Chinese provincialism furnishes no better warrant for splitting China into 22 semi-independent states than American provincialism furnishes for a similar decentralizing process in America. Types and dialects vary almost as much in England, Scotland and Wales from district to district as they do in China. But if the British Government were to collapse and disorder were prevalent, the man who suggested that unity and peace could be restored through a federation of semi-independent shire governments, each adapted to the temperament and idiosyncrasies of its native folks, would be thought criminally insane.

HOW FEDERATION SERVES.

Federation is a step towards unity and centralization when separated units are being brought together which have never before been united under one highly centralized authority. Federation to this end in America when the 13 American colonies, which had no tradition of unity, were first imperfectly welded into a nation. It served the same purpose for the grandfather of William II when the German kingdoms, principalities, duchies, free cities and what not were first formed into a loose jointed Empire. In a state which has developed a tradition of unity, which has outgrown federation of autonomous units and has achieved centralization of authority, a tendency to revert to federation on a plea of provincial rights or prejudices spells nothing but disintegration and is an omen of collapse. The United States once displayed this retrogressive tendency, which was fostered by a provincialism the like of which China has not experienced for centuries. This tendency was crushed in a war which cost a million lives, but there are few Americans now who do not believe that the results were worth the price.

Those who play upon Chinese provincialism, attempt to group Chinese prejudices into provincial blocs and advocate provincial autonomy are engaged upon a work of destruction which is all too easy. To rebuild a new China out of the scattered fragments, once they were effectually scattered and were conscious of it would we quite a different task. It would be just as difficult to rebuild China and provide her with an efficient Government after her dismemberment into autonomous little states with a newly developed state consciousness as it would be to form a closely knit federation of the portions of Europe, Asia and Africa which once went to make up the Roman Empire. China is no more homogeneous than modern Europe and if she were split into as many mutually hostile or suspicious parts as Europe and each part were to develop its petty local prejudices under self-government, it would be just as much of a task to reunite China as it would be to evolve a European federation with a respectable central government at this moment.

NO POPULAR FAITH IN IT.

If all tradition of unity in China were dead, if the provinces had already developed the provincial consciousness of little independent nations, the recognition of provincial autonomy might be an essential step towards federation, and federation a normal step towards reunification, peace and the evolution of a government enjoying real authority. The point is that China has not reached this pass and, under the worst conditions, could not reach it for many years to come. Such division as there is in China is not along provincial lines, but along military and political lines which are of absolutely no interest to the great masses of the people. The tradition of unity built up under several millenniums of Imperial government is by no means dead; and opposed to the centrifugal tendency of the unassimilated border peoples of China and to narrow provincialism there is growing up a new spirit of nationalism, born in part of improved communications but more largely of fear of foreign aggression. This promises to knit China more closely together than she has ever been in her history.

The truth of the matter is that as a popular movement the provincial autonomy movement simply does not exist. As a political faith it does exist because it serves the ends of the fathers of disruption and disorder and gives them some sort of an apology for reverting to a feudal system of Government which China outgrew 2000 years ago and which has been subject to spasmotic revivals only in the epochs which the Chinese regard as the darkest in their history. There used to be some reason to believe that the provincial potentates were sincere in their profession of the faith. There is none now. The advocacy of provincial autonomy now brands a provincial chief as a would-be reformer who has not the courage to announce himself a rebel and raise the standard of revolution, or as an exploiter of the people who jealously guards his monopoly upon the loot of a province and has not the courage to proclaim himself a bandit—in either case a hypocrite. Repuplican history, particularly recent history, proves this to the hilt.

ALWAYS AN OFFICIAL DODGE.

One hears virtually nothing of provincial autonomy when there is a weak Government in Peking which is not likely to interfere forcibly with the provincial chiefs, unless it is from Tuchuns who are themselves weak, are afraid of their neighbours and are seeking the moral support of the radicals. A central administration which threatens to be strong and aggressive and which promises to exact some degree of obedience from the provincial chiefs always elicits loud professions of the autonomist faith from the independent exploiters. More was heard of provincial autonomy at the different times when Yuan Shih-kai, Tuan Chi-jui, Chang Tso-lin and Wu Pei-fu dominated affairs in Peking and threatened to reunite China under a Central Government than at any other time.

Chang Tso-lin believes in autonomy, the autonomy of Manchuria, but not in provincial autonomy because he governs Kirin and Heilungkiang as well as Fengtien. If he were to recover his former influence in national affairs and were to shift his headquarters to Peking he would make short work of Manchurian autonomy if anyone there had the temerity to proclaim it. Lu Yung-hsiang believes in the autonomy of Chêkiang because, for several years past, the Peking Government and all his neighbours have been hostile to his party and his chief. If Marshal Tuan were restored to power in Peking General Lu's first step, by way of celebration, would be to throw the provisional constitution into the fire and cancel autonomy.

Chen Chiung-ming has always been one of the sturdiest champions of provincial autonomy. He said that he wanted complete independence so that he could make Kuangtung into a model province and that he would then be ready to join other model provinces in a federation. The majority of foreigners in the South had great faith in his sincerity and gave him much moral support. The writer, among others, assisted in boosting him and more than once tried to spread the Chen Chiung-ming gospel in Wu Pei-fu's camp. Wu Pei-fu has never believed in provincial autonomy but, up to a year ago, gave General Chen all credit for sincerity. Then when Dr. Sun went to Canton again and General Chen was forced to retire to Waichow (Huichow) Loyang received a telegram from Chen Chiung-ming asking for support, which appeal was supplemented by an offer to drop all talk of provincial autonomy. The impression which this made can easily be imagined. Chao Heng-ti has always pretended to believe in provincial autonomy. When Tan Yen-kai invaded his province and threatened to take Changsha again as he had done in the Spring of 1920, Chao also called upon Wu Pei-fu for help and his first offer as a quid pro quo was the cancellation of Hunan's autonomy.

The whole autonomy movement was officially inspired in the first instance and autonomy propaganda has waxed and waned from time to time as it has suited official interests. Some popular interest was once aroused because the idea fostered local prejudices and flattered local vanities, but the popular reaction against the idea is now stronger than the movement ever was. The people want peace under an efficient government so badly that they do not want to see time wasted on any more experiments with imported ideas which are wholly foreign to their history and traditions. The new nationalistic spirit, which has grown out of a fear of foreign aggression, which was fostered by Japan's policy for so many years and which is now growing in confidence and assertiveness, completely swamps all popular thought of reuniting China by first dividing her into a number of independent parts and then reuniting them.

IN SPIRIT UNITED.

In spirit China is more of a unit now than she has ever been. Only officialdom is divided within itself. This is sufficient to keep China in turmoil, but it is no warrant for dividing the people of China into separate administrative units and for cultivating provincialism, since such steps would serve the interest of no one but the provincial chiefs who farm the various provinces. They would naturally be delighted to trade with a Central Government, paying lip service in exchange for a sealed charter to loot their bailiwicks with impunity. A peace founded upon a federation of provincial chiefs secure in their autonomy would simply put the seal of authority upon existing impossible conditions. It would be a step towards fresh revolutions and fresh interprovincial feuds and more banditry because it would put a blessing upon the worst features of the Tuchun system. Under such a peace the Central Government would have even less power than it now enjoys to interfere, to remove evil officials, to check official rapacity, to force bandit suppression or to direct the movemantt of the provincial armies. In reply to an order from the capital the provincial chief would stand on his autonomy and flatly refuse obedience. He would say that under his provincial constitution (written at his dictation and amended at his pleasure) he had certain rights, that his provincial assembly (appointed from the various districts by his military subordinates) had granted him certain other rights, and that the assembly (sitting under the "protection" of a brigade of his troops with machine guns, pointed inwards, at the doors) had sustained him in these rights. Until the Government from above or the people from below have established some sort of a check upon provincial officialdom, the extension of the provincial autonomy idea would not mean autonomy or self government for their worst enemies so that the people would be left wholly at their mercy without recourse or appeal.

It is the silliest of all silly schemes for restoring peace in China because it plays directly into the hands of the very people who are the fathers of turmoil and frees them from discipline, instead of eliminating them or beating a sense of their obligations into them, as any workable plan for permanent peace must do.

THE EDITOR'S REWARD

I.

St. Peter stood at Heaven's gate,
With golden key in hand,
Who'd shuffled off this mortal coil,
Wh'd shuffled off this mortal coil,
And sought the Promised Land.
Quoth Peter, "Name one earthly deed
"That merits golden crown."
Replied the shade, "O Peter, heed
"The plea of one in direst need
"Of rest: nor send me down!"

II.

"Know then, that I, an editor,
"Long dwelt in far Cathay.
"Full many decades was compelled "To read the letters, all mis-spelled,
"The postman brought each day.
"No topic fresh e'er pierced the gloom.
"Forgive this salty tear!
"Bethink you of the nom de plume
"Misguided writers all assume,
"Nor vary, year by year!"

III.

"Old Reader.—Veritas.—A Friend.
"Subscriber.—Victim.—no
"Surcease from him with axe to grind,
"Although his ev'ry screed is signed
"Pro Bono Publico!
"An Anxious Mother.—X. Y. Z.—
"Indignant and Fair Play.—
"No sooner was each out of bed,
"He'd read what yesterday was said,
"Then give his pen full sway."

IV.

"Enough!" cried Peter. "Come within."
And straight unlocked the door.
Yet, ere he entered into bliss,
Some trepidation smote, I wis,
The tearful editor.
Till he beheld a golden line
Of letters, high exposed.
Then, thrilled, as by the strongest wine,
He gazed upon the welcome sign—
"All correspondence closed."

THE BALLAD OF BURIED FLOWERS

(Translated from the Chinese.)

The cold rain sings, the vine-leaf flies,
The blossom with its fragrance dies,
And in a corner of the skies
The petals of the sunlight fall.
Fading, the red forsakes its glow
And pale the tints of summer show
Where dallying perfumes fainter grow—
And no one pitieth.

The wandering thread-like silken blaze
That trellised all the autumn days
And garlanded with trembling haze
The old pavilion's carven wall
Is gone with all the ghosts of spring—
And light the leaves of willow cling
Where soft embroidered curtains swing
To wait the winter's breath.

There where the maiden silently
Sees how the lengthening shadows flee
And grieves the day that cannot be
But must go down to other days,
The cords of sorrow wind and wind
And, silken too, creep in to bind
Her heart with pain and ever find
New torment for her breast.

She thinks the flower that shines so gay
Must somewhere bloom, when once away
To mouldering death and dark decay
Its earthly splendour disappears.
The willows and the elms forsake
Their pastures by the reedy lake
And send their 'prisoned souls to take
In Heaven their glorious rest.

The dainty stars of plum and peach
For ever paths of dalliance preach
And whirling madly call to each
Their counsel: in the dance be gay!
Nor care they for the fatal sob
Of icy winds that foully rob
Their lives away—but wait the throb
Of spring's recurring scene.

For surely comes the year again
And peach and plum and swallow-train
To build its nest for April rain
And twitter in the sun-warmed caves.
Ah me! though Nature's love be great
Who knows the seal of next year's fate,
Or whether any maid shall wait
Beside the painted screen?

THE PILLARS OF CLOUD AND FIRE

A Sermon Preached by the Rev. A. N. Rowland, in Union Church, Shanghai, on January 6, 1924

"The Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to lead them the way, and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light, that they might go by day and night."—Exod. xiii. 21.

Life has often been likened to a journey, but it is the Bible that gives it the Land of Promise for a goal. How different is Matthew Arnold's preface:

"With weary footsteps we pass
Slowly, oppressed as storm or
Or night or gathering
Soon to be out of our way.
In the heavy air and the noise
Where the great and fortunate live
Stands or lies Overmind."

From that grim description we are glad to turn to the story of Exodus which lights up the perilous way with gleams of hope and a sense of guidance. Life is distinguished from mere existence by having a goal, some prize ahead to quicken our steps and set teeth on our perverse. Hope is a staff, walk hence with that, and manage it against despairing thoughts.

Besides the sense of a goal life consists in what we gain by the way, increasing knowledge and power over the conditions of existence. And it is right to make progress in regard to everything around us in visible world. But what is the good of getting on, and what is the value of progress, if it is confined to things that are less than ourselves? A man as he grows gets a bigger hold on language, on money, on position, but these are only instruments of his soul, and the question is what does he do with them. Does he prostitute his gifts or keep his gains to himself? Then it were better for him to be unsuccessful and obscure. Along with all progress, and the soul of it, must be advance in the knowledge of God through obedience and in power with God through prayer. (This is life eternal that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent.")

A CHEQUERED JOURNEY.

True life then is an advance in the knowledge, faith and service of God, and on the first Sunday of a new year we might consider the terms of that advance. It is evidently a chequered journey dark and light keep one another close company like the squares on a draught board. You don't proceed long in the sunlight before your way is shadowed by a cloud, you don't tramp far in the shadows before there comes a burst of sunshine. You will admit that life has been made up like that so far, and you may be sure it will be so in 1924.

What is the meaning of it? Surely it is to keep us spiritually on the move. That is the lesson of the alternating signals in the wilderness. In the daylight gloomed the cloud, in the night time glowed the fire. And by this very contrariness of things the people were reminded and convinced of a Presence that could guide them. The Lord went before them" in this fashion "that they might keep moving by day and by night."

THE PERIL OF MONOTONY.

Read the story of experience, how we have got into the clutch of habit, mood or circumstances, and said within ourselves, "I shall never be moved." Then came the contradiction—the gloom on our gladness, the shine on our sorrow. And we were wise to accept these changes as the signals of a Will that was greater and wiser than ours—"the holy, perfect and acceptable will of God." When we read them as the call to move on we can

"Rejoice that man is linked
From change increasingly
The soul engages to be fretted".

It is not long since Father Stanton of St. Alban's, Holborn, finished a life of many hard storm and sunshine. His ritualism was too high even for the present Bishop of London, but his heart was full of the love of God. He was preaching on the text, because they have no changes therefore they fear not God," and went on to say:

Monotony is very perilous to the spiritual life because it saps every healthy tide in the soul's spirit. Monotony of health or sickness, prosperity or adversity, even of the weather, leads men to forget God. That is why God sends changes." I believe that is the key to the parable of the changing pillars in the wilderness by which the people of Israel were taught to advance from one stage to the next of promise.

A CHANGE SEEN.

(1) The Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud. When he says that was not meant to the physical eye, the Lord manifested himself in a cloud, not a casual, harmless, distant cloud, but such as often rises in the [illegible] and the centre of it, seen from a point of perplexity, or disquiet and fear. A cry [illegible] towards Heaven has given this vivid description in a recent book. Suddenly a [illegible] dust storm from the North [illegible] Cairo was on [illegible] the centre of the storm was [illegible] as the place where it would [illegible] the horizons of a mile. The very shape of a cloud [illegible] changed its aspect [illegible] as like that one [illegible] come a phantom because of some cloud that has risen from without or within. [illegible] disturbance of our ease, the disintegration of our plans. The details of life are blown about our eyes and ears and our world [illegible]

Here is a man who can be [illegible] has business for the sake of his son, and he [illegible] the plan of his own [illegible] for the news came that his boy had been struck down in the fields of Flanders or worse than that, stunned by [illegible]. And his landscape became [illegible] night, as the promise [illegible] his goal.

COMFORT IN THE CLOUD.

What shall he do [illegible] that pillar of cloud? What can he do but invest it with the presence of God, and take it for a signal to advance to a new perception of values, a new understanding of you? That was the message that John Bright made at the instance of Richard Cobden, who roused him from the apathy of his sorrow at the death of his wife, and persuaded him to take this pillar of cloud as a sign to go forward in the service of God and service of God. So may we in the [illegible] to grow harder, rise up and walk humbly with our God!

But the cloud sometimes [illegible] from within. Here is the case of a wealthy father. Such [illegible] loss and every kind of [illegible] What there does it mean? He, as people carelessly say, he has all that heart can wish. But has he? There is the rub. A pillar of cloud [illegible] but to cause [illegible] pause, but to cause [illegible] to call things to [illegible] them, to show [illegible] needs that [illegible] Life is [illegible] losing wasted on [illegible] the sun of the [illegible] becomes a [illegible] to [illegible] the young [illegible] and [illegible] Now [illegible] has found [illegible] the way to [illegible] cloud of their dissatisfaction [illegible] and they have passed on to [illegible] a nobler estimate of their fellows, a dearer consciousness of God.

It is to this we are called forward in the events that seem most adverse and forbidding, and it is not so easy to say Yes because it means surrender of the will. The difficulty is reflected in Newman's hymn:

"I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Thou shouldst lead me on:
I loved to choose and see my path;
but now lead Thou me on."

A PILLAR OF FIRE BY NIGHT.

(2) But there is another sign of the divine presence and leadership. There was a pillar of fire by night—a glow against the dark, a herald of the morning in the long watches of the night. That is surely a parable of the Lord's presence, and it is written in many a man's experience. How often the conditions of life have settled on like a cold mist from a sullen sky and adversity stares in upon us through the decades of [illegible] ment, to no apparent reason, without any traceable cause the [illegible] and sunshine appears. And the dark background [illegible] only enhances the glow of the divine goodness [illegible] presence. Those [illegible] pictured a soul in very grievous trouble, with God bending over as a mother would. "See, I will allure her and bring her into the [illegible] and speak comfortably [illegible] and her vale of trouble shall be her doorway of hope and she shall sing there." The sensitive William Cowper [illegible] on the strength of [illegible] and gave us the glorious hymn which begins, [illegible] a light surprises the Christian while he sings, His the Lord who rises with healing in [illegible] These may be poetical [illegible] but they are also [illegible] experiences, and I [illegible] from the time of which we [illegible]

[illegible] during the Great War, [illegible] "Elie Khan," Russian [illegible] near Paris, wrote in his diary: "My faith did not shed its soothing [illegible] and the [illegible] thing better beyond, I know not how one's heart would endure it all. But thanks to that faith, if we are not, and ought not to be [illegible] [illegible] a pillar of fire, and it was a sign [illegible] to keep moving in faith and hope and the labours of love.

[illegible] is another witness, this time a soldier disabled, whose record has reached me only this Christmas. He describes his night of doubt and sorrow" in these words; "Sick at heart and [illegible] for the woman who had promised to love me whatever [illegible] turned scornfully away when weariness and wounds had shattered my life. [illegible] my back on my friends, and set out upon the [illegible] that haunt [illegible] Pot one [illegible] poisoned [illegible] Chinese road, [illegible] velvet [illegible] led me gently upward, and [illegible] discovery of [illegible] and health [illegible] for the body as the soul" "Sometimes a light surprises" because God is the Father of lights and has [illegible] [illegible] is only a [illegible] and, like [illegible] of this earth that [illegible] can only stand for a little while between us and the "joy that cometh in the morning." When we are visited [illegible] cloud of sorrow, the [illegible] the gloom, or [illegible] the shadow of death we [illegible] shall surely find [illegible] tinged with the [illegible] sun that is still [illegible] below our horizon.

What can we do, o'er whom the unbeholden
[illegible] which we
[illegible]
[illegible] and, with
[illegible]
[illegible] the softly of a Hope."

[illegible] parable which we might take for a motto through the year. (1) The Lord goes before us to keep us moving on alike through the perils of the garish day and of the gloomy night, for as George Meredith said, "The soul's one road is forward" (2) We may recognize His leadership by day in the cloud that we fear to enter, and by night in the fire that bids us hope still in God. "Through cloud and sunshine Lord abide with me."

CHINA'S SEARCH FOR PEACE

IV.—The Talk of Provincial Autonomy: A System That Never Was and Which Answers No Chinese Need

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 11.

The idea of a federation of self governing Chinese provinces, semi-autonomous but united in a voluntary league, has captured the imaginations of many sincere persons and has also furnished a very convenient political war cry for scores of consummate rogues. It is an idea which is entirely foreign to Chinese tradition and finds no sanction whatever in Chinese history. This is no reason why it should be rejected off hand as a way to reunification and peace, but it is an all sufficient reason for challenging it and for approaching it with caution and suspicion. It is an idea which neither the older officials nor the masses of the people can grasp, any more than they can grasp our conception of republicanism, and therefore one which all well-wishers of China should hesitate to foist upon the nation until it is absolutely certain that it will work and that no other scheme which conforms to Chinese tradition and can be understood by the Chinese people will work.

Before the Revolution of 1911 there was no distinction was ever made, for 20 centuries, between provincial rights and national rights. Nothing of the sort was even thought of. All right was vested in the Emperor, in the first place, and in the family group in the second place. The whole machinery of officialdom, from the time of the building of the Great Wall down to the Revolution, was nothing but an elaborate medium through which the Emperor conveyed his will to the family group and through which the family group paid tribute to the Emperor. The only rights delegated to the [illegible] or Viceroy were those [illegible] for geographical reasons [illegible] Emperor could not exercise [illegible] Whatever rights the [illegible] provincial official enjoyed he exercised, not as a local ruler but as the Emperor's representative and in the Emperor's name. The only exceptions to this rule, the only periods during which provincial chiefs came to have any other conception of their positions, were the interregnums, the periods of chaos and disintegration between the collapse of one dynasty and the erection of another.

HISTORY'S UNVARIED LESSON.

It was in these periods that the governors became kings and made and broke treaties with one another like modern Tuchuns, insisting upon their individual rights as princes, bullying or bargaining with weak central governments. There are hundreds of thousands of untutored citizens of the Republic of China who regard this immediate epoch as one of those periods and who secretly review China's history to learn how such periods in the past ended. As it happens, they ended in every instance with the appearance upon a turbulent stage of some hard-fisted, strong-willed individual who set up a new dynasty and exacted respect for it with lance, sword and bill. They search in vain for instances during the past two thousand years when the numerous local kinglets got together in a federation and restored order by erecting a Government based upon a mutual recognition of their rights as rulers. They find on the contrary that each new conqueror [illegible] a fresh dynasty [illegible] high [illegible] more [illegible] less [illegible] fashion that the only right, distinction or honour which they could possibly enjoy lay in acting faithfully as mouthpieces for the Emperor in his dealings with his people. It is folly to believe that the great masses of a people so bound up in the past as the Chinese are can conceive of any other relations between a central authority, the provincial authorities and the people, which is consistent with order or good government.

One of the arguments advanced by many advocates of provincial autonomy is an echo of the Occidental cry for self determination. They recognize rightly that the Chinese are not strictly homogeneous, but differ widely from district to district in racial origin, language, customs, mode of living and temperament. They try to prove that provincial boundaries follow fairly closely the lines of divergence and that the provinces have been shaped in the past to corral the peoples of different types and ways within individual folds. They argue that the various peoples of the various provinces should have the right to select forms of government suited to their needs and temperaments and to elect their rulers from among themselves. These ideas are founded upon fallacies; they cater to prejudices and not to tradition; they do not promote unity but encourage dissolution; they only serve to add impetus to the centrifugal tendency which a dozen strong dynasties have had to fight in China; they come into direct conflict with the new Chauvinistic spirit that pervades the whole country; and they please no one but the provincial satraps who are delighted to have an excuse for defending their personal autonomy as exploiters of the people.

NEVER YET ATTEMPTED

Except in so far as the modern provinces are superimposed upon the old feudal divisions of China, when the people of Yen or Chihli were of one breed, the people of Lu or Shantung another, the people of Wu or southern Kiangsu of another, there has never been any deliberate attempt made to keep the peoples of different racial origin within provincial watertight compartments. The whole study of every dynasty was to obliterate differences and distinctions and never to accentuate them. A glance at the map will show that in the great majority of provinces political boundaries coincide rather with natural geographical boundaries than with ethnological boundaries and that many comprise the territories tapped by confluent river systems. Convenience of administration, based upon lines of communication, had more to do with the mapping of provinces from age to age than any consideration for difference of breed.

The result is that groups within many of the modern provinces differ more radically from one another than they do from neighbours in other provinces. The people of northern Kiangsu, for instance, are as different from the people south of the Yangtze as the Chihli men are from the Hunan men, though the men of northern Kiangsu are very like their neighbours in Anhui and Shantung. The men of the mountainous Shantung peninsula are as different from the Shantung plains people, in language and physical type, as the Kiangsi people are from the Cantonese. Apart from the Hakka, there are two distinct languages spoken in Kwangtung, besides many dialects, and the Swatow man is not at all like the native of the delta, while the hill folk in west

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

"The Modern English Series" is a new library of books consisting of abridged editions of well-known copyright works and edited by R. B. Lattimer, M.A., and R. B. Morgan, M.A., M.LITT. Mr. Murray will publish immediately the first three volumes—"Scott's Last Expedition," "The Cruise of the Cachalot," and "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes"—and they may be had in two styles; either with full gilt front and spine, suitable for gifts and prizes, or with design in ink for general use. Although each volume has been carefully abridged, nothing has been done to disturb the narrative as presented by the author, or to sacrifice any vital part. Some illustrations are included and each book contains a suitable introduction and a glossary of unusual words and phrases. Other volumes will be added in due course.

Mr. Brand Whitlock, who was American Minister to Belgium when the war broke out, has a novel appearing with Appleton. He was writing it at Brussels when he heard the war bugle sound, very much as Wellington, at the Duchess of Richmond's famous ball, heard of the advance of Napoleon. Mr. Brand Whitlock put his manuscript aside and worked no more on it until he left diplomacy in 1922. Then he took it out again, finished it and entitled it, rather oddly, "J. Hardin and Son." It is a story of a little town in Ohio which the author loved well as a small boy.

A habit which was popular with the Victorian novelists, of having a quotation, in prose or verse, on the title-page of a story, seems to be returning in high quarters. We shall find, when we get Mr. Joseph Conrad's new novel, "The Rover," in a week or so, that it takes this motto from Spencer:—

Sleep after toyle, port after stormie seas,
Ease after warre, death after life, does greatly please.

"The Rover" has the Mediterranean in the early years of 1800 for a background rather than for a stage.

The Scottish invasion of Ireland, under Edward Bruce, has never been treated in detail as a separate event. It will be so treated in a book which the Murrays announce by Miss Olive Armstrong. The invasion marked a moment of extreme importance for Ireland, because it was the dividing line between the highest good of English rule and "the beginning of all evil." Miss Armstrong has drawn her work from original sources which include many unpublished manuscripts, and this circumstance enhances its value to students of Irish history.

Very notable indeed is "Selwyn Brothers" (7s. 6d.; Hodder & Stoughton), Miss F. E. Mills Young's latest addition to her stories of South African life. Each of these stories there must be close upon a dozen of them now has been marked by individuality and distinction, but with the present absorbing yet painful romance the author gives us what is perhaps her finest achievement.

The Hon. J. W. Fortescue has been varying the heavy literary labour of his history of the British Army by writing a book, which Macmillan announces, about "My Native Devon." He is a son of the third Earl Fortescue, and so a member of a family which has intimate and, indeed, historical associations with the "Shire" of the Sea Kings." His "Story of a Red Deer" was a study of the deer of Exmoor, and nothing more graphic about them has been written. In this new book Mr. Fortescue has much to say about the various sides of Devon, its sea, its land, its people and its history.

"Historic Textile Fabrics," by Richard Glazier, is one of those monographs for which the house of Batsford is justly famous. It gives "a short but nevertheless comprehensive history of figured weaving; tracing its development through what is termed the characteristics or styles of certain periods, communities, or countries," and is packed with well chosen and well arranged information, illustrated with representative example of textile design from the splendid collections in the Victoria and Albert Museum and from the Manchester Collections. The clear, authoritative text, joined to the abundant illustrations, makes this a book that no one interested in textiles and woven patterns can possibly overlook. It is emphatically a standard work. The price of the volume is 21/-.

Earl Buxton, who was Governor-General and High Commissioner of South Africa, has written a book about Gen. Louis Botha, with whom he came into close association. It is not a biography, but an attempt to give a picture of the man as a Prime Minister, statesman, companion and friend. This leads to the discussion of many questions and problems of South Africa and the Empire, as will be found when John Murray publishes the book.

It is pleasant to hear that Anatole France, though he is now an old man, is working on a new book. He began it in the summer, when he was at his country house, La Bêchellerie, near Touris. Eventually it will appear in the English edition of Anatole France's works which John Lane has been publishing. Meanwhile translations of two existing books remain to appear, a fourth series of "Life and Letters," which Mr. Bernard Miall has Englished, and "The Latin Genius," Englished by Mr. Wilfrid Jackson.

Somewhere in his letters Thomas Carlyle speaks of a journal which is in the British Museum as the "most interesting of all manuscripts." This is a diary which an Englishman of the Cromwellian time, Sir Simmonds D'Ewes, kept from the beginning of the Long Parliament to the opening of the trial of the Earl of Strafford. Carlyle urged that it should be published, but only now is this being done, and we owe the service to an American scholar, Dr. Wallace Nortenstein, of Cornell University. He has edited the journal for the Yale University Press, and it will be issued here by the Oxford Press.

STELLA BENSON IN CHINA

"THE POOR MAN." By Stella Benson. Macmillan & Co., Ld., London.

Readers of the earlier novels and poems of Stella Benson, now Mrs. O'Gorman Anderson, are prepared to welcome another of her original stories, lit with flashes of wayward fancy and adorned with imaginative verse. In her vivid portrayal of Edward Williams, the "poor man," the author has added a new type to literature, the partially deaf man whose infirmity makes him invest things half-heard with exotic beauty as in this conversation:—

"A woman's sharp voice said, 'Well, say, listen, what was that? It was a dandy piece.' And Edward heard the man with a cocktail shaker between his knees reply, "That was the song of the twelve eagles after the emerals of the South Sea lost their fragrance? Someone added 'They were crushed the day the love-tinker died on a hill of violets in Vienna.' Edward Williams was pleased with this conversation, although, of course, he knew that it had not taken place. He knew well that he was more than half deaf, and in many moods he welcomed the insight that his infirmity gave him into matters that did not exist. His two friends had been telling each other facts that both knew and that Edward did not wish to know. Neither would, of course, dream of mention-in emeralds or hills of violets except when it was really necessary and helpful to do so. Edward did not care. He felt that his mind's eye had acquired one picture the more without the trouble of acquiring a fact."

Edward is a neurotic, unhealthy, miserably self-conscious Englishman first met with in California, who pursues his unresponsive love, Emily, through Japan to Hongkong, and Peking, on to Ichang and back again to Shanghai. The reactions of visiting Englishmen to California are humourously, but not unkindly described and the most ardent "Native Son" could not object to the ardent, impressionistic depiction of the wonderful Western scenery. The book is irresistibly quotable and we yield to temptation again:—

"The father of Miss Webor was a retail merchant in Calistoga (California). He called his house not a house but a 'home,' 'My Pop has one elegant Home right in the classy part of the city of Calistoga' said Miss Weber. The American of the Weber type chooses many of his words for their potential catch in the throat, as it were, Motherhood, manhood, lovelight, grip-o'-the-hand, the movies have made words of this kind music in the American ear. But words with home in them are the most popular—homestead, homeland, home site, home-town, home-builder. We who can live in houses and can hear the word Mother in print with dry eyes or hear the glugging of someone else's baby over its food in a cafeteria without vicarious domestic ectasy, must seem very coarse to Americans. However, the missionary movies are with us now. We shall no doubt eventually suffer a change of heart."

The plot, while it holds the interest of the reader, is not the most important thing about this book which abounds in unexpected turns of thought, in character delineation and telling word-pictures of California and China. The incidental poems and the opening invocation to Kuan-yin, Goddess of Mercy, are worth careful reading.

A TALE OF MYSTERY

"THE THING AT THEIR HEELS: By Harrington Hext: Messrs. Thornton, Butterworth, Ld. London, publishers.

In the course of many years of criticism of novels good, bad, and indifferent it would probably appear to the general public that the reviewer must become hardened not only to every kind of novel but, also, practically to every ending. It is therefore a tribute to the fiction writer that somehow or other he or she manages more frequently than not to serve up something really new. This is not always the case in so-called mystery story, but in "The Thing at their Heels" we find an author who maintains interest in his plot until practically the last page has been reached. As a mystery story, then, this book may very truthfully be described as a brilliant success. It is very safe to say that not one readers in 20 will guess at the solution to the mystery until its disclose—except by a lucky guess—and congratulations are accordingly due the writer on his particular score. Apart from this aspect, however, it is doubtful if the book will appeal to popular taste. We are given an old British family in the first chapter; and throughout the succeeding 14 chapters or so are presented in more or less harrowing detail with the extinction of member after member of the family, until as the "Finis" is approached we learn that a fanatic priest—one of the members of the family—has been responsible for a succession of murders before which even a Crippen might pale. It is almost pleasing indeed, to finish up—for a change—on a note of suicide instead of murder, the priest taking his own life, the last of the family, in order that the family fortunes may be left to a home for waifs—or was it stray cats? 'tis, 'tis true!! But, after all, mystery tales are usually expected to be gruesome: "The Thing at their Heels." Should satisfy even the most morbid pursuer of murder and tragedy.

LAW AND ORDER

"THE ORIGINS OF ORDER AND LAW." By Herman Cohen. (Effingham Wilson, London).

The principal merit of this book lies in the fact that it causes the reader to think and to exercise his imagination. The problem of the rise of the human race from the earliest forms of existence known to us to its present civilization must ever be an interesting study, and the solution of this problem is still a matter of speculation and conjecture and attracts the intellectual mind to day. The author has endeavoured to lay the groundwork of knowledge to grapple with the pros and cons of all the various theories, and he has certainly succeeded in his endeavours.

The chapters follow one after another in natural sequence and the subject is unfolded step by step with ability and such continuity that the book forms a harmonious whole. A very interesting little book well worth reading, which might well be a text book for advanced students in schools and colleges, and can be perused with advantage by maturer people interested in social studies.

JOURNAL OF SCIENCE AND ART

Another Attractive Number: Public Appreciation Well Displayed

The editor is to be congratulated upon having produced another excellent number, the January journal containing several articles of first class interest. In an editorial note, progress is reported and it is particularly pleasing that a literary enterprise of this character is not only meeting with public appreciation but is attracting contributions of a high order, showing that the Journal has established itself as a medium for the discussion of the science, art, and literature of the East.

The number before us opens with a delightful episode from the novel "Ping Shan Leng Yen," translated by Elfrida Hudson under the title "Meet Guile with Guile." The story has the simplicity of a fairy tale, with a fine blend of poetry and realism, touched with excellent humour. Kiang Kang-hu continues his critical analysis of The Four Books, this month dealing with the Lun Yu, or "Confucian Analects," and the Book of Mencius. A further chapter in the fascinating history of Yang Kuei-fei, one of the most famous beauties of China, is contributed by Wu Shih-huan, and in this one of the most interesting features is the description of the poet Li T'ai-po, ranking among the first of China's poets. Li was a master of wine and song—the the two conspicuously went together—and it is amusing to read how the great man had frequently to be dug out of some Peking wine shop upon occasions when the Emperor required his presence at the Palace to compose a verse. The genius of the poet apparently was ever at command, so that he was able to respond instantly with verse of a high order.

In the Travel section, prominence is given to the significance of the recent discoveries in Mongolia, a highly interesting article on this subject being contributed by Prof. H. F. Osborn, of Columbia University. Dr. Herbert Chatley discusses the Mechanical Theory of Earthquakes, and other features of scientific interest, together with book reviews and notes, make up a well varied and uniformly interesting number.

MOLTKE FATAL BLUNDER

How Germany Lost the War

"GERMAN STRATEGY IN THE GREAT WAR." By Lieut.-Colonel Philip Neame, V.C., D.S.O., p.s.c. Edwin Arnold & Co. 10s. 6d. net.

Count von Schlieffen became Chief of the German Great General Staff in 1891. It was a providential circumstance for the Allies that he was not Chief of the Great General Staff in 1914. If he had been the chances are that Germany instead of paying reparations would to-day be receiving them. For it was the genius of Schlieffen, described not too extravagantly by Ludendorff as "one of the greatest soldiers who ever lived," which conceived the great German plan partially put into force at the very beginning of the world war.

There cannot be the slightest doubt that it failed because Schlieffen's successor, the younger Moltke, threw over an integral and vital part of Schlieffen's masterly conception. Schlieffen was an extraordinary being. He was merely a human embodiment of military problems. Colonel Neame relates one or two casual incidents who cast light on his singular character. Schlieffen made a habit of setting his subordinate staff officers holiday tasks on all festive occasions such as Christmas, for he said that then they could devote their brains to the larger military problems undisturbed by routine work.

He thought of nothing but the German army and its task in war. His war-plan occupied all his thoughts even on his death-bed. Almost the last words which he murmured to his son-in-law, General Von Hahnke were: "It must come to a fight. Only make the right wing strong." Alas for the shade of Schlieffen. Moltke, in the depths of his folly and weakness, made the right wing weak!

Moltke's plan maintained the neutrality of Holland, which Schlieffen had apparently intended to violate. But the principal difference between the two conceptions lay in Moltke's omitting from the right wing the "ersatz" formations intended to follow in rear of the armies, and only to reach the front at Paris. Moltke could probably have carried out these manœuvres, Colonel Neame thinks, without requiring any greater front to deploy on, and could therefore have maintained the strength of the right wing without marching across the Maastricht Peninsula. Presumably he intended to avoid all risk of invasion of Alsace-Lorraine; but in doing so he violated two leading principles of war: (1) Concentration at the decisive point, in that he had not the strength on his offensive wing to envelope the French armies without allowing gaps to arise in his own armies; and (2) economy of force, in that his detachments south of Metz failed to hold the French forces there. It may be considered, says Colonel Neame—and judging by after events no other conclusion is possible—that this violation of principles lost Germany the war.

LUDDENDORFF'S GENIUS.

Colonel Neame holds Ludendorff in high esteem not only as a great tactician, but as a strategist, and asks what finer examples of sound and brilliant strategy can be found than the campaign of Tannenberg and the Masurian Lakes and the second invasion of Poland in 1914. If Ludendorff had not been thrown out of the Prussian War Office by the politicians in 1912, he would have been Moltke's Director of Military Operations at Supreme Command in August, 1914. He was an ardent disciple of the great Schlieffen and his war plans, and his strength of character is admitted.

Would he have kept Moltke on the right path, and what then would have been the result of the Marne campaign? The author of this lucid and extremely fascinating analysis of German war strategy is clearly in no doubt about the answer.

LAO YANG-JEN THE TERROR OF HONAN

A Bandit Chieftain and His 2,000 Men: China's Excuses for Bandits but Not for Him

By George E. Sokolsky.

In the hills of Honan, away from the madding crowd, are 2000 bandits, who have been wandering about the domain of Lord Wu Pei-fu, free to do as they please, capturing Chinese and foreigners alike, looting towns and burning villages and occasionally wandering into Loyang itself at night, to serve notice on the redoubtable warlord that he is not yet master of the people of the province. Some even say that the small men in Loyang, hawkers and such, beggars on the streets and wanderers on the road, are of the type of Friar Tuck and Little John. Perhaps here and there a story-teller in a tea house is but another Allan-a-Dale, who rhymes to the people of the life of the Lo Ling, the paradise in the forest where one eats what he takes and goes where he pleases, where the rich are not rich and the poor are not poor. Over such a band rules one called Lao Yang-jen, "the old foreigner."

Naturally, Lao Yang-jen is not his name. It was given him by his comrade because of his appearance. Taller than almost any man, his head covered by a shock of thick hair, a long, full beard hiding somewhat the contour of his face, he looks to the Chinese like a foreigner. So they call him the Old Foreigner. And by that name, Lao Yang-jen alone is he known, although he was born with the name Chang and before his bandit days was called Chang Kuo-hsin.

In wandering about where such stories are told, one hears many tales and descriptions of this man and from them one can only select what appears to him to be the most probable. Some of his friends say that he was known years ago as a soldier in Shensi, but others insist that he is a new man whose name has been heard only within the past three of four years in the underworld of Chinese politics, that curious realm where one day bandits meet beggars and the next day Tuchuns meet Cabinet Ministers. For politics and banditry in China are not disassociated and the bandits are not always robbers nor are all the politicians always decent citizens.

Wu Pei-fu appears in this story as a misguided official, who lost his temper. For he had agreed to incorporate Lao Yang-jen's men in his army and to permit them and their leader to occupy East Honan. Then he changed his mind. He had rather have them in another province, in a place over which he had no direct control or responsibility. So he sent them into Anhui, but the people of Anhui protested and objected and sent delegations. Then Wu Pei-fu attempted to move them into Northern Kiangsu, about Hsuchowfu. Again he met with opposition. Northern Kiangsu has a bandit problem all of its own and it needed no assistance from him to make it worse. Finally, according to my informant, Wu Pei-fu suspected Lao Yang-jen of collusion with another chief, Fan Min-han, who operated in northern Kiangsu and Southern Shantung. Wu Pei-fu suspected that the Old Foreigner was double-crossing him, whereupon he immediately proceeded to double-cross the Old Foreigner. He issued orders to disband Lao Yang-jen and his men. When the disbandment officers arrived on the scene, the Old Foreigner had vanished and his men had vanished and there was nothing for Wu Pei-fu but bandit outrages in every place under his control.

This is the story of the Old Foreigner told in the places where he should be known. But they also say that he is not a bandit worthy of praise, since he has no objective and no social point of view. Other bandit chiefs understand the sufferings of the Chinese people and are striving to effect a fundamental revolution which will free the people from the yoke of the Tuchunate and the corrupt officials. But not Lao Yang-jen. He seeks simply a place for himself and his men. He is out for a job in the army. When he comes to a city, it is true that he loots the officials and the rich. But he also loots the poor and burns the place. Therefore he goes without praise among those who find something in Chinese banditry to praise.

THE PEOPLE'S PLEA FOR BANDITS.

In this connexion, one might just give a summary of what those who praise bandits have to say in their favour. They say that the country is in a worse plight than it has ever been before, that the officials and military ravage the countryside until farmers cannot reap what they sow, until maidens are unsafe and eldest sons are without prospects of success in life. The Government in Peking does nothing to protect the people. The provincial officials enrich themselves at the expense of the people. The military live off the fat of the land—and almost always are they strangers in the place. The whole country lives to support two provinces, Chihli and Shantung, whose surplus population is scattered everywhere from Kuantung northward into the new territories on the borders of Siberia. And all provinces are growing poor, feeding the sons of these two provinces.

Therefore the people must rise up. But the people have no arms and no funds and are untrained and without leadership. Therefore, they take to the hills and to the forests, there to carry on guerilla warfare against all officials. When an official cannot be defeated, he may be worn out. So, they kidnap the children of officials and foreigners and hold-up trains and commit other outrages, which result often in driving the official from public life or making it difficult for him to protect his province against invasion. He cannot become a bigger man than he is, because of internal troubles. Sometimes the bandit chiefs form alliances with politicians and militarists seeking power. They utilize these alliances to drive those in power, out of office. Then when the new ones come in, they fight them. Occasionally, one of them becomes a military officer and tries to work against the bandits—but he does not live long. For the officials are not to be trusted. Their word is without faith, and when a bandit works with the government, he sooner or later finds his food loaded with glass or a firing squad in the court-yard of his host's yamen. This was what happened to Sun Mei-yao, who was considered by my informants, a good bandit, one who had an objective and a special point of view.

To avoid a conflict with those who see red every time the word bandit appears in the public print, I must own that all that appears in these paragraphs was told me by responsible people, Chinese who ought to know and understand such things—but whether they spoke from their hearts or for publication, only the history of the next decade in China will tell.

In accordance with a warning from the British Minister, the Peking Government has ordered the military authorities of Kiangsu, Chekiang and Shanghai not to use the railways for the transportation of their troops. The railway administration have been instructed to see that this order is obeyed by refusing to place the trains of the Shanghai-Nanking and Shanghai-Hangchow-Ningpo Railways at the disposal of the militarists.

PERSONAL MEMORY OF LENIN

The First and Last Attempt at Democratic Government

By George E. Sokolsky.

The last time I saw Lenin personally was at the meeting of the Constituent Assembly. From all parts of Russia delegates had gathered to what was to be the national convention of the Russian peoples. This assembly was the hope of Russia; the pride of the first revolution. But Kerensky had been driven out of the Winter Palace before his aims could be achieved and Lenin had established a new government at the Smolny Institute. Lenin's government was to be representative of the Soldiers, Workers and Peasants, but again it was led by intelligentsia and aristocrates, now disguised as ultra-radicals, but always the same type that one met in all political circles. The characteristics of leadership were unchanged.

Lenin sat on the platform. Chernoff, that uncertain figure, now leaning toward the right, now toward the left, more left than Kerensky's following but too right for Marie Spiridonovna who had so much to remember of earlier miseries and a bitter youth. Trotsky was not there. He was at the Russo-German front settling the peace agreement between the two countries. The foreign office was already publishing secret treaties and beginning a world-wide propaganda. On the extreme Right of the Tauride Palace there were only vacant seats, the monarchists and Cadets had stayed away. The extreme left was not well-occupied. Seventy-five per cent. of the delegates were anti-Bolshevik.

THE SILENT DOMINANCE.

Lenin sat on the stage—a lonely figure. His bald head, fringed with greyish red hair, his short, stocky figure, his baggy clothes and fat hands, gave him the appearance of a German grocer. Always his eyes twinkled and to a foreigner sitting amidst these excitable, shouting, long-speaking Russians, this quiet, stolid person, whose smile was ever-present, whose wink to his secretary in the balcony attracted so much attention, was the dominant note of the gathering. There he sat, never a word, never a motion. Others spoke. Others shouted. Others banged the table. Tseretelli drew a revolver. Chernoff was proud. Skvortsoff was massive. But Lenin sat there an onlooker. Nothing seemed to interest him in that assemblage. Nothing seemed to worry him.

The Assembly adjourned for dinner and Lenin disappeared. Hours later the meeting gathered. They waited. Everyone was irritated. Everyone was worried, anxious. A note of tragedy was struck. Where is Lenin? About two in the morning, Lenin had been found again. He had gone to bed. He was asleep. He could not be awakened. Constituent Assemblies may be the hope of Russia, but Lenin had to sleep.

At 4 a.m. a sailor walked to the Rostrum. He addressed Chernoff who was presiding. "You have spoken enough, brother. We want to sleep.

"Nobody prevents you from sleeping," Chernoff bitterly replied as the sailors in the balcony prepared for business.

"Let us not quarrel, brother," the sailor said. "Go home in peace. We want to sleep, you have spoken enough."

English and Mathematics Combined

Middle Schools to-day face a perplexing situation in adjusting the legitimate demands of students for more English with the actions of Educational Associations tending to lessen the amount of English taught. The mastery of English is the open door to world citizenship, and to the literature, the science and the news of the world. It is quite vital to business success in China. The question is to learn to handle it well in the time allotted.

Professor H. B. Graybill, widely known as the author of "Mastery of English," agrees with leading educators that, apart from elementary study, this situation can best be met by teaching other subjects in English, especially subjects that will be useful to students upon entering careers after graduation. With Professor Lo King Tuen, of Canton Christian College, Mr. Graybill has just finished a Middle School Arithmetic which combines study in English and applied Mathematics to meet this widely felt need.

On the side of English this "Practical Arithmetic" contains the vocabulary used in shopping, travel, all sorts of business, the Customs and Postal Services, newspapers and in ordinary conversation. It also gives an English preparation is Higher Mathematical and Scientific study. The first part of the book is as much a study and drill in English as it is an Arithmetic.

As a mathematics the Lo-Graybill "Practical Arithmetic" is unique, the first adequate, original arithmetic written for China. It meets the requirements of commercial schools, and of middle schools preparing both for college and for immediate entry into business. In addition to the usual arithmetical processes its arithmetical foundation in Algebra and Geometry gives an excellent basis for work in college. Short cuts in calculation of great practical value are incorporated as well as the most complete and convenient series yet published of tables of Chinese, metric and English measurements with their cross values. This arithmetic introduces the study to the understanding of Exchange and to many other actual problems met with in everyday life in China. It is unique in its inclusion of over 60 very original China-born individual and class projects, a distinct advantage on other texts.

"Practical Arithmetic" is direct and natural in method. The student is helped to build up processes in Mathematics for himself so as best to grasp the basic principles. Arithmetical terms when first used are given with their Chinese equivalent. To secure speed, accuracy and skill, ample drills and exercises are incorporated. The teacher is given a wealth of problems for his selection, all of which will prove of great interest to Chinese.

This book is now ready. Its price is $1.60 Mexican. Principals and teachers who are interested may ensure a sample copy by dropping a card to Edward Evans & Sons, Limited, Shanghai. (Advertisement).

THE WOMAN'S PAGE

MEMNON

By Katharine Winstanley.

Between the desert and the stars
The dead King's image, carved in stone,
Stood up beneath the midnight's bars
Girt round with silence, and alone.

But when the light of morning stirred
And quickening, touched the stone apart,
Sweeter than voice of singing-bird
Gushed music from the still, stone heart.—

O Love! which, striking down the drear
Wastes of the night and thirsty sands,
Shattered the darkness — can you hear
My whole heart sing beneath your hands?

THE WELL DRESSED MAN

How to be Correctly Garbed for the Evening

By Elizabeth Pepys.

The importance of the evening suit can hardly be overestimated, so we have recently been informed. Business is business and business clothes are simply clothes. A man has to attend to the duties of the day and few employers would regard the absence of the latest tie as a proper excuse for a junior clerk's taking the morning off to replenish his wardrobe. But the evening—the clothes of the evening are a real index to the character of the man. Just as one's necessary occupation may not express the real spirit of the man but the amusements to which he turns in his leisure moments are indicative of his true self, so the clothes donned for social occasions are a true gauge of his soul.

One must not exaggerate. It might be unfair to set a man down as low-principled simply because his single cuffs have round points instead of the proper square variety, but it cannot hardly do otherwise than suggest that his standards are lax. Again should he fail to possess the pique shirt with double cuff recommended in the last issue of the "Tailor and Hatter" he may be fairly intelligent in spite of this defect. One would hesitate to say offhand that a man would take pennies out of a blind man's hat or kick his respectable grandmother merely because he wears a white tie with a dinner jacket, but appearances are certainly against him and any jury would make its own deductions.

THE TIE THAT TELLS.

Knowing then the supreme emphasis to be placed on clothes polite a useful suggestion is to buy a "thistle" shaped tie, which we understand can lend an air of jauntiness to even an old-fashioned coat. The ends of this bow must come outside the collar, which should have long, square-pointed wings. We understand that single-ended ties (meaning that one end is tucked beneath the collar and then hidden behind the shirt front) are permissible but it is better not to shirk the responsibilities of the double tie—difficult as its adjustment may be. And above all things do be careful to select a double-ended tie made especially for the size of the collar worn.

The Home of Art Treasures Carefully Selected

A bas relief above the doorway depicting the abode of Hsi Wang Mu and an unobtrusive sign at [illegible] of Chinese art, has transferred many of his curios from his home [illegible] those who are interested may drop in as they will and enjoy the many choice things which he has collected with loving care, and now shares with the public at prices which are an agreeable surprise. The studio has kept the charm which surrounded Mr. Strehlneek's private collection and the various objets d'art are arranged so as to form a very attractive museum.

RARE BOWLS AND VASES OF THE STREHLNEEK COLLECTION.

Hsi Wang Mu, her image, before which incense curls upward, the rock garden above and topping all, the temple. Near this stands a cabinet filled with blanc de Chine and five-colour Kang Shi porcelains, at the left a case of soft Sung celadons with some other beautiful bits, including a bowl of peach colour, with a bat design.

lingers before a cabinet filled with Yung Ching and Chien Lung specimens before passing on to the table covered with bronze gods. Other cabinets with rare examples of blanc de Chine, exquisite Yung Ching bowls, varied sculpture and a bronze head of marvellous peace and serenity bring one to the rear of the room where the pictures are hung. The scroll which chanced to be hanging in the centre when we were browsing about, admiring the various works of arts as we would, was a [illegible] of the Moon Goddess holding on her knee a globe representing the moon, and within the ball could be seen the figure of the Hare of Immortality.

A marble head with a calm repose suggesting the balance of the classic Greek, some sculptures of the northern Chi period, set against a shrine like background suggesting the phoenix flames, examples of clair de lune and other lovely things too many to enumerate brought one back to the deer and to the jade cabinet which holds jades of every kind and description—museum pieces and small ear rings or bracelets so moderately priced as to be within anyone's reach. The carving on some of the pendants is done with exquisite delicacy, and the various colours are marvels of purity.

The centre table is given up to porcelains—bowls and vases on carved blackwood or ebony standards, beautiful in shape and glaze and ranging in price from the very reasonable to the higher amounts one naturally expects to pay for guaranteed antiques. Surrounded by these unique art treasures one is transported to the palace of Hsi Wang Mu where behind high walls, under trees gem-laden, according to Chinese fable the genii cultivate sesamum and coriander for the Taoist Votaries of Longevity.

FOGS—PHYSICAL AND PSYCHIC

The Advantages and Drawbacks of Obscurity

By Elizabeth Pepys.

You remember the grey-yellow mist that surrounded us the other morning, veiling the sun so effectually that nine out of ten Shanghai households over-slept. You remember the strange haziness, the semi-light, semi-dark effect which resisted even the electric lights. Each house was an island unto itself except that bleared lights indicated where your neighbours houses had been the night before.

Emerging into an unfamiliar world, a world of blurred outlines, one walked cautiously, almost groping one's way. To cross the road seemed greatly daring since at any moment a destruction-dealing motor might emerge from the grey cloud or an unseen and unheard bicycle might barge down upon our equally unobtrusive self. Yet the uncertainty of the situation was not altogether displeasing and the vagueness of the landscape added a charm.

Hitherto prosaic buildings now stood out against the enveloping foggy blanket in impressionistic blots of blackness. Outlines of passers-by were furry, there were no distressingly sharp contours nor irregular features. Strangeness and potential romance was everywhere. As one walked on into the mysterious thickness the advantages of mental and psychic nebulousness suggested themselves. Why not veil some of the unco-literally minded in a bit of vagueness so that they should not embarrass their friends as to precise figures on birthdays, incomes, and expenditures? Why permit such annoying rigidity as to meum and tuum, such inflexibility as to right and wrong?

We were just mentally composing a new world with no glaring publicities and no staring facts when a fat coolie hurrying through this poetic dream world dispelled the illusion by bumping us wide awake. Immediately our desire was for more illumination rather than less. "Can't you see where you're going?" we murmured indignantly. After all there is something to be said for clear sightedness and hard-headedness, and a misty morning now and then is as much fog as we actually need.

Mother: "Mary, see if the cake is done. Put a knife in it, and if it comes out clean you'll know that it is finished."

Long-suffering Father: "Yes, and if it comes out clean stick all the other knives in, too."

THE MODE IN SHOES AND HOSE

Paris, New York and Shanghai on the Subject

If Cinderella, safely married, were to drive up to the Place Vendome in her Rolls-Pumpkin, intent on replacing those old-fashioned glass slippers with what Monsieur Hellstern prescribes for princesses of her age and station, she would be not only charmed she would be bewildered, says "Vogue." Glass, she would perceive at once, was an inelastic medium at best. Patent leather, antelope, lizard, kid, brocade, satin—this wizard can do so many things with them that one has no choice but to wish oneself a centipede princess in justice to his inventiveness!

A LATITUDE OF CHOICE ALLOWED.

The result of this same inventiveness is, of course, that there is no one "smartest shoe of the moment" in Paris. For general street wear, the chic Parisienne, whose god is simplicity thrice simplified, inclines, perhaps towards her perennial favourite, the plain patent leather pump with the high Cuban heel—plain to the point of distraction, without even a bow. She also likes the simpler one-strap or two-strap models in patent leather. But there are other types in which Monsieur's imagination has free course to glorify his mediums. The black suede shoe with the wide strap of its own material, having two little buttons on one side and the toe and heel of patent leather is a great favourite with the smart American. And many Parisiennes wear it, too. It draws a rather vague line between the tailored and the elaborate—a most adaptable shoe.

In New York the prevailing impression of the new street shoes is of high cut and fewer open-work designs than were evident in last season's models. Shoes that fit the foot like a glove are of frequent occurrence, a cunningly hidden rubber insert accomplishing the effect under shelter of a tongue or a buckle. There are plenty of small buckles securing strap designs, too, on the more elaborate models—though even the most elaborate models of the season are much simpler than those of last year, both in line and in colour.

TAKING STOCK OF STOCKINGS.

Practically all daytime stockings in New York are still noisette in shade. The one exception occurs when grey is adopted to complete that grey and black models which has become a step-sister to the favoured black and white mode. Where one's furs and shoes are grey, grey stockings are in order. This does not mean that grey and the fawn-biege-brown gamut may never be combined, but merely that it must be done with discretion. That all of us have not been blessed with slender ankles is a sad, but patent, fact. But to try to mitigate the impression by combining black stockings with black shoes is no longer wise, since such stockings are of themselves conspicuous by reason of the rarity of their occurrence. All one can say to the sufferer is to avoid the lighter shades of the grey and beige. Contrast one must have, but it need not be too violent.

Evening stockings are to be of the new albino shade, a little less pink, a little more yellow than last season's "nude." This blanching of the stocking mode is quite in line with what is happening to complexions, once so brown and vivid and gipsyesque, now returning to an aristocratic pallor more in keeping with our grandmothers ideas as to how a lady's skin should comport itself.

OPPORTUNITIES CLOSE AT HAND.

Here in Shanghai the Walk-Over Shoe Store has no less than 22 new styles to suit the fastidious and these represent the very latest thing in American shoecraft, especially selected and hurried out to the Far East almost before Fifth Avenue saw the new modes. There are five new patterns in patent leather and about as many in black calf with patent trimmings which are taking the fancy of girls at home. There are smart brown and fawn suede models in fancy and plain varieties. There is a wide assortment of satin shoes, plain for the street and ultra dressy for the evening. New designs in gold and silver dancing slippers will appeal to the dancing damsel as will also the charming buckles which slip on so easily over the straps and give a piquant sparkle to the side of the low cut sandal. Gekco hose is found here in all the new shades and also the Kayser hose with the open work clock.

THE PRINCESS PAT.

It has been difficult for the woman who persisted in walking, even in Shanghai, to find a shoe which would meet her needs. She has done her best to have her favourite models copied, but it has been difficult to impress upon the native shoe-maker the supreme importance of the proper arch. So important is the correct shoe from the standpoint of general health that the Young Women's Christian Association has been conducting a campaign for orthopedic footwear and has finally stamped with the seal of its approval the "Princess Pat" last, which may now be obtained from the Walk-Over Shoe Store. It has a low, broad heel, rubber tipped, a high sustaining arch, snugly fitting, a straight inside line with the scientific outer curve, and a slightly pointed toe—solving the problem of a shoe which shall be sightly and sensible at the same moment.

THE NEW CHINESE TRADEMARK LAW

Merchants Dismayed at Prospect of Unqualified Acceptance by Diplomatic Body: Contrary to Treaty and Business Interest

Dismay was caused among foreign business firms by the telegram from Peking sent by the Easter News Agency to the effect that the Diplomatic Body are preparing to accept the new Chinese Trademarks Bill with certain modifications. The telegram was as follows:

Peking Jan. 27.—Despite the fact that the subs ance of the final draft formulated by the Diplomatic Corps concerning the China Trademark Bill is being kept strictly secret, according to accounts prevailing among foreigners here, the following appears to be the gist of the draft in question:—

(1) That on the whole the law now in force will be recognized, but if need be, a foreign adviser will be engaged.

(2) That as a practical method for the present, the Customs registration will be continued up to a certain time. —Eastern News Agency.

The report accords so closely with others on this subject that the British and other Chambers of Commerce have been receiving, that there is much anxiety. For unless the modifications mentioned are of a strong nature grave injury may result to foreign business.

It is of course well-known to all our readers that the want of protection given to foreign trademarks in China has been a cause of complaint for many years. This grievance is catered for in the Mackay Treaty, Article 7 of which says that the Chinese Government shall establish a bureau for the registration of trademarks and that that bureau shall be under the control of the Customs.

Like other items in the Mackay Treaty, this has never been carried out. But the agreement is perfectly clear and unequivocal and should specially be borne in mind now.

About six months ago Peking produced a Trademark Bill, under which a bureau for registration of trademarks was to be established. It was to be entirely under Chinese management and any appeal from it was to be, first, to three Chinese trademark judges; secondly, to the Board of Agriculture; thirdly to the Administrative Court. At every step, therefore, any question involving a foreign trademark would be subject exclusively to Chinese decision.

Now the value of trademarks is quite beyond computation. It certainly amounts to many millions of taels. The possibilities of abuse, of corruption and dishonesty in the registration bureau cannot unfortunately be excluded as China is to-day, in the matter of property so valuable.

Urgent representations have, therefore, been sent to the Diplomatic Body in Peking not to accept the Bill. Anxieties in the matter have been intensified latterly by a case of infringement of a British trademark at Harbin, when the infringement was admitted, but the case dismissed because the trademark had not been registered in the new bureau.

Questions have been telegraphed to Peking to ascertain what the Diplomatic Body really mean to do, and if no reply, or none in a satisfactory sense, is received by this evening, a meeting of foreign merchants is to be called at the General Chamber of Commerce rooms, 1 Yuenmingyuen Road, to consider the question further and decide what action should be taken. It is to be hoped that this meeting will be largely attended and fully representative. The authors of the Mackay Treaty knew very well what they were about when drafting Article 7, and it is of the utmost importance that its perfectly clear undertaking should not be burked.

Shanghai Businessmen's Meeting

At a meeting of National Chambers of Commerce, held on Thursday, at the rooms of the General Chamber of Commerce, the following resolution proposed by the British, and seconded by the American Chamber was passed unanimously:—

"That this meeting of National Chambers of Commerce, representing as it does the bulk of the foreign mercantile community, urges upon the Diplomatic Body not to recognize the new Chinese Trademark law except on such terms as will comply with the spirit of Article VII of the Mackay Treaty.

"That it is of the opinion that the reported stipulation of the Diplomatic Body for the employment of foreigners in the Bureau will not provide sufficient protection for foreign trademarks unless the foreigners employed are placed in a position enabling them effectively to supervise the administration of the law."

Diplomatic Body's Considerations on the Adoption of the Chinese Law

Peking, Jan. 29.

It is understood that the Diplomatic Body will shortly send a Note to the Waichiaopu containing the considerations on which they would be prepared to recommend their Governments to recognize the Chinese Trade Marks Law, the two main conditions being extension of the time limit for registration and employment of foreigners in the Registry Office so as to facilitate dealing with complicated questions which are bound to arise.

As already pointed out, the said law is a fait accompli except for foreign recognition, Some Japanese and German firms have already registered. The Diplomatic Body have recently been giving the matter their most careful attention and are doing their best in the interests of foreign merchants. It appears likely that the Chinese will agree to extension of the time limit, but employment of foreigners, who will be employees and not advisers, is more likely to meet with objection. PEACE SECURE IN EAST CHINA

The Kiangsu-Chekiang War Rumours: Reassurances from Both Sides

EXPLICIT STATEMENTS BY CHI AND LU

"Because of unrest on the part of the people the treaty of peace between the authorities of Kiangsu and Chêkiang was signed, and this, apart from being published by the merchants and gentry of the two provinces, was conveyed to the Consular Body, at Shanghai for their information by the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs. This was done because we wished the whole world to know that we have been desirous of securing peace in this part of the country.

"Now, however, some unfortunate rumours have been spread by some unscrupulous persons and these are likely to redound on commerce and affect the situation greatly, especially as regards peace and safety. We are sad to know that the hearts of the people are still ruthless, but we are glad to see that the larger organizations of the provinces have sent delegates to us to discuss the question of how to dispel rumours and maintain peace. We all signed the treaty in good faith because we have loved peace always, but we know that in spite of all these rumours we can conscientiously and with all sincerity and frankness say that so far as we are concerned the treaty will be maintained. If the legal and recognized organizations demand anything, there is no question of our doing our best to meet their requirements.

"During the winter months our troops naturally should be moved at times for patrol duties, but these movements are simply in order that peace may be kept so that the people might live in safety. There is no reason therefore for any alarm.

"Fearing that the people of the two provinces do not know the real facts of the situation, and realizing that there are numerous attempts by rumour-mongers to stir up trouble, we now take this opportunity of telling everybody that they have no cause for alarm and that they must keep peaceful and go about their regular business as usual."

"The situation in this section of the country is not as it should be, because rumours are constantly being spread. You and I have identical aims, which are the preservation of territory and the maintenance of peace and order for the benefit of the people. You will see that we are of one mind.

"Some persons, who have no other kind of business, are starting rumours of warfare and they try to make these appear true on the face. Fortunately the people understand and have gone to the trouble of running about from province to province sacrificing everything and undergoing many hardships in the interests of peace and to dispel these rumours.

"When we signed the peace agreement we did so openly and tried to show our sincere hearts and consciences. Therefore I hope that hereafter we will be able to

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

THE SCIENCE OF PUNISHMENT

Jan. 28.

WE have already commented briefly on the Annual Report (1922-1923) of the Commissioners of Prisons in England but as the subject of penology is, or should be, of deep and enduring interest, it is worth while to consider the report again. On the whole it is most encouraging. Serious crime does not appear to be increasing. It is admitted that the laxity of conduct which had its origin in war conditions still gives rise to a substantial number of commitments, but in common with the great majority of commitments they are for offences directly or indirectly traceable to money difficulties caused by reduced incomes, the high cost of living, loss of employment, and so forth, difficulties which we can sympathetically understand. It is gratifying to know that the treatment of the convicted is humane and reformative. In most English prisons there are now educational classes, lectures, concerts, debates and recreational clubs, not with the particular object of making prison life pleasant, but to give the prisoners a training that will fit them to re-enter the world as respectable citizens.

It is interesting to consider the progress of prison reform. In the middle of the last century the movement, which had been gaining in strength, was powerfully reinforced and placed on a broader philanthropic basis by the discovery, from a new point of view, that in their essential nature men differ but little from each other; that all are of very lowly origin and possess a complex, obscure inheritance from the remote past. There are no born criminals, as there are no born saints. It is true that the mentally defective are more easily led into crime, but there are no persons born, as it were, with a genius for crime.

"The ordinary inmates of our prisons have been shown to be only in a very slight degree below the average in mental and physical fitness of the normal man, a difference easily explained by the environment and condition in which the ordinary criminal is bred."

Our psychological inheritance being what it is, there is in all a wild strain, which may be euphemistically termed the love of adventure. Whether the adventures shall be meritorious or perverse, leading to heroism or to crime, is uncertain and seems to be often determined by circumstances beyond our control. For instance, in his "Book of Remarkable Criminals," Irving observes that the foremost English criminal of the nineteenth century, Charles Peace, had many admirable qualities. He was a born fighter, absolutely fearless, with agility, resource, cunning, and determination. Had he flourished in 1914 instead of 1874, and entered the army, he would probably have won great distinction; as it was, he ended his days on the scaffold, a burglar and murderer.

It is this wayward inheritance of humanity which leads us to take a fearsome pleasure in discussing or reading about the lives of notorious criminals. On one occasion, Tennyson, the poet, and Jowett, the Oxford philosopher, sat up until the small hours of the morning discussing murders. The fascination of the subject may be felt at a very early age. When the youngest son of a recent Archbishop of Canterbury was between five and six years of age, a venerable clergyman presented him with a large Bible. With the innate courtesy of the family the boy thanked his generous friend very prettily for the gift and even went so far as to ask him to read some of it to him. "What shall I read, dear child?" said the delighted clergyman. "Everything about the Devil," was the unexpected and somewhat disconcerting answer. Most healthy boys pass through a period when a piratical career has great attraction. We may say this admiration of piracy is due to original sin, or is the outcropping of tendencies which at one time made the possession of some of the qualities of a pirate of considerable social value. At any rate, no hard and fast distinction can be made between the saint and the sinner. The saint, if he is humble, knows that if it were not for a power beyond himself he might be a criminal; the sinner, as we know, has within him infinite possibilities of goodness. Hence the greater sympathy now shown to prisoners and the practical kindness which works for their reformation. However, lest our sympathies should run away with us, it is well to remember that the powerful herd instinct, also a part of our psychological inheritance, impels men to show little mercy to those who gravely imperil the social order.

Brief reference only can be made to another phase of the subject. If there is little moral difference between individuals, there is still less between nations. It may be said that for ways that are dark and for tricks that are vain one particular nation may be peculiar. But the people of that nation may think the ways of some other nations are even darker. In this direction much progress has still to be made. The same moral code that governs the relations between individuals should also govern the relations between nations. Judged by this code many famous kings and statesmen were criminals. "If," said Frederick the Great to his minister, Radziwill, "there is anything to be gained by it, we will be honest; if deception is necessary, let us be cheats." Perhaps the League of Nations will accomplish a reform in this respect.

THE Imperial clemency on the occasion of the Imperial wedding has been exercised only in the cases of prisoners whose sentences have been finally pronounced, says the "Japan Chronicle." There is, in consequence, a large number of withdrawals of appeals against sentences, the appellants thinking that clemency is better than another trial. The Asahi thinks such acts are nefarious. But why should not a prisoner gain all the benefit he can by the imperial clemency?

THE COTTON EXPORT SURTAX

Jan. 29,

As a piece of special pleading the article which we publish today on the question of an export surtax on cotton has a special importance. The writer is Mr. Tung Teh-fu of the National Southeastern University of Nanking, and in view of the proposals which Chinese cotton interests have made to the Cabinet in Peking it is only natural that he should adopt the attitude he has taken. As, however, he accuses us of various "misunderstandings" in connexion with the matter, we are justified in enlarging upon the theme dealt with in our issue of January 11. It may be remembered that the first official intimation that the proposal to introduce an export surtax on cotton had been considered by the Cabinet was conveyed in a telegram which stated that it was "to serve as the basis of a loan to help the cotton interests at Shanghai," a sufficiently indefinite statement to make it applicable to a number of schemes which have from time to time come within the purview of the cotton industry. In the circumstances all that we did was to mention certain proposals which had been made by the Chinese in the past and then to point out that the new proposal was of a different character and referred to a scheme for the improvement of cotton grown in China, and that the scheme which it was desired to support was that which is being conducted in conjunction with the Southeastern University. The telegram in question may have given rise to what Mr. Tung describes as "misunderstandings," and if so we disposed of them in our explanation of the real purpose which the proposers of the surtax had in view.

In his article Mr. Tung has been so eager to obviate "misunderstandings" that he has omitted to deal with the real point at issue. There are two separate bodies working for the improvement of the cotton grown in China, one the foreign millowners and kindred associations who have Nanking University as their headquarters, the other the Chinese interests who have selected the Southeastern University, also at Nanking, as theirs. One important point to which we drew attention in the original article was that the first steps taken for the betterment of native cotton were on the part of the foreign millowners, and that when inaugurating the scheme they asked their Chinese fellow business men to cooperate with them, financially and otherwise, but although promises of assistance were duly forthcoming they were never implemented. It was only when they saw that real progress was being made, although necessarily at first on a comparatively small scale by the foreign element, that the Chinese bethought themselves to essay something of the same sort. Hence under their auspices the scheme at the Southeastern University was brought into being, and has been carried on ever since. Now, in support of their scheme, and in support of it only, they have brought forward this surtax proposal, and apparently it is meeting with a goodly degree of support in the Capital. As pointed out, it will yield about Tls. 90,000 a year, a sum much larger than has been available through private subscription in the past, and it is surely a fair question to put forward why this should be devoted to one scheme and not to the other—the original one. There is no suggestion that good work has not been done at the Southeastern University, but if ever a scheme called for tangible recognition by Government and actually by the industry as a whole it is surely that brought into existence by the foreign millowners, who were the men to bring experts from other countries to set it going.

In his advocacy of the surtax Mr. Tung has carefully omitted to deal with this very important aspect of the matter, and the greater the pity, as his remarks would be sure to be instructive. Instead he tells us that the idea of cotton improvement took root in the Chinese mind thirty years ago, but owing to lack of capital and so forth it had to be delayed. But if it was an idea of such long standing there was the greater reason for assistance when under foreign auspices it took practical shape in the country. Having these facts before us, there is all the greater case for calling for a close inspection of the surtax proposals before they are passed, and as matters are at present it looks as if the Cabinet in Peking had not fully considered the different aspects of the case. Everybody is in agreement as to the great possibilities of China as a cotton-growing country, and after examining such samples as what the students call "Million Dollar" cotton there can be little doubt as to the quality which should ultimately be arrived at. These possibilities make it important that if Government assistance is forthcoming it should be allocated in the best possible manner, and the obviously partial way in which the present proposal has been placed before the central authorities is not calculated to arouse any passionate enthusiasm for it.

THE ALLIED WAR DEBTS

Jan. 30.

A recent issue of "Outlook" gives a summary of President Coolidge's first message to Congress and comments on it as follows: "The greatest applause which occurred during the reading of the Message before the two Houses of Congress in joint session followed the President's statement that he did not favour the cancellation of the debts due to us from European countries. But almost equal to it was that which followed, approving without qualification Secretary Mellon's proposal for tax reduction." European nations, over-burdened with taxation and cursed with the problem of unemployment, must read with envy the record of America's abounding prosperity. For ourselves, we envy, but do not grudge our neighbours their good fortune. Europe would be in much worse case than it is if America were in the same plight as the peoples on the other side of the Atlantic. Nevertheless, it is not surprising that there are those in Britain who begin to question whether the contribution we are making to the wealth of America in the prompt settlement of our debt to the United States is justifiable, whilst other nations, to which we stand in the same relation of creditor as America does to us, refuse to honour their obligations. In a recent issue we quoted the dictum of a New York banker that "sterling has to bear, in large measure, the brunt of falling exchange in European currencies and this is always reflected in the London-New York rate of exchange."

We are willing to pay all that we owe to the last farthing and even to shoulder the obligations we have assumed on behalf of others, but when the burden is made heavier by the fortuitous fall in exchange caused by the policy or misfortune of other nations who pursue their own way in opposition to our wishes and, sometimes, in defiance of our protests, then, the situation threatens to become intolerable. A natural reaction to this feeling of intolerance has been voiced by no less a personage than Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, now Prime Minister of Great Britain. Mr. Macdonald said in a recent speech that if Labour came into office the Government would reconsider the question whether we should continue to discharge our debt towards America whilst the Allied nations ignored their obligations toward ourselves.

The attitude adopted by America is a strictly legal one. She says, "You entered into a contract with us on behalf of yourself and on behalf of others and whatever unpleasant consequences result therefrom you are bound to fulfil it. The court awards this verdict and the law doth give it." On the cognate question of German reparations and inter-Allied obligations America takes the position that these things are none of her business. She simply says, "Pay me that thou owest and settle your squabbles in your own way. I will not be again involved in European complications." Now, while this is, as has been said, a strictly legal attitude it must be remembered that the one question arises out of the other. The debts arose out of those very complications in which America willingly involved herself and, while the law of contracts is sacrosanct, there is also such a thing as the law of equity. We were at one time partners in a joint concern and though the partnership has been dissolved the present situation has arisen in consequence of acts done during the term of partnership. The question in equity is should one partner "bear the whole brunt" of making good the loss incurred while a second partner pockets his share of the remaining assets and the others disclaim responsibility? "Issachar," said the blind prophet, "is a strong ass couching between two burdens." Britain couches between the twin burdens of repayment of American debts and inter-allied default.

But what if the ass is unable even to "couch" and lies down? It is not enough to stand on a punctilio and say "Such is the law. What are you going to do about it?" The present Labour Government of Great Britain will not repeat the old shibboleths nor allow itself to be fettered by red tape precedents. There is to be a revaluation of old values and the question we have raised must again come up for discussion. We do not attempt to prejudice it nor to forget the very great obligations—apart from debts which are also obligations—which Europe owes to America, we merely desire to postulate that there is here a question for discussion. It ought not to be regarded as a chose jugée.

THE departure of the first group of Russian Cadets and their teachers to Serbia has been arranged to take place early in February.

maintain friendly relations and await for the coming of peace so that the people will not unnecessarily have to be alarmed. You are a man of intelligence and I know that you are right in [illegible] in the past, [illegible] alone.

Marshal Chi, in exchanging letters, says:—

"Kiangsu and Chêkiang are related as the lips are to the teeth, and [illegible] and are closely concerned with each other. In troubles, they should work together and bear with one another.

"Because of internal trouble, rumours have been spread, and I am sure that [illegible] have some object in view or are allowing themselves to be used as tools. Unfortunately, those who do not understand think that these rumours are true and become alarmed. Fortunately there is no truth in this and you and I are of one mind and our aim is to [illegible] benefit of the people. The men [illegible] have not much time to spare have sacrificed everything for peace—time, health, wealth and energy—and we should give them our support.

"Thanks to Providence, the peace is now concluded through the treaty and tranquility will be strengthened. Now is our chance to set an example to the other provinces. Then, if that is brought about how can we express our happiness in words? I hope you will give me your advice and friendly suggestions from time to time.

Peking, Jan. 23.

Proclamations were posted up in all prominent quarters of Nanking on January 24 announcing that there would be no war between Kiangsu and Chêkiang. The proclamations were signed by Gen. Chih Hsieh-yuan, Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang and the Civil Governors of the two provinces. This is said to have been the result of the efforts of Chinese businessmen in those provinces, who have not yet succeeded, however, in getting Gen. Sun Chuan-fang to subscribe to their peace plan.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DECREASE IN SALT REVENUE

But Foreign Obligations Fully Met and Surplus Funds Handed Over

Peking, Jan. 25.

The Salt Revenue for [illegible], after meeting administrative expenses, credited to the group of banks during the year an amount of $72,545,000, showing a decrease of $6,244,000 as compared with 1922.

All obligations secured on the Salt Revenue have been fully met and the surplus funds released to the Government amount to $71,500,000 (including $12,500,000 received from the Maritime Customs). Of this some $30,307,000 represents sums either retained locally or appropriated by provincial authorities or military commanders.

These retentions cannot be compared with the amount of $21,000,000 retained in 1922 as the sum of $30,307,000, representing local retentions in 1923, does not include the full amount of the revenue retained during the year by the Kuangtung local authorities, whose illegal and arbitrary action in direct violation of the Reorganization Loan Agreement and in spite of protests from the Consuls-General of the various Powers in Canton compelled the Chief Inspectors to close the local Salt District Inspectorate from May, 1923, and temporarily to close the Pakhoi Assistant District Inspectorate from the end of June until the middle of September.

From information received it appears that the revenue collected in Canton by the local authorities since May, 1923, to the end of the year amounted to $2,828,000, as compared with the collection of $8,027,000 during the same period when the Canton District Inspectorate was functioning.

The reserve in the Group banks was maintained during the year at $7,000,000.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SUN PAO-CHI AND THE SENATE

Premier's Explanation of Policy: The Gold Franc Issue Discussed

Peking, Jan. 23.

The Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, [illegible] the meeting of the Senate was opened. Only 19 members were present. Mr. Ku [illegible] presided. After reading a statement on the gold franc issue, the Premier explained that under the constitution [illegible] Ministers were obliged to come to Parliament and submit their administrative policy to the House, but owing to the fact that several Ministers had not yet assumed office he had felt it advisable to come to the Senate and express his own personal views on national policy. Briefly [illegible] was to maintain the constitution, respect Parliament, and work for the [illegible] by constitutional and peaceful methods.

Replying to questions on the gold franc issue, the Premier stated that before taking up his present post he had given no little study to this question. The Waichiaopu had conducted the negotiations in respect of this issue, and he would keep the House informed of any development in this matter. He believed that Dr. Wellington Koo, who was opposed to the payment in gold, was capable of handling the situation. Nothing had occurred since the Note sent by the Waichiaopu to the Powers rejecting the demand for payment in gold.

Several members having expressed suspicions with regard to Mr. Wang Ko-ming, the Premier stated that these suspicions were unfounded, and he assured the House that there would be no betrayal of national interests in respect of this matter. With reference to the "Chaban," (motion for inquiry and prosecution), it had been sent to the Cabinet before Mr. Sun became Premier, but he would on his return to the Cabinet study the document.

40 YEARS IN PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. Sun Pao-chi reminded the Senators that he had been in the Government service for nearly 40 years and stated confidently that during that time he had never been guilty of betrayal. He had always been loyal to the Government and to his official colleagues. Now that he was Premier he expected officials and departments to be loyal to him. While hoping for and expecting loyalty he would nevertheless watch closely to guard against betrayal.

This concluded the proceedings.

President Tsao is reported to have instructed the Cabinet to have several thousands of copies of the Constitution printed by the Government Printing Office for distribution in the provinces.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PREMIER TO VISIT SOUTH CHINA

Mr. Sun Pao-chi Undertaking Personal Mission in Search of Peace

Peking, Jan. 26.

It is reported on good authority that the Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, intends visiting Chêkiang and probably Kuangsi, Fukien and Canton with the object of securing agreement and peace between the provinces and later reunification. Dr. W. W. Yen will act as Premier during the absence of Mr. Sun.

The Premier has also sent a circular telegram to the provinces urging economy privately as well as publicly and reduction of troops which he will personally bring to the attention of the provincial leaders during his tour.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HUNAN'S AUTONOMY

PEKING'S FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES

Usual New Year Penury: Premier Sun's Optimism and Offer to See Things Through

Peking, Jan. 22.

Mr. Chang Kuo-kan did not attend the meeting of the Cabinet this morning, from which Mr. Wang Ko-ming was also absent, owing, it is asserted, to illness. The fact that Premier Sun called on the President again to-day indicates that Mr. Wang's indisposition may continue for some time, as it is stated on good authority that Mr. Sun will again offer to carry on the affairs of the Ministry of Finance pending Mr. Wang's recovery.

Premier Sun's friends state that he is quite optimistic regarding the present position and it is hinted that he is prepared to carry the Government over its financial obligations for the Chinese New Year himself if necessary.

The only business of the Cabinet meeting this morning given out by the Secretariat of the Cabinet is the appointment of Mr. Kuang Tso as Chief of the Administrative Department of Hupeh and acceptance of the resignation of Mr. Tang Cheh-chi, the former incumbent.

Mr. Chang Kuo-kan called on President Tsao this morning and asked for financial arrangements to be made to meet educational expenses as soon as possible as he did not wish to take up his post with arrears owing to the eight Government colleges for half a year.

A group of Senators called on the Premier to-day and urged that their salaries should be paid before the lunar new year.

Telegrams of congratulations to Premier Sun have been received by the Cabinet from Mr. Alfred Sze, Minister at Washington, and Admiral Sah Chen-ping, Civil Governor of Fukien.

MR. WANG KO-MING.

Peking, Jan. 24.

It is understood that the Finance Minister, Mr. Wang Ko-ming, submitted to the Cabinet to-day a plan for raising $3,000,000 immediately to meet lunar New Year obligations. Admiral Li Ting-hsin is said to have suggested providing funds to pay the men of the fleet at Tsingtao before the new year.

Mr. Wang Ko-ming's sudden resolve to attend office to-day is believed to have been due to some extent to representations made to him by the police authorities in Peking, who feared there would be trouble if their men were not paid.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Jan. 25.

The House of Representatives has for the time being dropped the proposed impeachment of Mr. Wang Ko-ming. The opinion in official circles is divided as to whether this development is the outcome of the favourable impression created by Mr. Sun Pao-chi's statement regarding the gold franc question or is due to the anxiety of the members to receive their salaries before the New Year.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINA NEW YEAR

Peking's Expenses

Peking, Jan. 20.

Expenses required by the Chinese Government for tiding over the Chinese New Year are, it is reported, at least four or five million dollars, including $3,000,000 as administrative expenses, $500,000 or $600,000 as military expenses, and a certain amount as salaries to be paid to those who are to be discharged consequent upon financial readjustment. The above figures do not include interest on foreign and domestic loans. The Ministry of Finance at first intended to issue $12,000,000 Tsung Wen Men exchequer bonds and to apply a portion of the sum thus raised to the expenses required, but in view of strong opposition to the issuance of the bonds in question as well as to various complicated internal circumstances, this plan will, it is expected, not be put in force. In these circumstances, there appears to be no alternative [illegible] over the Chinese New Year by securing $2,000,000 of Salt Surplus, $1,000,000 from the Chinese Bankers' Group and $1,000,0000 from a different source. It is, however, problematical whether the whole of the $2,000,000 from the Salt Surplus, as calculated by the Chinese Government, will be secured.—Eastern News Agency.

Salt Surplus to Help

Peking, Jan. 30.

Arrangements have been made for the Chinese Government to receive about $3,000,000 of salt surplus funds, of which a portion will be devoted to the Russian Reorganization Loan coupons held by Japan. The former French objection to such releases based on the gold franc dispute has withdrawn.

It is officially stated that the Government's New Year obligations are not heavy and the salt surplus release itself will be nearly enough.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WU PEI-FU'S DEMAND FOR FUNDS

Peking, Jan. 26.

According to unofficial reports from Shantung, Marshal Wu Pei-fu proposes to call upon the Tsingtao-Tsinanfu Railway Administration to provide $500,000 for the repairs of the six Chinese warships at Kiaochou and for payment of the salaries of the personnel up to date. After this has been done he suggests that the railway, Chinese merchants at Tsingtao, the Tsingtao local government and the Customs should each provide $50,000 a month for the upkeep of the squadron. There is said to be considerable opposition locally to this plan. Three hundred marines from these vessels are now working with the local police in patrolling the city.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING DAY BY DAY

Was It an Earthquake? An Anfu Illness to Conceal a Political Journey

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 24.

There has been much dispute in Peking during the past few days as to whether an earthquake was or was not felt here a few minutes past 8 o'clock on Saturday evening, January 19. A decided shock, accompanied by a loud underground rumbling, was felt at the time stated in a number of widely separated foreign residences at the Race Course, a few miles west of Peking. After a very brief interval this was followed by a tremour, sustained for perhaps two or three seconds, which was accompanied by a very faint reverberation. There was the usual accompaniment of the creaking of furniture and beams and the rattling of stoves, lamps and pottery. On Sunday it was learned with surprise that the foreign community in Peking had neither felt nor heard the quake and the theory was generally advanced that one of the army ammunition stores west of Peking had blown up. This was not satisfactory to those scientifically inclined because the Government magazines are a long way off, while the shock felt and the sound heard on Saturday evening coincided, which would not be possible in the case of a remote explosion. The Race Course folk were greatly "bucked" on Monday morning when the Chinese press came out unanimously with a report of a quake felt inside the city during which five distinct minor shocks had been felt. On Tuesday there was again some doubt in many minds when the foreign press announced that the earthquake story could not be substantiated. The only paper loyal to the quake was the "Journal de Pékin" which reported that a severe shock had been felt in the Western Hills. Opinion here is still divided and it would be of real interest to the community to know what the Shanghai seismologists have to say.

MARSHAL TUAN'S ILLNESS.

Much concern was recently expressed here when it was announced that Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, who is living in General Wu Kuang-hsin's house in Tientsin, was seriously ill with scarlet fever. It now transpires that there was little, if any, ground for the anxiety expressed by his many friends and admirers. The writer has learned on good authority that though foreign physicians were called in to attend Marshal Tuan, he was not seriously ill and that the report that he had scarlet fever was published by his immediate supporters. The Chihli leaders in Tientsin claim to have proof that the former Anfu chief was planning to go to Shanghai and "staged" a serious illness in the hope that his movements would be less closely spied upon. The secret was not well kept, however, and when the Anfu folk, through counter-espionage, learned that their plans were known, the elderly Marshal effected a complete and abrupt recovery.

It is not believed here that the plan of carrying Tuan Chi-jui to Shanghai has been abandoned by the Anfu group. Another attempt to take him south will probably be made and there is no good reason why it should not succeed, because nothing could bar him from such a pilgrimage but an act of violence in the foreign concessions in Tientsin or a piratical attack upon a foreign vessel, if he went by sea.

The Chihli people here take it for granted that Marshal Tuan's purpose in going South is to get into closer touch with Generals Ho Feng-lin and Lu Yung-hsiang and with possible allies in Fukien and other southern provinces, but it is not believed that he would venture to go to Hangchow. The Chêkiang gentry would presumably interpret his visit to their capital as a war portent and oppose it vociferously in ways which would mean a loss of face for both Gen. Lu and Marshal Tuan. Peking does not believe that they are likely to risk this.

A REPUBLICAN DISGUISE.

Those who have to write about Chinese politics year in and year out are incessantly searching for new phrases and new figures of speech to impress upon the world that the Chinese "Government" is not a Government and that the Chinese "Republic" is not a Republic. The writer long ago exhausted a jaded imagination in this field; but he welcomed what he thought a new contribution from a fresher mind a few days ago when he heard an American in a semi-diplomatic position make the following tactful remarks to a youthful Chinese enthusiast who had rubbed him the wrong way:

". . . . . and you stand there and call this the Republic of China? Why you might as well nail a Packard name plate on a Peking mule cart and call it a limousine!"

Premier Sun's Official Calls: Sympathy Upon the Death of M. Lenin

Peking, Jan. 25

Dr. Wellington Koo, on learning of the death of M. Lenin, sent Mr. Tchou, Secretary of the Waichiaopu, to call on Mr. Karakhan and express his sympathy.

At the meeting of the Cabinet yesterday, it is reported, a Minister suggested that General Lu Yung-ting should be appointed Tuli of Kuangsi, and after some discussion the proposal was referred to the Ministry of War for consideration.

In Government circles it is reported that Premier Sun Pao-chi will shortly make official calls at the several Legations in Peking in his capacity as Premier.

President Tsao Kun has despatched Mr. Hsu Kuo-chen, one of his secretaries, to proceed to Tientsin to make inquiries regarding the health of Marshal Tuan Chi-jui. He is also carrying presents from the President.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINA AND THE SOVIET

Peking, Jan. 25.

An early opening of Sino-Russian negotiations is anticipated owing [illegible] report that Dr. C. T. Wang has telegraphed to the Manchurian delegates appointed to watch proceedings advising them that they should reach Peking on February 15.—French Wireless.

membership of only 200—while the American Red Cross did the work of administration and investigation. But the A.R.C. being entirely supported from Home, the Association tried to arrange with other American organizations to take over and finance this part of the work. The attempt failed, but another is being made which, with the aid of the American Club and the Columbia Country Club, looks more promising. The hope is to obtain a regular monthly income. In no selfish sense the members of other foreign communities in Shanghai would be glad if the scheme succeeded. It is a pleasing custom now of many years standing—and it was an American, Dr. Amos Wilder, who invented it—when one of our friends "goes West" to send something to a charity instead of buying a wreath; and when that friend is an American, what more natural than to choose an American charity? But, curiously, for a people that are most generous in giving and even lavish with endowments, there appears to have been a deficiency of organized philanthropies among Americans in Shanghai: at least we must confess to being ignorant of their names. The ideas of the American Association of China, therefore, in this direction are welcome on all counts; and when they set about collecting money, perhaps we might remind them of the title of one of their country's most brilliant comedies, that "it pays to advertise."

Mr. Wen Shih-tsen, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and Superintendent of Customs at Nanking, and Mrs. Wen, celebrated their silver wedding on Tuesday. Mr. Wen, who is also adviser to Marshal Chi Shich-yuan (Military Governor of Kiangsu), has made a name for himself for his work at Lincheng in endeavouring to secure the release of the Chinese and foreign captives in the hands of Sun Mei [illegible] of the Pactzeku [illegible] and his men. President Tsao Kun sent one of his staff officers, Mr. Feh Yin-shan, to Nanking to present a huge pair of silver cups to Mr. and Mrs. Wen as the centre of the occasion.

An interesting statement has been made by the new Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, to President Tsao Kun, this being to the effect that at a time during spring he will travel about the country for three months, to meet the leaders in the provinces and to urge upon them the necessity of peace and unification in China. During his absence he suggests that Dr. Wellington Koo (Minister of Foreign Affairs) or Dr. W. W. Yen (Minister of Agriculture and Commerce) should be acting Premier. Mr. Sun also suggests, reports the "Journal of Commerce," a loan to meet the expenses of the Presidential Office and for the payment of the Chinese and Foreign advisers of the Government.

A Peking newspaper states that the Ministry of Finance has instructed the provinces not to levy special taxes on cigarettes. Chêkiang was the first province to levy this extra tax which has been regarded by the British and American Ministers as a violation of treaty rights. To this the Chêkiang provincial authorities retorted that the tax simply meant an increase of burden for the consumers, but not for the cigarette merchants. Since then other provinces have followed suit. The British Minister warned the Government that such action on the part of the provinces might eventually affect the decisions of the Tariff Conference. Although tobacco and wine are luxuries, Customs regulations do not permit the provinces to levy extra taxes. The Ministry of Finance fearing that this illegal tax may embarrass China's position at the conference has instructed the Civil Governors concerned to cancel the tax.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Greek Dynasty

In his latest declaration to the Greek legislative assembly M. Venizelos shows himself true to his traditional policy vis-à-vis of the dynasty. To-day a republican element in Greece wishes the dynasty to disappear once and for all, and if given a free hand would finish it off immediately by Act of Parliament. M. Venizelos appears as a moderating influence in the case, and when he lays it down that there must be a plebiscite to test the sentiment of the whole country on the matter, we find him on similar ground to that which he occupied during the war. King Constantine had afforded some very pronounced examples of treachery prior to the Greek entry into the struggle, and correspondence on the part of himself and his spouse with Berlin, since published, has shown how to the very last he hoped to defeat the constitutional methods of M. Venizelos. As the leading Greek statesman M. Venizelos deemed it necessary in his country's interest to enter the war on the side of the Allies, and in this attitude he was backed by a substantial majority of his countrymen, yet Constantine made no bones about thwarting his policy. Even after the Allied troops had landed at Salonika and there had been further royalist treachery, M. Venizelos still hoped that Constantine might be brought to a reasonable state of mind, and not until it was absolutely certain that his efforts were futile did he raise the standard of revolt. Throughout his career he has shown a rare loyalty to an ungrateful governing house, and even in their absence to-day he stands out as protecting their interests.

The Cigarette Tax

That the Kiangsu authorities have found it necessary, in the face of public opposition, to postpone collection of the 20 per cent. cigarette tax till after China New Year, is very interesting. Of course it may really be just a postponement. But Chinese opinion is that the officials are only trying to save face and that the tax will never be levied. Just so, one recalls, the raising of postal and telegraph charges was put off to a more convenient season a year ago, in deference to popular objection. It is highly important to note these successful demonstrations of public opinion. In addition to the two mentioned, we have also the peace treaty signed last August between Chêkiang and Kiangsu and reiterated a few days ago. These manifestations of public feeling, be it remembered, take place on Chinese soil infinitely more valuable, therefore, than any number of denunciations from foreign settlement security have no military force to help them, are simply the result of men getting together and saying "This we will not stand." They show that the government of China is subservient to the people if they are determined it shall be.

Panama's Vulnerability

The American naval manœuvres having for their object the testing of the vulnerability to attack of the Panama Canal have resulted very largely in the same way as certain tests made by Great Britain in the North Sea shortly before the outbreak of war. The special idea on that occasion was to ascertain whether a raiding force could slip through the naval screen protecting the coast and effect a landing, and Admiral Jellicoe, in charge of the raiders, succeeded. He seems to have done his work extraordinarily well, disguising transports with dummy funnels and so forth. Subsequently the war, although falling short of such a definite conclusion, proved that coastal towns could no longer be considered immune from the guns of raiding cruisers. The British Navy proved exactly the same thing in respect of aerial attacks upon the German coast. What the American manœuvres have resulted in is an appreciation that the Panama Canal is in exactly the same position as mentioned above, and accordingly proposals are being made for elaborate aerial and naval defences. Here we come again to that debateable point under the Washington Agreement which has agitated Washington and London in turn increased elevation of long range guns on battleships. One of the Panama recommendations is that this greater elevation should be applied to the older battleships still in commission, and now that here is a definite proposal we shall no doubt learn at last whether it is permissible or not under the Treaty.

Mussolini and Macdonald

The arrival of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald as Prime Minister of Great Britain and the coming appeal of Signor Mussolini to the electorate of Italy form a conjunction of events which is intriguing. Up to a point the careers of Mr Macdonald and Signor Mussolini were so similar, but thereafter so divergent, that one well known Italian resident said the other day with a wealth of expression, "Ah! If the two could only meet!" It is easy to see what he was driving at. Both came from the working classes, and both flung themselves into the cause of Socialism early in life. Signor Mussolini eventually becoming a Communist. Then came the war and the striking difference between their careers, for while Mr. Macdonald became a Pacifist of the International brand, Signor Mussolini threw aside his politics and enlisted in the Italian army as a private. Signor Mussolini emerged from the war as one of the strongest opponents of Communism possible: he founded the Fascisti who saved Italy from a very real Communist menace, and in a recent article Lord Rothermere laid it down that he saved Europe from Communism by his action. To-day he goes out to convert to his line of action the least favourable parts of Italy. Mr. Macdonald is probably also developing, and it may be in a similar direction. Most people expected to see such men as Mr. Robert Smillie, the miners' secretary, taking power with him, but instead we have three peers presumably with capitalistic interests at stake. One, Lord Chelmsford, is the son of a distinguished general; a second, Lord Haldane, besides being a highly paid lawyer, is a landowner in Perthshire; the third, Lord Parmoor, also a lawyer, is interested in shipping. (Incidentally his son was in Shanghai not so long ago in connexion with the interests of the Blue Funnel Line). It was by noting facts such as these that our Italian resident was impelled to make his remark, and we fancy that a very great number of people are to-day thinking along the same lines.

The Philippines To-day

To the onlooker the resemblance between the Philippines and India becomes politically closer every day. America has placed a very strong man in the position of Governor-General of the Philippines, and when certain of the populace there get out of hand he does not hesitate to take action. A few months ago General Wood came into violent conflict with his Cabinet because of this very strength that he shows, and when the Cabinet resigned en masse to show their displeasure he made no bones about accepting their resignation. Recent disturbances throughout the country he has tackled in exactly the same spirit, and now that he is dealing thus with the Colorums, who seem to be well on the war path, he finds himself denounced by one of the leading politicians of the islands. The Indian Nationalists are not one whit behind the Philippine politicians in their use of like methods, and so we see the surface resemblance, at any rate, of the two dependencies amazingly close. It is unlikely that General Wood will trouble himself much about this latest attack on his conduct, for he knows his job and means to carry it through, but some other people in more or less influential positions are certain to disagree with him, and it will be a misfortune if they succeed in weakening his position.

True and False Money

Certain quasi-financial circles in the United States appear to be so much impressed with the absorption of gold and silver by India and China and the adverse effect which this may have on Europe's future financial position, that they are apt to lose the real significance of it, at any rate where China is concerned. In one of the most recent papers representing the circles quoted above—incidentally the same paper which predicted fireworks in silver many months ago on the assumption that Russia was about to embark on a great scheme of silver currency, and which never came off—we find the suggestion that India and China will probably take G.$25,000,000 worth of silver this year, and it emphasizes the point that the larger part of such consignments never leaves these countries. Its comment on the case is: -

While the rest of the world- exclusive of America -apparently deceives itself with "soft money" values, the Far East constantly fortifies its monetary position and builds for that inevitable period when there must be readjustments between false and true credit.

Remembering all the reports of silver hoarding that used to come from our up-country correspondents, and knowing how on occasion silver may vanish from Shanghai, leaving it short of even normal requirements, it may be doubted whether this is anything like a true presentment of the case here. The fact of the matter, of course, is that the Chinese have in the past had such an experience of "false" credit, in the shape of unsecured banknotes which rapidly depreciated, that ultimately they required silver for the payment of their debts. At times, accordingly, when considerable amounts of money have come into the country, a proportion of it must have been placed unproductive in holes in the ground. At some future date this money will no doubt be available to fortify the country's credit position, but that will scarcely be until Tuchunry and banditry have been exorcised, and judging by the present rate of progress towards that end Europe may have been able to recover somewhat before it comes about.

Terminological Changes

The resident who has been here for, say, a score of years may well bethink himself of how the principal foreign language of Shanghai, English, has altered in its aspect during these years By the post to-day ratepayers are receiving a pamphlet entitled "A Community Movement," and they find that it is the annual report of the Moral Welfare League. A score of years ago this would have possibly been called "A Public Movement," as having been brought into existence by public or at least public-spirited men and women, and nobody ever suggested that there was anything lacking in the signification of the title. The word "public," however, seems to have fallen on evil days, and not only do we have Community Movements and Community Christmas Frees, but there is a foursome at Kiangwan which describes itself as playing Community Golf. In exactly the same way, that beautiful word "holiday" is being steadily displaced by the uninteresting and commonplace "vacation," and the timetable which one used to scan at railway stations is a schedule (variously pronounced). After the summer, women buy Fall hats and men Fall suitings, and when they dine out or take a trip by steamer they make reservations. Against the last mentioned, however, one great institution has stood out. It is the theatre, and we still book seats.

Protection or Levy

After studying an analysis of election figures on the question of a Capital Levy or Protection which appears in the issue of Lloyds Bank Monthly following the recent contest, there must be some doubt as to how Great Britain as a whole stands in regard to Free Trade. The principal issue before the country was unemployment, and while the Conservatives held out Protection as the cure, the Labour Party put forward the proposal of a Capital Levy. The analysis we have quoted puts the position thus:—Protection—votes for, 5,300,000; against, 8,900,000; majority against, 3,600,000: Capital Levy—votes for, 4,300,000, against 9,800,000, majority against 5,500,000. The country thus is taken by the authority we have quoted as declaring itself against both Protection and a Levy. Yet it has by no means pledged itself wholeheartedly to the single policy of Free Trade (minus the Levy), as we can see by the present Liberal position in the House of Commons. Apparently about 10,000,000 of the electors felt that something must be done to remedy the position of the country's trade and so they either voted for Protection or a Capital Levy, and on their vote it might be argued that this majority believe that orthodox Free Trade as practised in the past is no longer adequate to our needs. Then comes the breach—fiscal reform or a Levy. Following the collection of the Levy the Labour Party would, of course, return to strict Free Trade, and as it is not in a position to impose the Levy at present, Free Trade will no doubt continue.

Mr. Little's Reply

Mr. E. S. Little's rejoinder to the attack upon him in the Australian Parliament, which led to that Government telegraphing to him to shut up the Commissioner's office and stop work makes a good showing even in the summarized form in the original far more so. If he were actually guilty of all the charges brought by his opponents, he ought at least to have been given a chance to defend himself, and after the Australian Government had sent Senator Bakhap up to Shanghai to investigate, whose report completely exonerated Mr. Little, the manner in which the latter was thrown to the wolves last summer does not impress one favourably with Dominion politics. Whether Mr. Little was or was not qualified (by experience, etc.) to be the Australian Commissioner, is beside the question: the Australian Government certainly thought he was at one time. The onslaught on him with no opportunity given him to reply, and his summary dismissal (especially after the Bakhap report) was, to put it mildly, not fair fighting. His real crime, one cannot but suspect, was first, that another Government had come in since his appointment, and the principle of spoils of office is unfortunately notorious in Dominion politics: secondly, that he is not Australian-born.

The Shell-Shock Patient

Mr. J. H Thomas, the new Colonial Secretary, has floated into office upon a wave of laughter. The remark made by the hall porter about his being "another shell shock patient" when he arrived to assume his duties is so typical of that type of man that it deserves to go down to posterity as a classic. Obviously nobody has appreciated it more than Mr. Thomas himself, and so the laughter is without malice. It was different in one beautiful case during the General Election of 1900, when a celebrated statesman, still to the fore, turned nasty over something very nearly as good. This individual has one of the most difficult pronunciations imaginable, and speaks so fast that to the listener, unless specially trained by experience, it is impossible to distinguish between such words as "impotent" and "impudent." Among the reporters at one of his meetings during the election in question was a youth whose mind ran principally on football, so that such names as Rovers, Ramblers, Rangers and the like were seldom out of his head. The statesman referred to the Conservatives as "khaki wirepullers," and to his horror found next day that the sporting reporter had transcribed it as "khaki warblers." Explanations and corrections were instantly demanded, and the Conservative Press then had the time of its life. One paper, being very rude, said that at last it had felt able to congratulate the statesman on making an original remark, but was disappointed on finding that the originality lay in the reporter. Possibly it was right, for the reporter is now an editor.

SHANGHAI'S MILK SUPPLY

Jan. 31.

It is to be hoped that all ratepayers will study the report of the Pure Milk Commission, issued as a supplement to the Municipal Gazette last Tuesday. It is interesting, it concerns us all and it proposes certain definite measures the bearing of which everybody should understand. The object which the Commission kept continually in view was to combine purity of the milk supply, sufficiency and price. For example, it would have been absurd to recommend such requirements in a dairy as the Chinese cow-keeper could only fulfil at a cost that would raise the price of his milk beyond customers' ability to pay. Accordingly two grades of licence have been suggested, A and B. With the conditions contained in A, there are already dairies which comply or very nearly so: with those of B no unnecessary difficulty or expense should be involved in compliance. The Commission did not attempt to force all dairies up to the standard of the best foreign dairies; the vast majority of consumers could not pay the price entailed. The wisdom of the case was to endeavour to secure milk of reasonably good quality fit at least when boiled for human consumption. This Grade B appears to do. It is interesting to note that the Commission heard the legal representative of a certain dairy, who "urged that when a sample of milk is taken for analysis, half the same should be returned to the dairy owner for the purpose, if desired, of an independent analysis." It is hardly surprising to read that "the Commission see great danger in this of the dairy owner substituting another sample." The same witness also urged that public notification in the Gazette, of adulterated milk having been found in any dairy, before conviction in the Mixed Court, did much more damage to the dairyman than even the conviction. The public reply to this will be immediately, "Then let us have more and wider publicity."

The Commission did not reach its conclusions without personally inspecting a number of dairies of which the following is certainly no exaggerated description:

The Commission was very adversely impressed by the insanitary conditions existing in many of the dairies inspected: conditions which in many cases might very easily be remedied without undue hardship to the dairy keeper. In many cases the cow stables were filthy, badly ventilated, lacking in drainage and ever crowded. Milk handling rooms were inadequate, and milking utensils and bottles of patrons very often [illegible] cleanse. Instances were observed where the boiler from which hot water should have been obtained for washing bottles, etc., had evidently not been in use for a considerable time. Open latrines and uncovered kangs were found in close proximity to cow stables and milk rooms. Generally there was evidence that, either the inspection had been very inadequately carried out, or that the Health Office Inspectors were lacking in power to enforce the licence conditions.

The conclusion is the need for strict enforcement of all regulations and conditions, with the special recommendation that the licence be attached to the premises as well as to the owner and that on a flagrant breach of certain conditions after due warning, the Council should withdraw or suspend the licence.

This would stop the common practice of a delinquent carrying on by a proxy.

But when all other conditions are fulfilled, there is still at times a shortage in the requisite quantity of milk, which undoubtedly is made up by milk from unlicensed dairies outside the Settlement. The enormous difficulty of checking this influx is obvious and the Commission therefore lays stress on the fullest control being given to those who have to see that the new licence conditions are observed. But attacking the problem from the other end, the Commission finds that the dearness and occasional shortage of milk are due to the frequency of disease amongst cattle, and this leads up to its most important recommendation of all, namely the appointment of a Municipal Veterinary Surgeon. Here is its reasoning in a nutshell:

1. The question of the plentiful supply of pure milk at a reasonable cost is dependent upon the prevention and the spread of cattle diseases.

2. Health Inspectors are not qualified to diagnose diseases of cattle. Hence they cannot effectively prevent the spread of diseases.

3. Certification every three months by approved local practising Veterinary Surgeons would not prove sufficient to check the spread of tuberculosis, rinderpest or other infectious diseases.

4. Other matters which only an absolutely independent and fully qualified Veterinary Surgeon can control, and which are of the highest importance are:—(a) The disposal of carcases of animals dead from disease and (b) The movement of animals suffering from diseases over Municipal roads.

Space does not permit of going at length into all the reasons why the Commission presses for a new official and cannot accept the three monthly certification urged by the Commissioner of Public Health and mentioned in clause No. 3 above. They are given fully in the report and, although the appointment of a municipal "vet." will cost money and undoubtedly occasion the greatest controversy when the report is considered by the Council, we believe that the Commission will be held at least to have made out a strong case.

No summary can do justice to all the points in the report and it is certainly to be hoped that ratepayers will take the trouble to study for themselves a document which assuredly endeavours to make a real contribution to public health. But one more quotation may be underlined:—

In conclusion, the Commission would like to impress upon the public that, while the Health Department may do everything possible to protect their interests, it must be for the public to exercise their own personal supervision. If consumers would remove their custom from dairies convicted of serious breaches of licence conditions, and go to the trouble of visiting their dairies, they would be helping towards a Pure Milk Supply to a greater extent than can be accomplished by any Regulations which the Council may see fit to impose.

Just as people cannot be made virtuous by act of parliament, no municipal regulations can ensure hygiene in households whose mistress never enters her own kitchen.

Acting in response to a request from the Japanese Minister, the Minister of Foreign Affairs has instructed Admiral Wen Shah-yeh, commander of the Tsingtao section of the Chinese Navy which recently arrived there from Canton, to take his gunboats to sea to suppress pirates, reports the Shanghai Journal of Commerce. Admiral Wen has suggested the establishment of a new naval college at Tsingtao.

FIUME AND ITS CONSEQUENCES

Feb. 1.

While the public of Great Britain has been concentrating its attention first on a General Election and then on the advent of Labour to power, very important events have been culminating in Central Europe. After four years of the bitterest animosity, Italy and Jugo-Slavia have made an alliance, and the effects of it are so far-reaching that for the future they will react upon every phase of European politics. To realize the situation we must trace the position of these nations since the war. Italy and Jugo-Slavia, (the principal partner in which is Serbia) were allies during the struggle against the Central Powers, and so long as the Dual Monarchy of Austria-Hungary remained a menace it held them together. When, however, the Austrian Empire broke up, trouble began. Italy, previously confined to the west coast of the Adriatic, gradually crept down the eastern side and reached the important port of Fiume. Now Fiume is in the most delicate position possible. Its population is almost purely Italian in character, but the surrounding country is pure Jugo-Slav. Moreover it is an important outlet both for Italian and Jugo-Slav trade, and naturally when the treaty-makers came to deal with it they found themselves in very great difficulties. The Treaty of Rapallo, which settled the disposition of this section of Europe, was largely dominated by President Wilson's ideas of self-determination, but while the diplomats took into consideration the general sentiments of the populace, they failed to contemplate the peculiar position of the hitherto isolated inhabitants of Fiume. President Wilson's obstinate belief in his theories overruled Italy and all the other Powers, and while leading to an amazing set of situations, might equally have led to war.

The theories of the treaty-makers, admirably calculated as they were, did not in the least appeal to the people of Fiume, who after years of Austro-Hungarian domination at length hoped to see themselves under the flag of Italy, whose territory they now adjoined following the war. When they found that Fiume was to be merely an independent, insignificant state—actually nothing more than a port—with no convenient standing for its citizens abroad, the mother instinct became dominant and the inhabitants declared for Italian nationality and Italian possession. Then d'Annunzio stepped in, and proceeded to hold Fiume for Italy against the whole world, and as it subsequently turned out, against Italy. He had Italian volunteers and Fiume residents as his army, and there was the spectacle of a poet with a mere handful of men defying the armed world. The armed world was, however, merciful and instead of crushing such impertinence, took steps to let the movement die with as little loss of blood as possible. D'Annunzio was allowed to retire to his country villa in Italy, and Fiume became independent although under Italian protection. Both Italy and Jugo-Slavia, however, had covetous eyes upon her, but the advantage lay all on Italy's side. She financed the port, and has spent no less than 300,000,000 lire upon it since. The position, however, was fraught with danger. And not until Signor Mussolini decided to risk everything so that Fiume should be Italian did the atmosphere clear. In doing so he almost courted war, but the very boldness of the step he took probably averted that event. The inhabitants of Fiume once more declared themselves Italian in a proclamation, and with that knowledge behind him Signor Mussolini intimated to Jugo-Slavia that he proposed to settle the question finally on the lines thus indicated. Porto Barros, a small seaport to the south of Fiume, would go to Jugo-Slavia; the port of Fiume would be a free port for Jugo-Slav trade and would be administered by a commission of Italians, Jugo-Slavs and residents of Fiume; and then Italy would ally herself with Jugo-Slavia. A moment of tension ensued, but the principle of the port's annexation to Italy was accepted by M. Pasitch, the Premier of Jugo-Slavia, who appears to have great statesmanlike qualities, and to-day the treaty has been signed to the general satisfaction of both nations.

We have dealt at this length with the history of Fiume not because of the dispute over Fiume but as leading up to the position which it will enable Italy to take in the most important question in Europe to-day—German reparations. So long as Italy was in bitter enmity with Jugo-Slavia she was at a disadvantage in talking to France on reparations. She found herself opposed front and rear. Her danger was increased when France started pourparlers with Czecho-Slovakia, and when the treaty between the two was signed and France secured a controlling influence in the Little Entente, composed of Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania, with Poland possibly giving a helping hand, it looked as if Italy would be isolated. Now, however, Italy and Jugo-Slavia have joined hands, and not only has an equilibrium in the Little Entente been established, but Italy is free to lay her views on reparations unreservedly upon the table. It happens that the pronouncements of Signor Mussolini and the Italian policy in general bear a very strong resemblance to what has been hinted at by British statesmen recently in office and what we know the Labour Party thinks about the matter. That being so, and Italy's hand now being free, we may well be on the eve of a very different policy in European affairs. Signor Mussolini has shown himself to be Italy's strong man. There is a belief that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald may equally prove Britain's strong man, as his interviews suggest, and the whole European situation may actually assume a different aspect, largely owing to the Fiume settlement.

The Doyen of the Diplomatic Corps has once more drawn the attention of the Chinese Government to the activities of the bandits in the vicinity of the southern section of the Tientsin-Pukou Railway and asked that steps be taken to suppress them.

It is understood that Dr. David Z. T. Yui, general secretary of the National Committee of Y.M.C.A.'s in China, will shortly leave for the United States to recuperate after a lengthy illness. Dr. Yui was formerly secretary to the ex-President, Li Yuan-hung, and for two years was a member of the Chinese Advisory Committee to the Shanghai Municipal Council.

AMERICAN ASSOCN. OF CHINA

Feb. 2.

The American Association of China, whose report for 1923 has just reached us, are much more modest in their outpourings than we remember in bygone days. In truth, the task of writing reports on "progress of events" (as the phrase goes) is a depressing one nowadays, consisting of nothing but the record of fruitless expostulation. To some extent the American Association appears to be overshadowed by its sister Chamber of Commerce. The Association's membership is only 207, resident, and the report urges that more Americans, especially those not eligible for the Chamber, should join. This is reasonable, experience having shown, certainly in the British, and we have no doubt in the American community as well, that there is scope for both Chamber and Association and work that quite obviously is better handled by one than by the other.

The report states that "the Executive Committee have made every effort to bring before the authorities at Washington the views of the Association on matters of vital importance to Americans residing in China." The Lincheng outrage is cited in particular, when the Association actively joined with other similar organizations, American and British, in telegraphic bombardment of Home Governments. It is the ceaseless preoccupation of foreigners in China how to enlighten public and official opinion in their home countries as to the true state of affairs in this. We find that great desideratum urgently dwelt on in the very first number of the "North China Herald" seventy-three years ago, and it remains as desirable and as unattainable as ever. In fact, the situation is really worse to-day than it was in 1843. Then, nobody knew anything about China and the people on the spot had a free hand. Now, every twopenny politician thinks he knows everything about China, and Ministers are simply bound hand and foot to their respective chancelleries. Thus we find the American Association writing to the President of the United States to urge "that no action be taken on the proposed remission of the unremitted portion of the Boxer Indemnity until China had a united government." As the report shows, the contingency does not appear imminent. But the mere reference is enough to illustrate the general state of trepidation of foreign communities produced by the sloppy sentiment which suffuses the eyes of Western—it is to be feared we must add, especially American, politicians looking towards China. It is not that these communities ask for the mailed fist: far from it. All they would make clear is that sympathy—the watchword, now, in every affair of the Far East—unless based on a full understanding of facts can only end in disaster, and that the class of person in China with whom the foreign diplomats deal is in no sense representative of the real people and true interests of the land of Sinim.

Some interesting paragraphs describe the work of providing relief among needy Americans, which, it need hardly be added, has grown largely in recent years. The Association undertook to raise the necessary funds—which it did to the tune of $8,000, no mean sum with

HIGHWAYS IN HUNAN

Good Prospects for Roadbuilders in the Province: 26-Mile-Road Nearly Complete

From Our Own Correspondent.

Changsha, Jan. 19.

We have had a visit from Mr. Todd, Chief Engineer of the International Famine Relief Commission, whose headquarters are at Peking, to inspect the work which has been done on the motor-road between Siangtan and Siangsiang and the prospects of its continuation to Paoking.

Mr. Todd was able to report to the local branch of the Association that the work done on the road was about the best he had seen in any road in China. Not only was the roadway well and substantially built, but the bridges were most suitable and so well designed that he wished to have a photo of one of them that it might be used as a model for bridge building elsewhere. Moreover, he had found the financial records well kept and in such order that he had no difficulty in getting to know the cost per unit.

A GLOWING TRIBUTE.

He congratulated the branch committee on the really excellent character of the work done. He was hardly prepared to find so great a difference between the conditions in Hunan and those to which he had been accustomed in North China, as, for instance in the number of rainy days, or the excessive rainfall on some of those days. When allowance had been made for this and also for the incompetence of the labour used at the beginning—which was designedly composed of underfed as well as untrained men taken right from the midst of the famine districts—he thought there was no reason to complain of the undoubtedly high cost of the road. He not only went right to Siangsiang (26 miles) where the final surfacing is now being laid and on which all the bridges, etc., are complete, but pushed right on to Paoking itself. For some miles beyond Siangsiang progress had been made with the embankment necessary for the continuation of the road; but the end of the available funds had checked construction and bridging and culverts were not even started. Beyond, he was able to assure the committee that expenses would be lower, both on account of much less bridging that would be required, and also because the nature of the soil rendered it easy to get the materials for construction. This also, of course, showed that the actual making of the road would be throughout of more suitable material than had been encountered on the lower parts of the river valley through which the part already constructed passes.

The committee were naturally very pleased to hear such a report on the excellent work done by the engineer, Mr. Wilson, under whom all but the construction during the first few months had been carried out, and to whom the designing of the bridge work was entirely due. The committee would have been glad both to continue the work and the engagement of Mr. Wilson, but the interruption to the funds ready for the work has caused the work to slow down to the mere surfacing of the part finished.

WORK IN 12 PROVINCES.

Mr. Todd interested the committee by an account of the plans of the national committee which now aim at unifying the relief work undertaken in some 12 provinces which have branch committees similar to the one he was addressing.

Replying to Mr. Todd, the Chairman of the provincial branch pointed out how the part of the road already constructed was an instance of provincial unification and therefore expressed of the welcome which would be given to similar planning on a national scale. Had the extra 26 miles been all the roadway that was anticipated, there would have been no particular reason for chosing the tract between Siangtan and Siangsiang. But in looking forward to a time when there would be hundreds of miles of motor roads in the province, he pointed out that the section constructed was not only joined to the capital by the military road from Changsha to Siangtan, but was designedly aimed in the direction where water transport was most difficult through rocks and rapids and also most extended in length by the tortuous nature of a channel running through mountainous country. Facilities of transport were amongst the best means of preventing famines in a province like Hunan, where the differences between the productiveness of the lands in the lower valleys and the lands in the hills were so great.

MILITARISM AND THE OPIUM EVIL

Strong Appeal by Chinese Citizens to the International Anti-Opium Association

Peking, Jan. 22.

The following petition has been received by the International Anti-Opium Association from Hueianhsien in Fukien under date of January 10:

The opium evil would have been entirely stamped out of Fukien at an early date, had military conflicts not occurred. Under the pretext of raising funds to meet military expenses the people are now compelled to cultivate poppy and to pay opium taxes. Under such conditions poppy is received again and will spread all over the province, poisoning the people in a serious manner. The Hueian District is in a bad condition. The local gentry are united with the troops and the opium commissioners to force the people to grow opium and impose taxes on it. Every mow of opium land is taxed $16, and a double fine will be inflicted if there is any one who refuses to pay such taxes. Moreover those who have no opium seeds to sow are likewise compelled to pay the taxes. The efforts of scores of years for opium suppression have been destroyed by the militarists and the wicked gentry such as Lin Chi-shih, Chen Ching-hu, Shen Li-kan, Ho Shen-chu, etc. They pay little attention to the law and the treaties. When will the end of such evil come? We, the petitioners, feel great sorrow and are pained to see the people poisoned, opium suppression retrogaded, and the treaties violated. We plead with your Association to ask the Central Government and the Fukien Governors to employ severe measures to stop opium planting and taxes and to punish the chief culprits in order to set an example for the future.

THE NORTHERN CAUSE IN SZECHUAN

Usual Demand for Funds

Peking, Jan. 24.

It is semi-officially reported that the Military Council of the Presidency received a telegram from General Liu Tsen-hou, the Northern leader who is stationed in northern Szechuan, not far from the Shensi border, asking for funds for the payment of his troops. General Liu points out that he is holding an important strategical position, which it would be dangerous to leave.

General Liu was formerly Tuchun of Szechuan and was driven out by General Hsiong Keh-wu. He came over to the North some months ago.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LIVELY EVENTS IN CANTON

Canton, Jan. 18.

Cantonese labourers connected with the rice mills and wholesale rice firms of this city are now on strike, demanding an increase of from 15 to 50 per cent. in wages and a part of the waste or by-products of the mills. Owing to the sympathetic action of other labour unions, several steamers from the outports and Hongkong have been unable to unload their rice cargoes here since the strike became effective on January 15. As rice is the staple food in the south and suspension of this trade will undoubtedly affect Dr. Sun Yat-sen's military operations in Kuangtung- every effort is being made to bring about a peaceful settlement of the issue between the owners and workers in this trade.

A QUARREL OVER SILK.

Gen. Liu Chen-huan of the Kuangsi Army is pressing the Civil Governor of Kuangtung for immediate payment of the arrears due to his men, claiming $90,000. Gen. Liu has been moved to embarrass the Kuangtung Governor by a recent decision of the Canton Government to disallow further taxation of Canton silk goods for the benefit of the Kuangsi mercenary troops. The Civil Governor was forced to protect the silk trade last week by a mass meeting of more than 10,000 silk workers held in front of the governor's office. The meeting refused to adjourn until the Governor formally declared that he would repeal the order for an additional tax. The Kuangsi general is incensed at the Kuangtung Governor for repealing the order without his consent.

The district of Heungshan, the birth-place of Dr. Sun Yat-sen and Mr. Tang Shao-yi, has returned to normal order. Admiral Chan Chak of the Kuangtung River Defence and Magistrate Jue Chock-man of the district, who have been fighting each other for the collection of certain sand-field taxes in the district, have been deprived of their offices.

Mr. Hu Han-min, former Civil Governor of Kuangtung, has refused the offer of Dr. Sun Yat-sen to restore him to office in succession to Civil Governor Liao Chung-hoi who has resigned. Mr. Hu has been twice governor of Kuangtung.

THE YUNNANESE REVOLT.

The mutiny of the 4th Division of the Third Corps of the Yunnanese Army, which lasted from January 10 to 12, resulted in the destruction of the administrative building of the Canton-Samshui Railroad at Shakuaitong, Canton, and the forced suspension of traffic for nearly a week. So far the Divisional Commander responsible for the mutiny has been permitted to transfer to another Corps unpunished Gen. Chiang Kuang-liang of the Third Corps has tendered his resignation.

ANOTHER ATTACK ON CHEN.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen, as Generalissimo of the Constitutional Army in Canton, has ordered preparation for another general attack on Gen. Chen Chiung-ming, in the eastern districts of Kuangtung. It is believed that there will be hard fighting around Canton again before the end of January. Gen. Chen Chiungming has declared to his friends in Hongkong that he expects to be in Canton again for the next Chinese New Year, February 5, while the Generalissimo is getting ready to become President of the proposed "Consolidated Government of China" about the same time.

The navies of Great Britain, the United States of America, Japan; France, Italy, and Portugal are still represented in Canton waters to guard against possible interference with the Chinese Maritime Customs in Canton. It is not believed here that Dr. Sun will carry out his recent threat to seize the Customs House on refusal of the Customs authorities to detain their revenue in Canton and hand over the surplus to the General Headquarters. The number of foreign war-ships in Canton, however, has been greatly reduced. At one time there were as many as 22 war-ships here, including six from the United States Asiatic Fleet.

A war college, providing for 600 cadets, with Dr. Sun Yat-sen himself as commandant will soon be opened in Canton to train officers for an anti-Northern expedition. Applicants for admission must be at least middle school graduates. A course of six months' training will be given.

A detachment of the Northern Army, supported by Gen. Wu Pei-fu and siding with Gen. Shen Hung-ying, a Kuangsi militarist who has been menacing Canton for some months, has occupied Linchow, near the Kuangtung-Kuangsi-Hunan borders.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CAPT. BRANDT'S BODY LEAVES ICHANG

Wonderful Farewell Ceremony: Crackers Fired and Ships' Flags Dipped

Ichang, Jan. 17.

The Tzesui brought the body of Captain Brandt down from Chungking and as the ship had been ordered to Shanghai, the best plan was for her to take the body right on with her, so that it might be interred where his wife and family are.

The steamer was due to leave for Shanghai yesterday forenoon, but before she left a wonderful ceremony took place on board, which shows the great respect the pilots of the Upper Yangtze had for the deceased captain. More than 100 of these pilots went on board, and they had a table placed in front of the coffin, on which they had candles, etc., burning: each one of the pilots had a buttonhole, and when they took their final leave of him, they placed their buttonhole respectfully and lovingly on the coffin. Besides this, they had brought bombs and crackers with them, and these were let off in a lighter which was tied up alongside the steamer. All had apparently contributed to the expenses of this ceremony, and it showed the esteem in which they held the deceased captain. He was a great favourite with them all, and was a fluent speaker of the colloquial language, and so was able to be on terms of particular intimacy with them. Even the compradore of the ship, who had worked with the late Captain Brandt for many years, was reduced to tears, as he thought of this, the final parting with an old friend.

When the ship weighed anchor and passed through the harbour, all ships, both mercantile and naval, dipped their flags to her, and so were carried away from here the remains of one who was a part of the life of the port, and who has done much for the opening of the Upper Yangtze to steamer traffic, but who has been so foully murdered.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BETWEEN TWO FIRES IN SZECHUAN

The Rival Generals: How the People Put an end to Paper-money

From Our Own Correspondent.

Luchow, Sze, Jan. 11.

In spite of long-standing rumours of another turn-over we are still in the hands of the First Army (the southern party). The situation is peculiar, and if it were not so tragic would be rather a ludicrous one. When Yang Sen was driven out of Chungking last October, Yang Chuen-fang was in charge, under Yang Sen, in Luchow. Liu Tsao besieged the city and Yang Chuen-fang, being completely cut off, went to the First Army and the two generals Yang and Liu have remained ever since in a sort of joint control of the city. Now that Yang Sen is in Chungking again, everyone knows that Yang Chuen-fang would like to turn over to the Second Army (Northern party) again but while Liu Tsao remains he does not dare. Ill-founded rumours had it one day that Liu Tsao had gone and that Yang Chuen-fang had turned over and we were once more under the Second Army., but Liu is still very much with us as an additional levy of $10,000 by his men clearly showed a day or two ago.

PROTESTS AGAINST PAPER.

Just before Christmas, paper money became so plentiful and so much depreciated that the shops all closed as a protest. They only remained closed a couple of days but gained their point, as paper has gone out of use for the time being. The military have evidently abandoned it for the more direct method of levy and for all concerned, especially the poorer people it, the levy, would seem to be the least oppressive method. Certainly it is the one least calculated to upset the ordinary routine of life and trade.

While the paper money was in use, since people were compelled to accept it at par from the soldiers, the farmers simply stopped bringing their rice and vegetables to the city markets and for some time provisions were very scarce in the city and even the soldiers were finding it hard to stock their larder. Paper notes were of no use if the people would not bring the provisions. This, along with the closing of the shops, no doubt persuaded the military to change their tactics and now all is going as usual except that the price of all commodities seems to be daily soaring. Native sugar that could be bought for 12 cents last year is 17 cents per cattie this year and other commodities are rising in proportion. The dollar too keeps mounting. It is now somewhere between 3100 and 3200.

Our soldiers, many of whom are ex robbers, are not any too well behaved sometimes. Quite recently the seventh brigade were putting on a performance in one of the theatres. They admitted their own men and some of their friends but, since there was no more space, refused admittance to the officers and men of the eighth brigade. One of these officers became much incensed at such treatment and ordered his men to fire. Two or three civilians and one soldier were killed outright and several more were wounded, some fatally. Life is indeed cheap in this land.

ONE ROBBER HUNTER.

At least one of our underofficers has been very diligent in his search for robbers in the city and his methods have been most peremptory when he has found them. While walking outside the west gate of the city one day I saw five of the unfortunates strewn about just where they had been shot. A few days ago a robber was caught in the near vicinity of our compound. He was taken out on the street and decapitated just in front of our gate and a poster on the wall set forth his crimes. Our boys came to me next day with a deputation on the street for the purpose of declaring to the authorities just who were sleeping in our compound. They were evidently impressed.

RESUMPTION OF WAR IN KUANGTUNG

Canton, Jan. 22.

Reports reaching Canton [illegible] Dr. Sun Yat-sen's enemies are again beginning to advance against him in more than one direction. Gen. Shen Hung-ying, who at one time sided with Dr. Sun, but is now with the Northern forces, has lately been attacking Linshan, Pingshek, and other towns bordering the Kuangtung-Kuangsi-Hunan frontiers. Dr. Sun's enemies are also active in the Yeungkeng and Yeungchun districts. The main forces of Dr. Sun and Gen. Chen Chiungming are both prepared for another serious conflict on the eastern front Dr. Sun's troops, with Gen. Yang Hsi min of the Yunnanese Army in command, are now concentrating at Sheklung, while General Chen's staff is assembling at Waichow to watch the situation.

The Kuomintang Political Party in National Convention at Canton, which opened on January 20, is expected shortly to recommend a "Consolidated Government of China" in Canton, with Dr. Yun Yat-sen as the President, to replace the present General Headquarters, of which the Doctor is the Generalissimo. A [illegible] already passed the Convention.

A shortage of rice is being felt in Canton because of the refusal of the labourers in the rice mills [illegible] unless their demands for higher wages and better conditions are agreed to by their [illegible] tee on reconstruction is mediating between the strikers and the owners, but so far the latter have failed to appear before the committee. Both the Civil Governor and the Mayor at Canton have issued warnings against total suspension of the rice trade due to the strike.

The ferry service between the north and the south section of Canton City has been suspended since January 20 on account of the conflicting authorities in the city. The Garrison Commissioner of Canton, the Kuangtung Provincial Bureau of Finance, and the Canton Municipal Department of [illegible] are trying to collect the recently proposed surtax of five copper cash for every passenger carried. Each is trying to compel payment by armed force; thus the poor sampan man has to pay one and one-half cents for every half cent collected. It is believed that Dr. Sun will support the rights of collection to the Municipality.

Traffic on the Canton-Samshui Railroad, recently interrupted by the mutiny of the 4th division of the 3rd Corps of the Yunnanese Army under Gen. Cheang Kuang-Liang, has been resumed. The Canton-Kowloon line, however, has still not resumed its services, owing to the fact that Dr. Sun Yat-sen's men are holding the western, and Gen. Chen Chiungming's the eastern section of the Chinese line. The British part of the line is running as usual. The telegraph service between Canton and Hongkong is still interrupted.

THE THREAT TO SEIZE THE CUSTOMS REVENUE

Up to the present the Chinese Maritime Customs in Canton has not been interfered with, as was feared. Great Britain, the United States of America, Japan, France, Italy and Portugal are still maintaining from one to four gunboats here watching developments. It is believed that no further action will be taken by Dr. Sun Yat-sen regarding the Customs surplus issue until after the formation of the proposed Consolidated Government of China at Canton.

YUNNANESE TROOPS MISBEHAVE

Complaints are being received at Canton that the Yunnanese mercenary troops, stationed at Sheklung and other towns east of [illegible] are not respecting the local authorities there and that [illegible] number of local volunteer companies and appropriated their arms. Dr. Sun has ordered the Yunnanese to return the arms to their owners, but so far his orders have been disregarded.

The Yunnanese troops, led by Gen. Yang Hsi-min and Gen. Chiang Kuang-liang, have intimated to Dr. Sun Yat-sen that they will withdraw from the several tax-collecting offices so as to enable him to procure unification of local finance. Since January, 1923, the mercenary troops have practically commandeered all the public revenue of Kuangtung, forcing Dr. Sun and his followers to resort to many objectionable measures to raise funds to maintain themselves in Canton.

The licensing of the opium traffic is now managed by officials directly appointed by Dr. Sun Yat-sen, but in Canton gambling is still protected by troops without the formal approval of the Generalissimo.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DR. SUN TO MR. RAMSAY MACDONALD

Fraternal Greetings: Plea for New Consideration of China and Himself

Hongkong, Jan. 28.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen has cabled to the British Premier, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, fraternal greetings, hailing the Labour Party's accession to power as marking a new era not only in English history but in the secular affairs of the nations.

Dr. Sun looks to Mr. Macdonald to act in his dealings with China, not as if she were still a conquered nation of the days of the Opium Wars and the Boxer outbreak, but as the home of a people whose civilizing work in Asia entitles them to at least the same treatment as that now accorded to the nations whose sovereignty has been freed from its pre-war letters.

In particular, Dr. Sun asks Mr. Macdonald to examine afresh the fanciful views which some subordinate British officials hold of him, as a Labour leader and Socialist.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CULTIVATION OF THE POPPY

Central Government Said to Be Taking Steps to Suppress Opium Traffic

Peking, Jan. 25.

Mainly owing to the keen interest taken in the subject by Dr. Wellington Koo, there seems to be a prospect at last of the Central Government taking up the question of opium suppression in a way that will have some influence on the provinces and the military authorities.

Dr. Koo recently presented a memorandum to the Cabinet summarizing the protests of the British Minister regarding opium cultivation and emphasizing the world-wide attention that is being given to this cultivation in China. It was on this memorandum that the Cabinet acted yesterday, when it decided to draft the Mandate giving the provincial and military officials drastic orders to suppress such cultivation and traffic in the drug. Dr. Koo subsequently called on the President and made lengthy representations on the same subject. President Tsao promised to support the Cabinet in any action it might take.

Despatches from Marshal Wu Pei-fu show that he also is taking a keen personal interest in the matter, and with a sympathetic Cabinet, the President willing to support the action of the Cabinet, Dr. Koo working actively in the Cabinet and Marshal Wu Pei-fu enforcing the orders of the Government, it is hoped that the action taken to bring about improved conditions will at last be effective.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NAVAL MUTINY AT TSINGTAO

The Usual Complaint of Pay Withheld: Police and Teachers Equally Suffering

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Jan. 25.

The breaking out of a quasi-mutiny on the part of the sailors attached to the Chinese squadron now in port has just now come to light. It appears that the men dragged their respective commanders before them the other morning, threatening no end of trouble, if the money promised them prior to their arrival here were not immediatley forthcoming. Attempts have been made to hush the whole incident up, but the fact that the quasi-mutiny did take place is more than proved by the urgent messages despatched to Peking the day before yesterday and yesterday and to Marshal Wu Pei-fu for prompt assistance.

The story as told in Chinese circles is to the effect that when Wu Pei-fu negotiated for the withdrawal of the squadron from the Southern Cause, he promised to pay half a million dollars upon its arrival here and $100,000 monthly for its upkeep. When the squadron duly arrived, the Loyang War Lord made the discovery that the ships were in urgent need of an overhaul, not having gone into a drydock for some six to seven years. Moreover, the ammunition of the squadron was antiquated and a good many of the guns were only for ornament. This was more than he had bargained for, and taking into consideration the fact that a vast sum would have to be spent before the fighting value of the squadron could be brought out, he procrastinated, trying to get the Administration here to advance a portion of the money which he had originally promised. Now, the officials of the Administration claim that they had not the cash necessary for the purpose and suggested that the Railway could probably do something, though what on earth the Railway has to do with the Navy no one here has yet been able to discover.

RAILWAY AND OTHER FUNDS.

Matters having become fairly serious in the interval, Rear-Admiral Wen proceeded to Peking and Loying and eventually succeeded in obtaining from Wu Pei-fu some $200,000 and from the Kiao-Tsi Railway through the Communications Department a further sum of $50,000. It is learnt here that the money which the Department of Communications handed over as a contribution from the Kiao-Tsi Railway was handed over without the previous knowledge of the Japanese, who as already reported, have not yet been paid any portion of the capital of Yen 40,000,000 which the Chinese Government undertook to refund them for the return of the Railway. The Japanese naturally expect that all money not used for the development of the Railway itself would be paid over to them in an attempt to meet at least a portion of China's debt. It is likely that a protest will be lodged with Peking in due course although in some quarters the feeling is expressed that the Japanese will let the present instance slide.

It appears that when Rear-Admiral Wen returned from Peking and Loyang, he held a conference amongst his fellow-commanders and the Naval Staff here, at which it was decided first to settle the squadron's outstanding accounts for provisions, coal and uniforms, using the balance of the money towards pacifying the men until a further remittance could be obtained from Loyang. The men resented this action, wishing to have their wages settled first, and the other accounts later. In vain did the officers try to explain that further credit could not be obtained ashore unless at least a portion of the squadron's indebtedness to the merchants were satisfied. A high official attached to the Naval Staff went aboard the flagship for the purpose of explaining the real position to the men. His armed bodyguard were, however, not allowed to board the ship, the sailors seeing to it that they did not not leave the tugboat which brought them and the high official alongside.

After a good deal of persuasion, the quasi-mutineers agreed to wait until the end of this month, —some say they only gave up till the 29th,—for the balance of the money due them. Thus is the way in which Navies are bought over in China one from another.

POLICE ALSO UNPAID.

Leaving the sailors alone, we come to the question of the police. They too have been clamouring for their unpaid wages and have threatened to walk out unless something were done quickly. As in the case of the squadron, attempts have been made to hush the whole matter up, but where dissatisfaction prevails censorship becomes useless, since it is not likely that men who are dissatisfied with their position would care to assist those higher up to hush up a matter that could be more efficiently settled by means of wide publicity. The men on the police force here are quite a decent lot really and the community has shown more commiseration than pity in their case.

The sailors and the police are not the only ones who have not been paid. There are the teachers. They have not had their wages for some time now and despite frequent requests for payment, the Educational Department in Peking could not do anything. With the gradual approach of the Chinese New Years, they have become exasperated and have threatened to go on strike. Fearing that if this threat were carried out the Chinese Government would lose considerable face in view of previous assertions that they could make a success of Tsingtao, the Financial Department finally promised to pay one month of the unpaid wages at the end of this month, so as to enable the teachers to tide over the end of this year.

Every year-end the situation becomes worse and one wonders how long China could make both ends meet.

NANKING NAVAL PLOT

Non-Payment of Salaries the Cause of Grievance

Peking, Jan. 28.

Foreign telegrams from Nanking state that on the night of January 26, while the senior officers were ashore, the junior officers and men of the gunboats, Chutai and Kiangli, plotted to take the vessels to Shanghai. Information, however, reached the naval headquarters at Nanking and reliable men were sent on board while gendarmes and police were stationed along the river banks. Admiral Tu Hsi-kuei subsequently paid the men's salaries from his own funds and a court-martial was held on January 27 the results of which have not been reported. The men stated that non-payment of salaries was their only grievance. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE ALLEGED MASSACRE IN FUKIEN

Shanghai Street Union on the War Path

An interesting letter has been addressed by the Fokien Road Street Union to the Fukienese Residents' Association concerning the alleged massacring of some 3,000 Fukienese people by the troops under Gen. Wang Yung-yu, brother of the Associate Director of Military Affairs in Fukien, because they refused to grow poppy and to buy, sell and smoke opium. The letter urges that the Association take steps (1) to secure all evidence concerning the massacres, such as pictures of the burned houses and the murdered people, and any information of the dead and those responsible for their deaths; (2) to establish a citizens' Court for the judgment and sentence of the murderers; (3) to serve the sentences upon the murderers when they retire from office; (4) to bring them to Shanghai for punishment; and (5) to ask the foreign consuls and foreign commissioners to refuse to grant passports to any persons concerned.

MOSLEM KINGDOM IN TIBET

Racial Conquest of Country of Vast Resources: A New Chinese Province

From Our Own Correspondent.

Lanchow, Kan., Jan. 10.

There is something fascinating in watching the process of racial assimilation and conquest in full swing. On the western borders of Kansu a new province is being slowly but surely built up. The high grass lands of Onkokonor and the deep and beautiful valleys to the southward in what is more truly Tibet are being quickly brought under Chinese control. A new country of vast resources, of considerable mineral wealth, and boundless possibilities for the rearing of stock, is being settled before our eyes. And the man who has done most to make it real is Ma Chi, Moslem general and ruler of Sining and the Kokonor.

Would you see him, O dweller on the prosaic coast? Then take train from Tientsin to Poatwochen, on what was known as the Kalgan line, but now boasts the prouder title of the Tsin Pao railway—the Tientsin and Paotow line. Then take cart or boat or camel to Ningsia: Cart if you want reasonable speed; boat, if you want peaceful nights, and freedom from the annoyances of bad inns; camels, if you want a through journey direct to Sining, and the most picturesque and unpleasant way of completing your trip. The camels are slow, they travel by night and browse by day. They avoid the cities, and keep high on the grass lands in preference to the cultivated areas. The camel drivers camp out in the open. The weather they travel in is the coldest part of the year. Above all, camels are camels, and the "humph" Kipling described still clings to them. If they get on the ice, they often break their legs, for they are poor sliders. But travel as you may, in process of time you will get to Sining, that hoary and wealthy city where Machi dwells.

TIBETANS COWED AND SUBMISSIVE.

An oldish man he is, now 56 years old, and his power dates back but a few years, but he has the Tibetans cowed and submissive, and all the Kokonor is at his feet. The great monastery of Labrang he has forced into quietude, and the dangerous paths over the grass lands to the south, to the west and to the north, may now be travelled fearlessly by the unarmed merchant or missionary. He is surrounded, of course, by black turbaned, fierce Moslem soldiers, who are well armed, well mounted, and contented. We talk of a Pax Britannica. In Kansu today we might well talk of a Pax Islamica, wherever the Hochow Moslems have the sway.

But what will be the end of it all? More and more the compact, aggressive Moslems are getting the upper hand over the Chinese. Suppose they rebel, and form a new Moslem Kingdom. What rivers of blood will flow before this distracted country of China recovers her territory! It will be a convulsion to which the recent earthquakes here or in Japan will be mere bagatelle.

FRIENDLY TO FOREIGNERS.

Ma Chi is heavily bearded, fluent, friendly to Europeans. He has a stoop, and has not the commanding appearance of some of his followers. But since the days of the great Ma An-liang no Chinese Moslem has wielded such power, and a power fraught with such possibilities of good, or evil, as he.

Mr. Sun Pao-chi, the new Premier, has issued a circular telegram to the various provincial authorities requesting them not to send to him or recommend to him any applicants for positions, states the "Journal of Commerce." "There is not enough congee (porridge)," says Mr. Sun in his telegram, "but there are too many monks." The meaning is obvious. There is a plenitude of applicants for posts, but not sufficient work for all of them.

BANDITS GROWING EVER WORSE

Disease Incurable by Ordinary Means

From Our Own Correspondent.

Haichow, Ku., Jan. 21.

From whatever section of China we hear there is practical unanimity of opinion on two general subjects, soldiers and bandits. The need for disbanding the soldiers is everywhere acknowledged but it is also admitted that there is no hope whatever of it being accomplished: many columns have been written to show how any scheme yet put forward will inevitably fail, because it is contrary to the interests of those who would have to carry it out—the military officials.

With an exception here and there of some commannder who is cleaning house, banditry is growing worse and the consensus of opinion is that the soldiery of China either cannot or will not control the same.

Some are still pinning their faith to the force of Chinese public opinion which will finally be aroused when every family has either been looted or had a member kidnapped, but they fail to see that such will only be a little more noise in the ears of those responsible.

Desperate diseases demand desperate remedies and the writer brings forward again a suggestion made in these columns before, admittedly with small hope of seeing it carried out.

It is the writer's conviction that the same condition is responsible for the growth of banditry and the soldier menace and that is the simple fact of an unarmed, helpless citizenry.

Take the case of the soldier first: the pay of the soldier is so small and is so forever and hopelessly in arrears that it cannot be seriously said that they enlist for the sake of this dole. The plain truth is that while his salary is small and uncertain the "pickings" are just about what each soldier chooses to make. In the first place the mere donning of a uniform enables the coolie to exercise to the full his inmost longings to be a public bully and nuisance. From having been shoved aside all his life he now delights in swaggering down the middle of the road, making every man yield him the path. He "samples" every vegetable stand or basket he passes and goes down street munching his filched radish with gusto. In the larger shops he takes what he wants and throws down a few coppers that the shop-keeper may take or lose. When sent to the country he siezes every egg and chicken that he can lay his hands on and borrows (without returning) the mat he needs for a bed. Moreover he can gamble to his heart's content and no one can collect from him if he loses or withstand him if he gains. No wonder it is easy to recruit soldiers!

AN ATTRACTIVE.

It is still easier to state the attractions of the bandit's calling. The great bulk of robberies are perpetrated on unarmed, defenceless villagers and for the most part is as safe as the task of the butcher who has a dozen hogs to kill for the day's work.

The solution for the one is the same as for the other—Arm the citizenry! We are perfectly aware that there is coming to be a strong conviction that the only way to avoid war is to prohibit the manufacture of arms and ammunition, but war is a very different thing from home defence. The weapons that will give a home an adequate protection are only playthings in long range modern fighting.

Let us also not shut our eyes to present facts. There are immense quantities of arms and ammunition scattered over China to-day and they are in three hands. First the soldier, second the robber and third the man of means. We see as a consequence that the soldier is perfectly willing to let the robber alone. We see that except in the case of a very large land, the robbers are perfectly content to let the strongly armed villager severely alone. And finally that on the lower middle class both soldier and robber prey with impunity.

Arm the citizenry and the situation will take care of itself. It is candidly admitted again that the first fruits of such a policy would be discouraging as many who found themselves able would not scruple to become robbers, but it is contended that such would only make the final settlement the more speedy and definite.

This suggestion is advanced on a knowledge of the Chinese in North China that will be conceded by almost any old China hand. As already pointed out the enlisted coolie and the robber are essentially cowards and only play the game because of its safety. Another fact is that in defence of his home, be it only a one-room straw hut, a Chinese villager if armed will put up a terrific fight.

Those who may doubt that an armed citizenry would be free from bullying by soldier ruffians are asked to listen to the following incident that lately occurred in a near country district: A farmer was celebrating his son's wedding, and as usual everybody was welcome. All went merrily until some soldiers who had shouldered in began to be too free with the refreshments, towards which they had not contributed, and in due course their conduct was resented by some hotheaded member of the family and a fine row resulted. The soldiers combined with the spontaneity of chemical action and would have had a lovely time wrecking the place but for the fact that one of the villagers ran out and beat the gong that was the S.O.S. to the neighbouring villages. These villagers also displayed a remarkable spontaneity of action with the effect that in a very few minutes the braves found themselves surrounded by a large bunch of farmers armed with a medley of rude but effective weapons. The soldiers "retired" to a large room and tried to open negotiations. The farmers "negotiated" by firing their house and shooting down every one that tried to escape. The net result after half an hour was 17 dead soldiers.

It might have been expected that the commanding officers near would have descended on these villages for summary vengeance but nothing of the kind occurred. They had taken on these men in order to get rid of them and the farmers had most kindly aided in the task and made it permanent! The affair was promptly forgotten.

MUST CATCHEE CHANCE.

Any one who makes a suggestion for the betterment of China to-day without providing for the enriching to some extent at least of those who have to carry it out might as well burn up his blank paper and pour out his ink to begin with and save himself some labour. It is idle to argue for the free entrance through the foreign customs for anything in this line. But it is entirely feasible for provincial authorities to establish factories, not dignified by the name of arsenals, for turning out such simple weapons as the farmers would require. They could make it good business and at the same time solve their most vexing problem. And while they might see that it ultimately would take the edge from easy recruiting it has been our observation that the sight of an immediate dollar is always the decisive element in China's official eyes.

There are now being made and sold, evidently by plain blacksmith's and tinkers, immense numbers of what might be called "country cannon" for lack of a better name. The first of these appeared here about two years ago but now they are to be seen anywhere. The weapon is a piece of iron pipe of something less than an inch bore and perhaps seven feet in length. A removable receptacle, I hesitate to call it a breech block, contains the charge of an ounce or two of powder and this is simply set in the cavity left for it, with its end shoved into the rear end of the barrel. A wooden wedge holds it in place and it is instantly replaceable. Manipulation of the gun is provided for by a heavy iron stake attached to a movable joint near the centre of the mass. The stake can be driven into the ground and a play of ample proportions easily secured. One look at the heavy contraption identifies it as a weapon for home defence only, so whatever may be its legal status there is apprently no objection to its sale on a large scale. Loaded with scrap iron, old nails or lead slugs, in a narrow alley or gateway it would prove at close range a weapon of terrific deadliness.

It ought to be easily possible on the same terms to devise a rough arm, say for example after the pattern of a rough shotgun, which, loaded with buckshot at the close range it would undoubtedly be used, would be a satisfactory home weapon without being available for real military use.

Public opinion at this stage, even if it reach the point of a telegram every day from some Chamber of Commerce to some distant official will be as little protective value as a printed appeal in a rabbit hutch against a door open to a hungry dog. But one little porcupine on the inside would satisfy Mr. Dog's wildest lust for blood.

NEW POLITICAL PARTY IN JAPAN

Formal Inauguration of "Seiyu Honto": Outline of Policy and Principles

Tokio, Jan. 29.

The formal inauguration ceremony of the new political party, Seiyu Honto, took place to-day in the Imperial Hotel, when Baron T. Yamamoto delivered a speech on behalf of the organizing committee of the party. After the ceremony was over, a proclamation, the platform and regulations of the Seiyu Honto were formulated and passed. Then officers in charge of the party were elected, and several speeches were made.

The Seiyu Honto, in the course of its proclamation, states that moderation and impartiality are the vital points of its principle and adds that in its platform there are included the establishment of the constitutional system, the encouragement of education, the establishment of a social policy and the reform of party evils. As for its foreign policy, the Seiyu Honto declares that it will respect international faith on the basis of justice and humanity and do its utmost for the advancement of welfare and happiness of mankind in general.

In conclusion, the Seiyu Honto emphatically states that as to peace in the Orient, Japan will endeavour to maintain it herself. It has been decided that the new political party will carry on its affairs without a President, but adopt the "general management system." Baron T. Yamamoto, Messrs. H. Motoda, T. Nakahashi, T. Tokonami, and S. Sugita have been elected managers of the party.—Eastern News Agency.

CHINESE AND RUSSIANS

The Charges Against Local Officials in Harbin

Peking, Jan. 26.

At the meeting of the Cabinet to-day Dr. Wang Chung-hui, the Minister of Justice, recommended the abolition of the special commission charged with examining the suitability of Chinese officials dealing with Russian cases in Harbin and also the special department attached to the Harbin Court which was appointed to deal with outstanding Russo-Chinese questions. Mr. Cheng Keh, the Minister of the Interior, said that these duties had been completed satisfactorily.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

It is now reported that work on the new Hankow International Race Club and Recreation Ground is nearly completed. The arrangement of the race course and sports grounds is similar to that of the Shanghai International Race Club's premises. Mr. Wu Chun-sun, former compradore of the Yokohama Specie Bank, is directing the work. Agents have already been sent to Mongolia to effect the purchase of ponies. The "Central China Post" is informed that the value in the local market of shares in the new club is going steadily up day by day.

HANGCHOW HOSPITAL

Britain's Pioneer Medical Mission: Dr. Main's 40 Years of Service

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Church Missionary Society met on Wednesday afternoon at 273 Avenue Haig to hear Dr. Thompson speak, but unfortunately this gentleman was captured by bandits on his journey to Peking recently. Dr. S. D. Sturton, therefore, deputized and gave a most interesting lecture on the work of the Hangchow Hospital. The Ven. Archdeacon Moule presided.

Dr. Sturton said that the activities of the Hangchow Hospital constituted the oldest missionary work of the Church Missionary Society in China, whilst the Medical College attached to the institution was the only medical college controlled by the Society in China. For the past 40 years Dr. Main had done splendid work and if assisted by an efficient staff he would continue to do good work in the future.

After giving details regarding the foreign and Chinese staffs and students connected with the institution, Dr. Sturton described an imaginary tour of the hospital. After entering the hall where the patients were registered they passed into a hall fitted up as a chapel. While they waited there some of the best evangelistic work was done.

OUT-PATIENTS' DEPT.

Dr. Sturton then described the Out-Patients' Department where the patients were examined, their diseases classified and they themselves drafted to different parts of the building accordingly. In the Out-Patients' Department in 1922 31,555 cases were treated and 1271 minor operations performed. The work in this Department was very repulsive, inasmuch as many loathsome diseases were treated. Much difficulty occurred with some of the patients who were very obstinate and often would not do as they were told. A great many suicides were dealt with here.

MEN'S HOSPITAL.

The Men's Hospital was one of the best buildings in the compound. There were over 100 beds and four large wards—three surgical and one medical—as well as many smaller wards. Here male nurses were trained, passing through a three years' course after which they sat for the examination of the Nurses' Association of China.

It might interest them to know that in this hospital 30 of the students who were victims in the sensational school poisoning case at Hangchow were treated at the hospital and all of them saved.

In the Women's Hospital female nurses were trained under similar conditions to the men and were obliged to sit for the same examinations. Here there were 80 beds and over 200 major operations were performed last year.

X-RAY DEPARTMENT.

Dr. Sturton dealt in some detail with the X-Ray Department which is under his control. The department possessed two X-ray machines, apparatus for calculating the depth of a bullet from the skin in casualty cases, an automatic arc lamp used in tuberculosis cases with the same healing properties as the sun reflected from the snow in Switzerland or the sun in Egypt, electrical massage apparatus and the high frequency Violet Ray.

The work at the Maternity Hospital was developing very rapidly. There were 360 babies born last year and 15 students were being trained there at the present time.

LEPER HOSPITAL.

Leaving the hospital in the city, Dr. Sturton referred to the good work which was being done at another compound about two miles distant from Hangchow. He referred especially to the Leper Hospital where some of the most gratifying work of the Mission was done. Here the latest treatment with preparations of Chaulmoogra oil was employed with marked beneficial effect.

Archdeacon Moule brought the proceedings to a close with a few fitting remarks followed by prayers in which special mention was made of Dr. Thompson and his present plight.

SOLDIERS AND LABOURERS TOO

The New Military Spirit in Shansi: Peaceful and Prosperous Times

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kiangchow, Sha., Jan. 19.

Shansi is full of troops. The military spirit is strong—Universal Militarism confronts you at every street corner. Boy Scouts with dummy guns and fixed bayonet guard the doors of school entertainments. Yet a traveller might visit dozens of cities and stay many days without knowing Shansi had as Army—if he did not mistake the county police or village militia for The Chinese Thomas Atkins. But in the centres where there are soldiers they may be seen truly toiling for the good of the community.

The familiar grey uniform may be soiled. It is not the dirt of some opium den, nor greasiness that characterizes the idle loafing of certain troops known elsewhere than in Shansi.

You meet the Shansi Soldier hard at work if not at drill. He is building walls, repairing roads, clearing up open spaces in erstwhile untidy cities; he is cultivating a vegetable patch or it may even be a flower bed; he is carrying loads, wheeling barrows, digging wells driving carts, studying tactics. You meet him driving pigs, or delving in a mud swamp, and always doing something useful. It is plainly evident he has been taught well that the dirtier or harder the job the more glory attaches to the uniform he has presently to shake and brush and wash and mend, that on parade its use and not neglect may advertise the wearer's qualities.

If foreigners at the coast do not know the actual conditions up-country and have to pay for their lack of knowledge the same is true of the Chinese dealers here. As the year draws to a close cash shops and cotton stores are said to be tottering owing to the heavy losses resulting from contracts made without due foresight and from the haphazard methods of local finance.

Prices continue to rise notwithstanding the general air of prosperity. At the Yicheng big fair, where a brisk trade in many lines attracts several counties for a month about Christmas time each year, the salesmen have been congratulating themselves on really good times. "People pay what they are asked" seems quite new for Shansi, but is a remark that indicates present conditions.

Paper money however has come in recently like a flood, but old-fashioned cash are still much in use. Copper coins indeed seem scarcer than formerly. Even local shops are issuing notes although this practice was all but suppressed a few years ago when it had grown to absurd proportions. The Dollar has been changing for considerably over 220 coppers.

COTTON PLENTIFUL TOO.

The schools have nearly all closed a fortnight or even a month earlier owing to high prices prevailing and the need for economy.

There has been a good fall of snow, encouraging the farmers, but more is hoped for. The winter has been exceptionally mild and in places the ground has not been properly frozen this year. Cotton is in evidence everywhere. It is the chief article in every market, the most conspicuous item in transport by road and on every hand somebody is doing something with the raw material.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen has again resorted to the suppression of war news in the Canton papers, states the Chinese press. While this report is significant of his usual high-handed methods, it is worth noting that most of the papers are subsidized by him, and that he has been depending for a long time on their support.

WINTER ON THE UPPER RIVER

Journey from Chungking to Hochow: The Factory Chimneys of Far Szechuan

From Our Minchow Correspondent.

Chungking, Dec. 31.

On a beautiful day we started from Chungking. We did not get far, but stayed at a place 16 li up the river called Hsiangkuchsi. Here is a likin station, and several men came on board; one had a long harpoon which he poked remorselessly into bundles of medicine. The captain's wife who, as usual, takes a prominent part in the proceedings says they have had to pay $61.

There is a large silk factory at this place, built apparently with many modern conveniences. A large steam pump was busy pumping water up from the river. Stone-quarrying and other work is going on in connexion with the erection of another factory.

There are many indications along our route that the new industrial spirit is spreading up here. Foreign enterprise is also turning towards this river (the Fuh) and hopes are being entertained that it will soon be opened to steamer traffic. It is quite likely that in a year or two shallow draught steamers will be running up to Suining; and in summer-water perhaps even higher. It will be bad for the trackers who are a good-tempered, hardy race. They eat well, sleep well, and when it comes to work they are not all of a tremble.

After wasting most of the morning between fog and likin we got away about noon.

The scenery is somewhat similar to that on the Yangtze above the gorges save that it is on a smaller scale, bold headlands and long platforms of rock. But there is more cultivation, for we are getting into the heart of Szechuan, the fruitful province. We saw beans, peas, wheat and turnips growing plentifully. At [illegible] we passed two huge masses of rock which lie parallel along the centre of the river, and must be very dangerous at high water. They are known amongst the trackers as the Stone Gates. Our boat, which is a huge junk capable of carrying [illegible] passengers, [illegible]

At about four o'clock we stopped at Tsichikeo, which is only 10 miles by road from Chungking. Ten miles in a day and a half! [illegible] try here, and several foreign looking [illegible] their heads above all the surrounding [illegible] An [illegible] industry is seen in the manufacture of various kinds of earthenware.

MILITARY AT THE RAPIDS.

[illegible] by river from Chungking there are two big rapids; their names are Chikuantan and Litan. A good deal of [illegible] at these rapids and notices are printed in white on the rocks giving current prices for hire in large characters. For example just above the Litan was a notice that the price per man was 150 cash.

Here and there the country becomes less rocky, and trees of various descriptions adorn the banks; acacias, poplars and cypresses, and sometimes a crowd of fruit trees marching up the hill in shaggy array.

Uehnanchang is 50 li from Chungking and here we arrived on the third. A huge pontoon blocked our way: crowds of boats were waiting to get through, for there are no stated times of opening the bridge for passing traffic. This bridge was controlled by the soldiers of the second army. The scene at the opening of this bridge was one of indescribable confusion. The fact of the matter is that opening it is by no means as simple as it looks. When it is remembered that the boats are all fastened to each other and to the shore, it is clear that if one boat is removed and the moorings loosened the rest will drift away down river towards the opposite bank. The pontoon was [illegible] per day and yet keep the rest of the boats in place. This was done by keeping the seven bamboo cables fastened to rocks on the shore. In addition two ropes were fastened to [illegible] at right angles to the bridge. But these ropes complicated the situation. every boat that went through had to pass under them with lowered mast; and with the larger boats it was a most difficult task: the boats stretched the ropes to their utmost and could only be got through by a series of frantic clutches moving the ropes onward as the boat passed under.

Several soldiers were moving amongst the boats trying to enforce an order of procedure from their point of view: while every boat endeavoured to be first in the rush to get through. Every now and then a huge soldier who was doing damage with his stick would fall upon some unfortunate. One boatman with a hair lip who looked a deplorable semi-human specimen tried to get through ahead of his turn, the soldier dropped on him and belaboured him till he howled with pain, and lay in the bottom of his boat. In another boat a respectably dressed man was lying on some goods rubbing a knee, which, groaning, he declared to be so hurt that he could not rise. Half an hour later when his boat passed through he was still rubbing and groaning.

BOATS DELAYED FOR DAYS.

When the down-going boats were all through, there were only two of the seven cables mentioned above still unbroken. A huge boat beautfully made had proved too much for the others after the strain they had already endured. Only a few of the up-going boats were allowed to pass; as a the bamboo ropes on his boats to replace those which had been broken.

Soon after we were through the pontoon was closed once more with many boats still not through, among them three post boats, one of which the boatman told me had been waiting there already for three days.

At the head of a bad rapid 80 li from Chungking by road is the market of Tutoh. It is a large busy place. Furniture and earthenware seem to be the chief industries. The people claim that the population is 1,800 families. The town stands on the side of a steep rocky hill, and the character [illegible] for some distance. In the middle of a steep gorge is Gandongdse, a large coal village. We were told there are from 20 to 30 "pits," each employing from 200 to 300 men. This was sufficiently indefinite; but there is evidently a good deal of coal extracted, which finds its way to places as far distant as Suining, Chungking and Wanhsien. There is also a good deal of coke made, and it is heart-breaking to think of the gas and other by-products that are wasted.

We saw also the initial stages of glass manufacture. The first stage was a man in a shed breaking pebbles into pieces, but the second stage was specially interesting as supplying an instance of how the Chinese set a piece of work going and leave it to do itself.

What we saw was a pestle and mortar worked by a water-wheel crushing these broken fragments to powder. The powder is carried to a glass factory some 50 li inland. I cannot here include a description of this primitive machine which marks the first stage in the manufacture of China spectacles.

We spent the night of January 4 at Pehpei, a market town. There were a good many boats afraid to proceed up the river because of the fighting that is going on between the 1st and 2nd Armies. There are two rapids here of considerable size. We were told there was fighting just above Tsaokiaitse and so did not know what we were in for, but we sent a messenger on ahead to get permission to go on from the 2nd Army leader there. The way to Tsaokiaitse is through a steep gorge. At this place the soldiers, who were expecting us, boarded our boat and went through the form of examining us to see that we carried no firearms! Not finding any they gave us at our request a slip to say they had passed us.

On the night of the 15th we slept at Mahuping, being now not [illegible] from Hochow. In the middle of the river about 20 li before Hochow there is a rock [illegible] as we approached, looked very like an oval. The natives call it Tsaochehsih, in allusion to its bird like appearance.

HOCHOW THE BEAUTIFUL

As we drew near to the city of [illegible] was [illegible] quiet. Inquiry elicited the information that the first army had left the city. They are said to have left at midday to-day, having first broken down the pontoon —greatly to our convenience. The 2nd Army are not here, but outposts of the first seem to be coming back on their way after the main army. Two or three young soldiers passed us and asked anxiously as they passed "Have any of the 2nd entered the city?," looking very relieved when some natives told them, "No."

Hochow, on some maps written Howchow, is a beautifully situated city 180 li from Chungking by road. It stands on the left bank of the Fun river, just at the junction with the Kialing river. As we stood and looked at it on the hill we were impressed with its possibilities. Doubtless in the China that is to be it will grow in importance, placed as it is at the confluence of such busy waters.

There on the hill opposite is the white pagoda rising to a height of 13 storeys, graceful and picturesque against the evening sky. No one would wish to see this beautiful structure disappear from the landscape. Even when it loses its false significance as a controller of wind and water, it might well remain till the days when electric light has arrived. A bright light from its crest throwing its rays across the expanse of waters would beam a cheerful welcome to the belated traveller by road or river.

Later.

Since writing the above we have learnt that the 1st Army are still in the city. We hope to get away to-morrow before the trouble begins.

ACCIDENT TO UPPER RIVER STEAMER

Chi Chuen on the Rocks Between Ichang and Chungking

Advices have reached Shanghai that the str. Chi Chuen, on the Ichang-Chungking winter run, has gone on to the rocks.

The Chi Chuen is owned by the Yangtze Rapid Transport Co., and it is understood that Messrs. Gillespie & Co. have considerable interests in the vessel. The American West China S. N. Co. are the local agents.

We have been informed that Capt. Tornroth, who was in command of the Alice Dollar during the dastardly shooting outrage of four months ago, was in charge of the Chi Chuen. Nearly all of the crew of the Mei Ren have been signed on to the wrecked ship. No official report has so far been received by the Shanghai agents.

The str. Chi Chuen, built to the order of the Yangtze Rapid Steamship Co., Inc., for service on the Upper Yangtze, was launched from the shipyard of the Kiangnan Dock & Engineering Works on October 30 and was designed to operate during the winter months between Ichang and Chungking and in summer above Chungking as far as Suifu. The Chi Chuen was ordered on August 6 last and was completed and ready to begin on service by the end of November—a record piece of construction work. Messrs. Eisler, Reeves & Murphy, supervised the construction of the vessel to the requirements according to the American Bureau of Shipping (American Lloyd's) for this special service, and her sub-division by athwartship bulkheads carefully considered to minimize risk of sinking as the result of contact with rocks or other obstructions in the rapids.

With further reference to the accident to the str. Chi Chuen, we are now courteously informed by Mr. R. B. Mauchan, Superintendent of the Kiangnan Dock & Engineering Co., that he has communicated by telegraph with Mr. C. R. Cox, agent at Ichang for the Chi Chuen, who reports that the steamer struck the rocks on the way to Chungking and sustained some damage three small holes in the bottom of the hull. These were repaired, temporarily, by the ship's crew and the vessel reached Chungking safely. She has since made another return trip between Chungking and Ichang and will return shortly to Shanghai for permanent repairs.

YENCHOW'S CITY WALL

Ming Bulwark Whose Builder Died to Save It Menaced with Destruction

By Our Yenchow Correspondent.

The famous parapet of Yenchow city wall is fast falling into decay —the parapet which resembles two others and a fragment in all China and has a dramatic history.

Its configuration is peculiar, in shape it is like an apricot leaf, so that it has always been known as the "Apricot Leaf Wall." "There are only two and a half like it in the whole of China," say the inhabitants. It was modelled from the old imperial wall of Ming times, a fragment of which was left in Nanking prior to the Revolution.

As only half of the Yenchow wall was completed on time the leading official of those days was commanded as a punishment to destroy what had been built or commit suicide. He chose the heroic course. On taking the poison which ended his days, he exclaimed "By dying I leave a reputation; if I live my fame will be destroyed." He preferred death, so that the peculiar fashion of the bulwark, which would be forbidden to be copied in any city, might stand to his memory. But alas! the days of Chinese city walls are apparently numbered.

YENCHOW'S HERMIT.

What seems to be the only other famous feature of Yenchow is its name, taken from the old hermit Yen Tsi-ling. He was a recluse in the Han Dynasty and was making history well nigh 2,000 years ago. As history goes, he was a close friend of the Emperor of those days, when the Court was established in Honan. He was urged by Kuang Wo to take office but refused choosing rather to spend his life as a wanderer. Eventually he found his way to the region of Luchow—the old name for Yenchow—and lived a hermit life. The Emperor sent in search for him. After a long time he was located in a humble abode on the banks of the Chien Tang River.

A temple has been erected to his memory in the gorge, mid-way between Tong-lu and Yenchow. It is a beautiful spot with two high cliffs which make a fine headland, and goes by the name of the Fishing Platform. Old Yen was very fond of fishing. In the streams of the district there is a small fish something like a sardine, a delicacy, only for special guests, and this fish is called after him.

Yen Tsi-ling, was buried at Yuyao, near Ningpo, but his ancestral hall stands on the banks of the East Lake in the city of Yenchow. His ancestral fields are still planted by people who claim a direct lineage from the great man.

AVIATION FATALITY IN JAPAN

Tokio, Jan. 30.

Two naval aeroplanes, piloted by Sub-Lieutenants Aoyama and Ando, respectively, while flying yesterday over Kasumigaura, Ibaragi Prefecture, collided with each other, resulting in the fall of the aeroplanes and in the instant death of the two pilots. The officers have been promoted to the rank of Lieutenant. It is expected that the funeral of the deceased will take place on February 1.—Eastern News Agency.

THE HANGCHOW WAR FEARS

Warlike Preparations Still Afoot but no Fighting Yet

From Our Own Correspondent

Hanghow, Jan. 21.

Rumours of trouble are still freely ventilated, and war-like preparations are going on, but we fear no foe and believe that peace will continue in Hangchow.

The Tupan has promised to withdraw the troops on Chêkiang borders.—The Chêkiang Kiangsu gentry's peace agreement is now being broadcasted, and placarded everywhere.

The Kashing-Huchow long distance telephone is being extended to Hangchow, and to be for public use.

Mr. Chien Kan-chiu, a former Minister of the Interior, is shortly paying a visit to his Hangchow family burying ground, and grave questions no doubt will be asked him when among the tombs. He is to be consulted about the repair of the Chien Wang Temple, we are told.

Mr. Judson, who now lives in Shanghai since his retirement, was here for a few days looking after his Industrial work. The carpets he makes have quite a reputation.

A new male missionary was born a few days ago to Mr. and Mrs. McMullen, of the Southern Presbyterian Mission.

At last the rain has come, this time with a little sleet, and is making itself felt.

THE OPIUM FIGHT IN FUKIEN

Compulsory Sowing for the Tax Officials' Desire

Peking, Jan. 24.

The following is issued by The International Anti-Opium Association:

Telegram from the Union of Kien Ou gentry, merchants and students at Foochow under date January 16: To the Fukien M.P's, International Anti-Opium Association, Fukien Students in Peking. The Students' Union, Peking, Peking Fukien Fellow Association, Shanghai Fukien Fellow Association, Shanghai Students' Union, Nanking Fukien Fellow Association, Nanking Students Union, Loyang Fukien Fellow Association, Chekiang Fukien Fellow Association, and Wuchang Fukien Fellow Association.

"We are in a receipt of a telegram from Messrs Chang Wei-chun, Wei Lieh-yin, Liu Chi-hsi and Chu Fei, members of the Provincial Assembly, stating that the new magistrate Tsou despatched persons to various villages to distribute opium seeds and compel the people to plant them, and those who did not grow opium are likewise compelled to pay taxes according to their land. Our Kien Ou district has been for years under heavy taxation, and the people are overburdened with the taxes imposed, nevertheless the people at the present are taxed again under the name of land tax to compel opium cultivation. Since poppy is a poisonous plant which not only weakens the people but destroys the fame of our nation, public protest and sympathetic action are hereby expected."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MEMORIALS TO HEROES OF FILIPINO WAR

Manila, P. I. Jan. 15.

A number of prominent Filipino and American veterans have expressed their approval of a proposed plan for the erection of memorial tablets commemorative of the valour of the soldiers of both races on the battle fields of the American-Filipino war. The few monuments that have been erected are to the memory of fallen leaders and nothing has been done to mark the battlefields where the rank and file rendered efficient service. One of the places suggested as a suitable spot for a tablet is historic Santa Mesa, a suburb of Manila, where the first shot of the insurrection was fired.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TRADERS IN TIBET

The Long, Long Trail from Tachienlu to Batang: Romance of Business on the Roof of the World

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tachienlu, Sze., Jan. 4.

In spite of every obstacle and in the face of every danger a few Chinese Merchants on the Tibetan border carry on business as usual. Moving a case of sardines from Shanghai to Chungking is child's play compared to transporting a box of hams from Tachienlu to Batang. Along the coast you can have a box moved anywhere without ever seeing it: on the Chinese frontier there is every possibility of never seeing the case if it ever leaves your sight. From a purely commercial standpoint the road between Tachienlu and Batang is one of the most romantic journeys in central Asia. During any season of the year you run every possible chance of being frozen, drowned, killed, robbed, stranded, fleeced. What would drive a Shanghai merchant crazy apparently only amuses these Chinese merchants. If a band of brigands were the only thing to be encountered the Chinese merchant would not consider this an obstacle at all.

In the first place this tremendous business adventure begins in the merchant getting his money safely transported from Batang to Tachienlu. Fortunately the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank assists him here. The Europeans in Batang give the Chinese merchant a bank draft which is cashed by the Chinese Post Office in this city. Thus we find that splendid institution, the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank, facilitating commerce in the heart of Asia and on the Roof of the World. Getting out over this long stretch of country is not easy and may take from 30 to 40 days. Getting in is the problem. The merchant comes out empty—handed: he goes in with 5,000 dollars worth of merchandise. Frequently the postal courier is robbed by Tibetan brigands and no doubt some of the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank cheques are being used by these religious bandits as prayer flags on the high Asiatic steppes. The Chinese merchant with his money safe in Tachienlu, now begins preparations for the return journey. Tea, oil, wine, silk, tobacco, sugar, cloth, and paper are all securely packed in boxes and covered with yak skin. Wine and oil simply must be carried right side up, and to impress a Tibetan nomad with this fact begins the journey. Some years ago when travelling into Batang we inadvertently carried with us a box containing pots and pans. From the moment they went on the yak's back till they came off it was just like someone turning a barrel-organ the wrong way. One day this box of tins and cans slipped from the yak's back and went rolling down the side of the mountain. In this part of Asia where 13 high mountain passes and interminable rivers have got to be crossed the Chinese merchant wisely avoids carrying things which have a tendency to rattle. In the eyes of a simple Tibetan a thing greatly increases in value when it has a propensity to rattle. A solid load of tea or butter or tsamba sinks into insignificance when carried along side of something that persistently bangs.

BARGAINING FOR TRANSPORT.

When the Chinese merchant has carefully packed, covered, and numbered his varied assortment of merchandise his next step is to negotiate with the Tibetan nomads to carry his goods a certain distance over the border. Should his return coincide with the transport of military supplies for the interior Chinese garrisons, he may travel along under friendly escort. This possibility, however, occurs only two or three times a year.

There is something peculiar about negotiations with a woolly nomad. He is not inclined to hurry or sympathize with you in any difficulty: it is a matter of moonshine whether he starts in January or February or starts at all. Somehow, nobody can really or fully explain how, why, or where, a bargain is struck and the Chinese merchant moves off with a precarious agreement that the nomad and his yak will see him as far as Hokow, five days beyond Tachienlu. This gets him over the Che-do-la (14,5000 feet high) and over the Ga-shi-la (15.000 feet) and down into the valley of the Yalung.

ACROSS THE BORDER.

This part of the journey to Batang presents very little difficulty as there is a strong Chinese garrison at Hokow. Across the Yalung Chinese prestige ends and the Chinese merchant's troubles begin. From here on to Litang (14,000 ft.) he is under the protection and at the mercy of native chiefs, lawless brigands, and scheming lamas. His obstacles now are not simply physical, but spiritual and temporal. From this point on his woolly nomad will give no guarantee that the merchant and his goods will get anywhere. The caravan with its yak loads of silk and wine and oil now enters the territory ruled by the native Prince of Chong-hsi.

The unfortunate thing about travel in this part of Eastern Tibet is that these native chiefs will see you courteously, politely, and safely, just over the edge of their own territory and villainously rob you one mile in the next. By a system of asiatic manœuvring the merchant and his precious wares safely reach Litang.

RIDGE OF DESOLATION.

The Ridge of Desolation, on the other side of the Litang plain, now lies before him. The sheer good fortune in reaching Litang demands somewhat of a prolonged stay in this Lama town. No doubt experience has taught the Chinese merchant wisdom and a stay of one month here puts the waiting brigands off the scent. Beyond this point anything may happen; the country is in a desperate condition and absolutely chaotic. Hsiang-cheng on the south, Chan-tui on the north. Hokow east and Batang west, and Litang in the centre with a resident population of 2,000 Lamas. How to negotiate successfully all these disturbing, procrastinating, devouring elements, requires very subtle wits and no mean knowledge of Asiatic ways. At one point bravado carries the day, the merchant with the big voice gets through; like the lizard, the tail is sometimes dropped in the shape of a case of wine, and while the nomads are spluttering round this the caravan escapes. All the devices known to animal nature are sometimes tried and sometimes successful, but occassionally there is a dead stop and nothing, absolutely nothing but hard silver rupees paid each down will get you through. For the Chinese merchant the most difficult and dangerous part of the whole journey is just two or three days from Batang. How to get $5,000 worth of precious goods into that robber infested, robber surrounded town requires some ingenuity. If he can safely reach Batang his merchandise will probably bring him $10,000 or $12,000. The merchant has now reached a point where daring and bravado count for very little; cunning and stealth are the counters now. The most powerful nomadic tribe in the district is approached. Get me and my goods safely into Batang, says the Chinese merchant, and I will pay so much down and so much in Batang. All right, says the nomad chief, pay so much down and as a guarantee leave $1,000 worth of goods in our hands two days from Batang, return what you owe us and we will return the goods. Why the rough nomads don't rob the merchant there and then is one of those peculiar subtle Asiatic mysteries.

TRUE TO HIS BOND.

With all the merchandise piled up, and all the nomads round about, and the Chinese merchant and his servants in the centre, the arguing and bargaining goes on for days till at last a compromise is made. There are two remarkable things worth noticing: the native nomad chief may be wild, barbarous, extravagant, but he will abide by his word once he has given it; the merchant knows this and trusts him implicitly. The Chinese merchant, once a contract has been agreed on, will stand by what ever promise he gives. Strange—and on the Roof of the World, and with a nomad outlaw—if he gives his word he will protect you with his own blood. The whole thing is purely business: you pay Butterfield and Swire $50 to carry you from Shanghai to Hankow. You pay the nomad chief $50 to do the same thing; the question is simply one of geographical location. The marvellous thing is that business persists; it may be Urga or Lhasa, somehow or other the Chinese merchant has got to get there, do business, make money, and come back again. Gen. Pereira, in his last journey on the border, used these same native chiefs to get him and Dr. Thompson from Batang to Kanze.

RUSSIAN PEDLARS

Unable to Compete with Chinese

From Our Own Correspondent.

Yenchow, Chê., Jan. 19.

A company of Russians have caused a great deal of curiosity to the people of this quiet countryside. They speak but very few words of Chinese and seem to be quite unfamiliar to the customs of the natives save, perhaps, that of wine drinking. The purpose of their visit inland is to make a few dollars by selling cloth. They have not made much of a turnover, for competing with the Chinese in this line of business, is far from an easy proposition.

It is safe to say that in the province of Chêkiang opium growing has been rigidly suppressed. There is however, without doubt, a serious recrudescence of the use of the drug and an extensive sale is being transacted in secret. There is scarcely a market of any size but what opium may be bought. A short time ago a quantity of the drug was being secretly conveyed through the city. The military were soon on the track of these clandestine traders who have received some ugly treatment at their hands. Heavy fines have been imposed and a beating in the bargain.

A large quantity of rice has been purchased with the penalty fees, and is being distributed to the poor, to help them over the new year.

PROJECTED HYDROPLANE SERVICE.

There is talk of bringing into regular use the hydroplane for the quick passage of passengers up and down the Chien Tang River.

A short time ago another successful trial was made. From Hangchow to Chuchow the distance can be covered in about six or seven hours as compared with the old-style sailing boat travelling, when some six or seven days are required.

The present "Express boat" is a great improvement on the uncertain cargo boat, for the company guarantee to transport passengers a stage per day—about 100 li.

An electric lighting plant has been established in the town of Shuenan. A young man, who has received some practical training in the works at Woosung, is head of the company. The light is good and is very popular with the shopkeepers. The same company will run the light of the busy market of Kiangkeo, some seven miles distant from Shuenan, on the Hueichow river. One electric light company has been promoted in Yenchow and operations are to commence early in the new year. The machinery has been supplied from Germany.

ATTEMPT TO WRECK A TRAIN IN JAPAN

Tokio, Jan. 31.

An ineffective attempt was made last night near Nagoya to wreck a train in which leading members of the Opposition, including Viscount Takahashi, and Messrs. Ozaki and Inukai, were returning from an anti-Government demonstration at Osaka, according to a "Hochi" special, which cannot at present be confirmed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE VOICE IN THE WELL

A Strange Tale from Anking

From Our Own Correspondent.

Anking, An., Jan. 22.

It is often demonstrated that a person deprived of one sense has his other senses developed to a higher degree of acuteness. Now there is some discussion among local scientists as to whether a blind person is better able to find his way about in the dark than a person with normal eyesight. At any rate there is one blind man now confined in the mission hospital here who is an interesting case in point.

A few nights ago the blind organist of the mission chapel while returning home from the house of some friends apparently got upon the wrong road and whether it was the darkness of the night or too much moonshine that lessened his sense of direction is not quite clear. However he did not get back to his room that night.

—Early the following morning, before daylight, a coolie came to the well to draw water for his foreign master's ablutions. As he let down his bucket he was suddenly paralyzed with fright to hear the sound of some one singing, for the voice seemed to ascend out of the depths of the well. It is a newly dug well belonging to the Anking Cross Stitch and has not been heard to possess any special spirit good or evil, but the sound emanating from the cold stone neck of the dark well was something more than the slosh of the bucket and the sliding rope. The song was somewhat liquid in tone and was accompanied with a flapping sound as of a dragon's tail on the surface of the water.

But before the frightened coolie could withdraw his bucket and run away he detected, in spite of his fright, such a human tone in the plaintive voice now unmistakably calling for help that he thought perhaps some defamed widow might have sought a confirmation of her virtue in suicide and had repented in the afterthought of the icy-cold water.

He ran for help and a stong rope and soon had the sorry looking organist hauled to the surface. With the exception of a few misplaced verterbræ he seems none the worse for his 30 foot fall and having spent the better part of a long winter's night in four feet of water.

JAPANESE DIET DISSOLVED

Tokio, Jan. 31.

The Diet has been dissolved.—Reuter.

Shanghai, Jan. 31.

An "Osaka Mainichi" special despatch to the Eastern News Agency reports that an Imperial edict was issued this afternoon at 4 o'clock, dissolving the Parliament.

Later.

An "Osaka Asahi" special despatch to the Eastern News Agency reports that this afternoon the House of Representatives was thrown into such unprecedented confusion that the Diet was compelled to suspend its sitting and that when the sitting was resumed, the chamber was again so disorderly that the Government finally dissolved the Diet at 3.50 p.m.

In view of the fact that the three political parties in the Lower House recently repeatedly declared their determination for the overthrow of the Cabinet coupled with the fact that the condition in the chamber of the Lower House to-day clearly indicated that they attempted to impede national affairs, the Government petitioned the throne to dissolve the Diet, considering that M. P.'s of the said three parties had no idea of discussing national affairs with sincerity and that this sort of Parliament was by no means compatible with the real intention of the nation in general. —Eastern News Agency.

ACCORDING to the "Shunpao" the National Aeronautical Bureau in Peking has definitely decided to inaugurate the Peking-Tientsin-Shanghai Air Mail Service next spring.

DYNAMITE SMUGGLING IN PHILIPPINES

Manila, P. I. Jan. 15.

Smuggling of dynamite from British North Borneo into the Sulu archipelago is on the increase despite the efforts of the Customs authorities of the Philippines, it is learned at the Bureau of Customs. The dynamite is chiefly used by the Moros to kill fish in the waters of the southern islands, although the practice has been prohibited by law for many years.

The Moros, who are familiar with all the small coves and harbours, are able to evade the Customs authorities which have only a limited patrol service in that region. In their fast sailing vintas (native boats) the Moros are able to load their cargoes of dynamite, and frequently a shipment of opium, on the Bornec coast and under cover of darkness slip across to one of the small islands in the Sulu group, only a few miles away.

Only in rare instances are these smugglers caught, Customs officials say, as their cunning is far superior to that of the agents of the government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE SWEDISH SCHOOL ON CHIKUNGSHAN

From a Correspondent.

The Swedish Union School on Chikungshan, Honan, was able to open its new-built school-home on January 19. Since the establishment of the school in 1918, when a very fine lot with some houses on it was purchased, no new buildings had been added, but preparations were made during the last two years to have suitable dormitories built. The foundations of this four-storied house were laid in June last year and the work on the building was completed just before this spring-term was to begin. There are altogether 70 rooms in the house and, besides office, dining and sitting-rooms, five apartments for teachers and manager, day-room for the children and a few guest rooms, there is space enough to receive about 90 pupils.

The contractor was a Chinese, Liu-Lin, while the Rev. G. Cederlof of the S.U.S. has supervised the whole work. The designs of the house as well as the plans have all been drawn by the Rev. Ivan Ehne. The house is furnished with electric light, running water, and partly with a heating system. The whole cost is about $40,000.

The Swedish Union School, which is a co-operative enterprise undertaken by six Swedish Missionary Societies and open to all Swedish children in China, comprises a public Lower and Higher Primary and High-School, recognized by the Swedish State, and is staffed by six well qualified teachers and three assistants. The Principal of the School is Mr. Daniel Olsson, Phil. Lie., and the Rev. G. Cederlöf is manager for the School-Home with Mrs. Cederlöf as headmatron.

We wish the School every good prospect during years to come in its solid and stately new Home.

THE humorous side of Prohibition, says a New York correspondent, is illustrated again by Federal statistics which show that in the 12 months ended June 30, 11,268,469 doctors' prescriptions ordering liquor for patients were issued in the United States. Invalids thus provided with medicinal refreshment drank on their doctors' advice altogether 1,469,611 gallons. Of this, whisky accounted for 1,347,573, wine for 30,752, brandy 9,945, gin 8,173, rum 2,015, and alcohol 2,156 gallons. Fifty-thousand physicians or one-third of the total number in the country, availed themselves of the privilege of prescribing intoxicating liquors for their patients.

BURNS'S BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Peking's Honour to Ploughman Poet: Dr. Yen's Address and Interesting Comparisons

Peking, Jan. [illegible]

Dr. W. W. Yen was a guest at the dinner in celebration of the birthday of Robert Burns given [illegible] Grand Hotel de Pekin.

Dr. Yen, proposing the toast of the evening, said:—I consider it a great privilege to join you this evening to do honour to the memory of your national poet, Robert Burns. At the same time I see no particular reason why I should be asked to say anything, except perhaps for the fact that he is the ploughman poet of Scotland and that I happen to be the Minister of Agriculture of China.

By profession a diplomat, and speaking as I do to Scotsmen, noted for their cautiousness in speech, I am reminded of the visit of Confucius to the Ancestral Temple of the Chow Dynasty. There he saw in the courtyard of the temple a golden statue with its mouth sewn up with a triple [illegible] his disciple to explain its meaning, and the Sage responded by saying that the statue represented [illegible] careful of speech. I think myself that Confucius was too vague in his reply. I should have replied that the statue represented an ancient diplomat, or some unknown Scotsman.

TWO OTHER POETS

It is not my intention to recall to you the ups and downs, the lights and shadows, in the life of your ploughman poet. You know the details much better than I do, but in a way his sad and disjointed career, and the extraordinary range of his poems, from the noble "Cotter's Saturday Night" to the rant and riot of "The Jolly Beggars" remind us of two other poets. The one lived and died in the United States. He was in fact an alumnus of the same university where I happened to study, and his name is Edgar Allan Poe, whose best known poem is "The Raven." The other lived in China in the Tang Dynasty, and of him it is said that he was without doubt the greatest of Chinese lyric poets. He also was fond of deep passion, [illegible] is enough for one thought. Like Burns, he collected old songs and poems and infused them with the fire of his own genius. That man [illegible] whose works are known to [illegible]

If you ask what I think is the reason of your [illegible] admiration for Burns, I will say [illegible] is because he has "Scoticized" [illegible] He is, as it were, the demigod-prophet, priest and king of Scotland, the Scotsman who more than any other man of men [illegible] moment Scotsmen all over the [illegible] and may [illegible] to-night for ages the surrounding circumstances in which the Battle of Bannockburn and the anti-prelatical reformation under Knox were [illegible], it may be, hardly as powerful [illegible]

In a word Burns is to your [illegible] and [illegible] no [illegible] world. [illegible] Americanism may be coined, a one hundred and [illegible] Scotsman.

THE MOST HUMAN POET

To the rest of the world Burns appears pre-eminently as the most human poet. Many others may surpass him in their love and portrayal of nature and in their devotion to her. But he seems to stand by himself as the author of so many singable or declaimable songs wherein we find an unalloyed sincerity, and an intense sympathy so vivid and intimate as to pass instantly into the domain of imagination and give forth imaginative results and potencies.

PRIVILEGE OF INDEPENDENCE

His is the cry of toiling and suffering humanity, protesting against social inequalities and political monstrosities. "A man's a man for a' that and a' that," and let us hold dear the "glorious privilege of being independent." True to the best instincts of the human race, he yet counsels acquiescence in one's lot and a [illegible] of one's duties in the sphere where one is placed.

Out of his titanic, soul-piercing thunderings against the injustices of mankind has come to pass, the great uprising of the middle class against the privileged minorities, an uprising which first worked politically in the American and French Revolutions, and which, not in governments so much as in education and in social order, has changed the face of the earth.

What is the debt which oppressed humanity owes to our ploughman poet, a debt which it can ill repay? Can we then err in excess, if we crown him in our grateful hearts the king of long-suffering humanity? Can we exaggerate our emotions if we revere his memory?

If you ask me, as true Scotsmen, what you can do further to spread his ideas and immortalize his fame, I venture to suggest that some of his best poems should be rendered into the Chinese language by some Scottish sinologue. Only a few days ago I came across in a vernacular paper a translation of some beautiful lines from Longfellow's "Hiawatha," and I see no reason why some attempt should not be made to make Robert Burns better known to the scholars of China.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SMUGGLED OPIUM IN CHEKIANG

Unpleasant Rumour of a Huge Consignment

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, Jan. 26.

Some weeks ago it was rumoured that an enormous quantity of opium, about $20,000,000, worth, had been brought from India and smuggled into Chêkiang by way of the Chusan Islands, landed first at Shih-pu and then transhipped in little boats to Chapu, where it is now. It is brought, we are told, by the Military Governor's subordinates, who are said to know all about it.

I have refrained from writing you about this because there are so many rumours current in these days that have no foundation in fact that I thought this also might be one of them. But I hear, on what one believes to be good authority, that the opium is really in the province, and that the Chief of Police knows it is. Such a disgraceful affair, if indeed true, ought to be exposed and the foreign press should help in the exposure.

Chêkiang has long been free from poppy growing, and the Chinese have been proud of the fact, and so have the missionaries and all who are interested in the welfare of the people.

SHANTUNG BANDITS AGAIN!

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsinanfu, Jan. 24.

The fate of a victim of local brigands is just now occupying the attention of the newspaper reading Chinese. On the night of December 3, one of the line superintendents on the Shantung Railway was cleverly captured. He was in the Station-master's office at Changtien station when several well-dressed men appeared and on some pretext inveigled him outside when he was promptly carried off.

The man is a native of Ningpo, and is said to have influential friends in Peking. This may account for the high ransom which these robbers demanded. Negotiations à la Lincheng have been proceeding for some time. The authorities advised paying up, although it is said that troops knew the whereabouts of the band. The ransom was to have been handed over on the 18th instant, but it was not forthcoming and the negotiators (whoever they were) announced on the 19th that the poor captive had been shot.

Early on the 20th the body of a young man dressed in foreign clothes was found by the roadside not far from the Tsinan Foreign Settlement. He had been shot through the heart, and the remains were soon identified as the Ningpo captive.

It looks as though the bandit stronghold were not far from Tsinan.

NEW SILVER COINAGE IN SIBERIA

Strange Appearance of Romanov Roubles: Are They Mexican Dollars Reminted by Japan?

From Our Own Correspondent.

The recent disappearance of silver dollars from Shanghai was accompanied by a rumour that they were being smuggled into Siberia. Inquiry of our Chita correspondent for possible information has produced this very curious story.—Ed.

Chita, Dec. 16.

To begin with, quite recently, that is to say, not more than two weeks ago, a perfectly newly minted rouble bearing the old [illegible] of 1915, [illegible] double-headed eagle with the crown, sceptre, etc. and the year 1915 on one side and the image of Tsar Nikolas II on the other, made its unexpected appearance here in Chita for the first time.

Needless to say, it produced great dissatisfaction among the Communists who clamoured for the new Soviet rouble, regarding which so much had been written and talked about. It is very significant and undoubtedly has some bearing on the matter that the Soviet Government intended to circulate the new Soviet rouble at the beginning of the present year 1924, but now the matter has been postponed until the first of May, at least, so I was informed by Mr. Kantner of the State Bank. In addition, Mr. Kantner informed me that 300,000 of these new Romanov roubles have already been received from Moscow and a further consignment of 800,000 is expected to arrive in Chita this month. In view of the fact that the present Soviet Government has long since destroyed everything belonging to the Tsar régime, the supposition is that these new Romanov roubles were not minted in Moscow, although they are being received from that place.

WAS IT MADE IN JAPAN?

There are certain factors that go to prove this supposition. First, is the date or year which the new rouble bears, namely, 1915. The second circumstance is that in 1920 some four cars of small silver denomination bearing the same year and exactly the same coat of arms etc. were delivered in Vladivostok from Tokio and were seized by the Reds who took the four cars in question to Habarovsk in the month of February of that year. Another very important factor which goes to prove that these new Romanov roubles could not have been minted in Moscow is the fact that, had this silver been in Moscow's possession last year or the year before, when it decided to introduce the silver and gold currency into the territory of the Far Eastern Republic, it would certainly have supplied this latter with these new roubles and not have called in all the available silver in Russia Proper to keep the Far East supplied with currency, so it seems there is some direct connexion between the appearance of these newly minted roubles and the disappearance of Shanghai's silver dollars.

It is also necessary to bear in mind that Siberia has also lost much of her silver supplied by Moscow in the early days, particularly the old silver roubles, doubtless on account of the good and full quality of silver they contain. When in Vladivostok in 1920, the seizure of these four cars of small denomination, Romanov silver currency, by the Reds and its circulation at that time (during the term of the Medvediev Provisional Government) caused quite a lot of discussion and the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Zimmerman, personally informed me officially that this new silver formed part of an order placed by the Tsar Government with the Japanese Government and that the Russian Government had been sadly disappointed with the quality of the silver currency which was exceedingly low in silver. This explains the reason for the depreciated value of this particular currency even to this day, namely two roubles 34 copecks small silver denomination equalling one large rouble.

It is perfectly reasonable to conclude that had Moscow been in possession of silver, she would have minted her own Soviet rouble, which bears the image of a workman on the one side and the coat of arms, i.e. the hammer and sickle on the other.

RUSSIAN SILVER DISAPPEARING.

From inquiries made by me among my friends here who occupied important positions in the Tsar Government, the question of Japan having received an order from the Tsar Government to mint silver Romanov currency is borne out. I have been unable to discover the sum of this order. In a conversation which I had to-day with Mr. Boris Berlatzky, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Dalbank in Chita, regarding this matter, he stated that Russian silver had been disappearing from Siberia for some long time and in considerable quantities. Mr. Berlatzky succeeded Mr. Zimmerman as Minister of Finance in Vladivostok in 1920 and also confirmed to-day that the four cars of small silver were obtained from Tokio, but he did not confirm nor deny that the new Romanov rouble was minted in Moscow. He only stated it came from Moscow.

There is a shortage of silver in this country as can be seen from the enclosed translation of the Government order published in to-day's official newspaper "Far Eastern Post."

In conclusion, I have to state [illegible] from the information at hand, it appears that Japan has fulfilled the order placed by the Tsar Government and has supplied Russia with these new roubles. She has also returned Russia the gold seized by the Japanese Expeditionary Forces during the latter's occupation of Siberia. In all probability she did not possess the requisite amount of silver to execute the order and was forced to take from both Siberia and Shanghai.

IMPORT OF SILVER AUTHORIZED.

The following is a translation of the order by the Far Eastern Revolutionary Committee quoted by our correspondent. It was published in the "Far Eastern Post" No. 13, January 16, 1924.

The Far Eastern Revolutionary Committee has decreed:—

1. To alter the first paragraph of its resolution passed on June 15, 1923 (Bulletin Far Eastern Revolutionary Committee No. 48, clause R13) to read as follows:—

(a) The import of silver currency, both of small and large denomination, which is legal tender in the Far East, is permitted without any let or hindrence into the territory of the Far East.

(b) The importation of said silver currency from localities adjoining R. S. F. S. R. (Russia Proper) to be limited to the sum of 25 Roubles large silver and 10 Roubles small silver denomination.

Observation:—The present decree does not apply to gold currency.

2. Clauses Nos. 2, 3 and 4 of the resolution of June 15 to remain in force.

3. The present resolution to come into effect as from the date of its publication.

President of the Far Eastern Revolutionary Committee:

Secretary:—(signed) Kopeetin.

At Lausanne, on December 28 last, M. Alfred Heimendinger, of Heimendinger Bros., Shanghai, was married to Mlle. Aline Villiérs, of Strassburg, Alsace. The newly-married couple will leave France for China, viâ America, at the beginning of next month.

THE JAPANESE PRESS RESURGENT

Splendid Results of Energy and Resourcefulness

From Our Own Correspondent

Tokio, Jan. 15

An increase in its circulation by 750,000 in four months—from 250,000 before the quake to close on a million subscribers to-day—that is what enterprise of the "Hochi," one of the biggest vernacular papers published in the capital has brought as a reward. The story is almost an epic in the history of the Fourth Estate in Japan and for that matter, perhaps anywhere in the world.

Most of the big Tokio dailies were destroyed by the quake and fire that swept the capital on September 1 last year. The building of the "Hochi," a magnificent five-storied, steel-and-concrete structure, escaped the flames, but its machinery was badly knocked about, while the type cases were thrown about scattering the type in all directions. When it is remembered that there is no such thing corresponding to a linotype in Japanese newspaper offices, and that some 2,000 different types, representing as many characters are used in an ordinary issue of a Japanese newspaper, the difficult situation can well be imagined. Nevertheless, the "Hochi" had an "extra" 12 minutes after the September cataclysm, running the edition off mimeographs.

For several days after the September quake mimeograph editions did the work needed: other newspapers engaged an army of writers and the important news of the day were written out and posted on walls and telegraph posts; while yet another newspaper hired a number of motor-cars, filled them with reporters armed with megaphones, who megaphoned the news to the people.

ENTERPRISING TOKIO DAILIES.

Most of the big Tokio dailies are now issuing editions just as large as their pre-earthquake ones. The "Hochi's" luck in having its building and plant practically undamaged enabled it to get on the job first and, as a result, is to-day enjoying a paid circulation of a million, four times what it had before the catastrophe. Twelve rotary presses work day and night printing the papers.

Notice should be taken of the fact that the newspaper industry in Japan is, compared to Western standards, a fledgling. That they could have recovered so soon and so well—they are as good or even better than their pre-earthquake issues—is certainly an augury for good, and if reconstruction in other quarters is brought about as speedily and as efficiently as the newspapers have done, then the destruction that is now to be seen everywhere will soon be but a dream.

ANOTHER CAPTURE

Dr. Thompson with Brig.-Gen. Pereira's Effects

Peking, Jan. 29

Dr. Thompson, who was on his way to Peking with the object of handing over Brigadier-General Pereira's belongings and making a full report regarding the death of the latter was captured by bandits on January 24 at Paotowchen, some distance to the west of the terminus of the Peking-Suaiyuan line. Dr. Thompson's last report said that he hoped to reach Peking on January 24.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ANCIENT WEDDING RITES

Peculiar Ceremonies Attending the Imperial Japanese Wedding

By Our Tokio Correspondent.

The wedding of the Prince Regent and the Princess Nagako Kuni, which is to take place on January 26, will be held in the Imperial Palace which lies beyond the ancient moats and the even more ancient cedar and willow trees that stand like so many sentinels on the rampart-like walls in the heart of Japan's capital. The solemnization of the nuptial rites will commence with the ceremony of reporting the wedding to the Imperial Ancestors which will take place early on the morning of the wedding day in the Korei Hall.

Shinto priests, to the accompaniment of Shinto music, will first of all purify the hall, after which the court ritualists and high officials, dressed in uniform, will enter, and to the accompaniment of solemn, ancient Shinto music, the high priests of the Court will open the Shrine which is dedicated to the spirits of the Imperial Ancestors. An offering of food, flowers and incense will follow, after which Prince Kujo, chief ritualist, will read a scroll announcing the marriage and felicitating the Imperial Ancestors. Neither the Prince Regent nor the Princess Nagako Kuni will be present at this ceremony.

THE SACRED WINE.

Immediately after an Imperial messenger will be despatched to the mansion of Prince Kunihiko Kuni, father of the bride-elect, to bring his eldest daughter, the Princess Nagako, to the Imperial Palace. By this time, both the Prince Regent and the Princess Nagako will be attired in ancient garb.

The wedding ceremony will consist chiefly of the drinking of sacred wine, the bride and bridegroom exchange little gold cups, filled with sake (Japanese wine), nine times, in accordance with ancient tradition.

Neither the Emperor nor the Empress is expected to be present at the wedding, the Emperor's state of health making it inadvisable for him to leave the Numazdu palace situated some 30 miles from Tokio where he is now staying. On the day following their wedding, the Prince Regent and Princess Nagako will proceed to Numadzu to pay their respects to the Emperor and Empress.

For the first time in history some 43,000 convicts will be released on the day of the wedding, while at the same time Socialists and anarchists of ultra-radical tendencies will spend the 26th within the four walls of a prison. The police intend to take these men into custody about a week prior to the date fixed for the royal marriage and will keep them under lock and key until the happy event is over.

BRIDE ELECT AS HOSTESS.

Out of consideration for the sufferings that a large number of the people are undergoing, celebrations in connexion with the wedding are to be simple and inexpensive. The palace of Prince Kunihiko Kuni, father of the future Empress of Japan, commenced entertaining on January 12 in connexion with the wedding. Four banquets are to be given by the bride's parents, the first in honour of the Princes and Princesses of the Blood; and the three following to some 100 officials of the Imperial Court, of the Imperial Household Department and to those who had been in charge of the education of the bride-elect.

The host and hostesses at these banquets will be the parents of the bride and the Princess Nagako herself. The latter will appear in foreign dress throughout the celebrations and ceremonies, except when ancient court tradition demands that the old Japanese garb be worn. It is said that Princess Nagako has more than 30 new foreign dresses to wear in connexion with the coming functions. Most of these were made in Paris, and more are being made in Tokio and Kioto.

Princess Nagako and her sister were vaccinated two weeks ago on account of an outbreak of smallpox near her home.

AKASAKA DETACHED PALACE

By Our Tokio Correspondent.

The Prince Regent has, according to the best reports, decided to live with his bride in the Akasaka Detached Palace when in Tokio, in preference to the Kasumigaseki Detached Palace, which has suffered some damage as a result of the September quake.

The Akasaka Detached Palace is one of the most magnificent of Japan's modern palaces. Construction of this palace was begun in 1899 and completed nine years later. It was at first intended to be one of the residences of the present Emperor when his Majesty was Crown Prince, but the present Emperor has never yet even stepped within its portals. The building, which is in French Renaissance style, is situated in the midst of spacious grounds, a long wide drive sweeping up from the front entrance gates of wrought iron to the white granite porte-cochére. The magnificent lawns in front of the Palace are reminiscent of England more than of any other place, certainly not of Japan, save for the golden peacocks which guard two star-decorated globes on the green copper roof. The long white building spreads out in a great semi-circle, three storeys in height.

PRINCE OF WALES THE FIRST OCCUPANT.

Long mirrors, marble walls and parquet floors, massive yet graceful chandeliers of glass, tall columns of pink and white marble, brocade wall panels of a green and gold hue adorn the palace which the Prince Regent and his bride will call their home for some time, while in outstanding relief are several sixteen-petalled, gilt chrysanthemums, at strategic p... emblematic of the Royal House of Japan.

The Prince of Wales was the first occupant of this gorgeous building during the visit he paid to Japan some two years ago. Till then, the magnificent pile was untenanted, if one levee that the Prince Regent held after his return from Europe be excepted.

Just beyond the main stairway is the State parlour, fronting the south and looking out over the gardens which fall away to a lake in the valley below. The ceiling above is painted with a goddess driving a chariot between rows of flowering cherry trees in the full light of a morning sun. The garden is a blending of East and West, with a little lake spanned by a lacquer bridge. Except for one or two roofs of other Imperial palaces and for the roofs of two red brick buildings in the distance, there is no visible sign that any other world, other than that of the Akasaka Detached Palace, exists. Perhaps it was for this reason that the Prince Regent chose this palace in which to spend the early days of his married life.

THE STATE DINING ROOM.

The dining room is in Louis XIV style and is a dream of gold and mirrors. The walls are panelled with Kiso wood, a valuable Japanese wood, polished until the panels catch and reflect the gold ornamentation of cornice chandelier and mirrors. Into the walls have also been fitted panels of cloisonne giving a touch of Japan to the French-style room. This is the State dining room and will be utilized by the Prince Regent and the Crown Princess in connexion with the many entertainments they will give to the Princes of the Blood, high Government dignitaries and members of Parliament after the wedding.

A marble terrace from the state dining room leads round to a smaller and more home-like dining room which the royal couple will use. This room is also finished in Kiso wood, with gold ornamentations, while a beautiful garden in landscape style is visible just beyond the bay windows.

The ground floor is that on which the Prince Regent and his bride will live, the floor above being used for official entertaining functions. Here the marble gives way to wood and cream-coloured plaster; the gold is present, symbolic of royalty, but soft green is the dominant tone.

VALUABLE OBJECTS D'ART.

The private sitting room is perhaps the most restful chamber of the whole palace. With walls of green brocade and creamy white wood, and with simple but beautiful appointments, the place soothes and pleases. A fine old Japanese gold lacquered screen stands by the door, surrounded by dwarf pine and cherry trees. The fireplace is of green marble with a fire screen on which is painted the famous Sacred Bridge of Nikko. Products of art, of ancient China and Japan, are to be found in profusion here.

There are 150 rooms in the Palace, all of them reproductions of the West except for the touches of Japan that are worked in here and there. Gold and crystal, marble and Kiso wood, mirrors and paintings and the sixteen-petalled gilt chrysanthemums—all these combine to make a rich splendour and luxury that singles out the Akasaka Detached Palace from all the other palaces of Japan.

KIYOURA CABINET TOTTERING

Its Fall an Hourly Possibility: More Political Turmoil in Japan

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 15.

The present Ministry which was formed by Viscount Kiyoura, formerly President of the Privy Council, when the Yamamoto Cabinet resigned as the result of the despicable attempt made to assassinate the Crown Prince on December 27, is being vigorously attacked on all sides. The papers are full of scathing criticism every day, declaring that the present Cabinet is a "Privileged Class Cabinet" because its personnel consists of Peers, or of persons who are directly connected with Peers, and that it is a menace to the development of constitutional government in Japan. As a sop to appease public opinion, Viscount Kiyoura promised to grant the people a measure of suffrage, but this has failed to minimize the detestation in which the public hold the Ministry, detestation that is openly expressed by means of angry mass meetings.

More interesting than the denunciations of the Press and the bellowings of street-corner orators, however, is the fact that the Seiyukai (the majority party in the House of Representatives) has decided to fight the Ministry when Parliament re-opens on the 21st, and for this purpose Viscount Takahashi, President of the Seiyukai and once Premier of Japan, has declared that he is prepared to resign his peerage and down to the House of Representatives.

It would be interesting to see whether Viscount Takahashi would really do this, as he has several times in the past made a similar assertion. The Cabinet has picked up the gage flung down by the majority party and the forthcoming session of the Diet will result—if the assertions being made are lived up to—in a tussle of strength between the Elder Statesmen who are the Power behind the Throne and who are responsible for the present Cabinet coming into being, and the House of Representatives. The Government holds a strong trump card—it has the power to dissolve the Diet in case the members of the House are able to secure a vote of non-confidence or seriously block the Government's programme. The fact that the Prince Regent's wedding is to be celebrated on January 26 makes all parties reluctant to force a political crisis at this time. The Government will, in all probability, live through till after the auspicious event, but the crisis will come soon after the wedding has been solemnized.

JAPAN'S LAST EARTHQUAKE

Awful Memories Responsible for Suicides and Homicides: Trade Envoys Terror-stricken

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 15.

Despite the statements of scientists and seismologists that Tokio would be immune from violent earthquakes for a considerable period, on the ground that two severe earthquakes do not follow each other in quick succession, this city and Yokohama, with the neighbouring regions were severely shaken by earth tremors that rocked the city terribly at 5.58 this morning.

The first tremor lasted for fully three minutes while for at least another three minutes successive shocks occurred. This earthquake is officially recorded as having half the intensity of the one of September 1 last year which laid waste about 1,000 square miles of territory in Japan. The greatest fluctuations of the seimologic needles on September 1, 1923, were 12 centimetres, while the greatest movement of the needless to-day was 6 centimetres.

With the awful memories of last September in mind the people, bare-footed and ill-clad, emptied themselves into the streets and open places, despite a raw winter's morning in mid-January. Several persons went raving mad, three mothers are known to have strangled their babes, while two fathers killed their children and then themselves.

IMPERIAL HOTEL SCENES.

The Imperial Hotel, in Tokio, was full, most of the guests being newcomers to Japan—tourists and merchants desiring to be on the spot and secure reconstruction orders—and these were naturally greatly terrified, for this was their first taste of a fair-sized quake. Nearly every person made a rush for the doors. Some, still clad in their night-attire and with valises in their hands, once outside, were asking what was the best way to get away—to China, Russia, Timbuctoo, anywhere so long as miles could be inserted between where they would be and Tokio with its disquieting earthquakes.

Several foreigners suffered injuries, though of a minor character. These were largely the result of attempts to jump out of first and second floor rooms to the garden. The hotel building rocked like a sampan in a tempest and your correspondent, who happened to be living in the hotel, actually thought that all was up and that the building, considerably strained and weakened by the big quake of September 1 and the 5,000-odd tremors we have had since then, would surely crumble.

EMBASSY OFFICIAL'S LEAP.

Among those who sustained bruises and lacerations were Mr. F. D. K. Le Clerq, who had just arrived the previous day from Paaris to join the staff of the American Embassy here. He suffered a severe bruise on the face and painful cuts on the body when he leaped from the top of a balustrade from his room on the first floor to the roadway. Mr. H. Ellis, of Shanghai, connected with the Linotype & Machinery Co., suffered a sprained ankle, when he, too, leaped out of his room window. Mr. Linton Wells, an American journalist, who came here to write up a series of articles on "Post-Earthquake Japan" for the Newspaper Enterprise Association, sustained an ugly wound on his leg through a large stone falling on him as he was running outside.

The total number of deaths, through the quake, so far as is known, however, is only eleven. The quake was felt all throughout these islands, but was most violent in Tokio, Yokohama and the surrounding regions. At least two persons are known to have died of sheer fright—one the young wife of a spinner in a muslin factory; and the other a school-teacher aged some 40 years.

The high ramparts that hide the Imperial Palace palace from the vulgar gaze crumbled in many places, while one of the main entrances to the Palace, known as the Wakuradamon Gate, collapsed completely.

Big fissures were produced in various parts of Yokohama, which, once again, suffered most, the origin of the quake being in the Hakone mountains, some 20 miles from Yokohama. However, there is hardly anything left in Yokohama to collapse, and the light zinc-and-wood structures, although they waved about like reeds in a storm, withstood the latest assault of Nature well. At the same time it should be noted that the shocks were all horizontal ones, which perhaps minimized the damage considerably.

SHINTO PRAYERS FOR MRS. ROOSEVELT

Unprecedented Scene in Imperial Holy of Holies: Welcome to Late President's Widow

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 15.

Sacred precedents and ancient customs were shattered when the Japanese Government and people welcomed Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, wife of the late Col. Theodore Roosevelt, twice President of the United States, to Japan.

Mrs. Roosevelt arrived just in time for the biggest of the earthquakes we have been having since the calamity of last year, but was perhaps the bravest of the guests in the Imperial Hotel for, despite the frantic appeals of the "boy," after the first shock, for her to leave the room, she positively refused to do so and told him to let her "sleep in peace".

The Japanese Foreign Office sponsored the numerous entertainments given in honour of the former American President's widow and accorded her privileges that hitherto had not been conferred even on foreign royalty. The day after her arrival she and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Roosevelt—she is accompanied by her son Kermit and Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt—were conducted in one of the large crimson-and-gold limousines of the Imperial Household Department to the Meiji Shrine erected four years ago to commemorate the elevation of the Emperor Meiji—the first Emperor Japan had since the country was opened to the world—to the seventh heaven of Shintoism.

Once in the sacred precincts, precious doors were unlocked and the two ladies conducted into rooms access to which has hitherto been permitted only to members of the Reigning Family and of those royal houses that are directly affiliated with the Throne. In these rooms are kept some of the personal effects of the Emperor Meiji, articles that are even more sacred to a large proportion of the Japanese people than are the relics of saints to Roman Catholics. Before the two Roosevelt ladies entered the inner shrine, Shinto priests, dressed in the purple and white robes peculiar to the faith of Japan's Imperial family, chanted incantations and prayers for their welfare, the prayers being the same as are offered to the gods on behalf of the Emperor himself.

GOOD WIFE AND WISE MOTHER.

The memory of Col Roosevelt is treasured with veneration, respect and love by the people of these islands. Many Japanese have often stated in the press and on the platform that they feel a kinship with the late American President that they have not felt in regard to any other son of the West. The Japanese are, of course, immeasurably grateful for the valuable services rendered by Col. Roosevelt when he interposed to end the Russo-Japanese hostilities at a moment most favourable to Japan; then there is the generous and magnanimous assistance that the big Republic across the Pacific has rendered to the Japanese nation so recently in the hour of their tribulation; while, last, but not least, Mrs. Roosevelt has always been hailed by the Japanese as a true type of "kenby ryosai" good wife and wise mother, a representative of the best type of womanhood.

JAPANESE IMPERIAL WEDDING

Tokio, Jan. 26.

One hundred and one guns fired from a battery in the centre of the City at 10.15 this morning announced the conclusion of the main ceremony of the marriage of the Prince Regent and Princess Nagako Kuni which took place within the Imperial Chiyoda Palace. The salute was taken up by warships lying in Shinagawa Bay, Yokohama and other ports of the Empire.

The Capital City was awakened by aerial bombs soon after which hundreds of thousands of people filled every available point along the lines and marched in procession to and from the palace. The entire route was lined with soldiery and police, but at no place was there any evidence of disorder.

The Regent left his palace at nine and proceeded to Chiyoda Palace, receiving "Banzais" and every evidence of deep respect. He reached the palace very shortly before the Princess, who was accompanied by Viscount Iriye and a large number of attendants. Before their arrival the Imperial Family with the exception of the Emperor and Empress, the former being ill at Numazu, gathered at the palace and also some 700 Court officials and notable personages.

A PICTURESQUE CEREMONY.

The ceremony took place at the outer and inner ancestral shrines where Prince Kujo, the Acting Master of Rites, read the Shinto scripture. The Prince and Princess paid homage and the ceremony closed with the passing of the sacred wine cup by Prince Kujo first to the Prince and then to the Princess.

On leaving the palace the Imperial couple occupied the same State carriage followed by a long line of motorcars in which were Baron Makino, Viscount Chinda and Court officials and wended its way in procession in brilliant sunshine through masses of cheering crowds to the Akasaka Palace where in the afternoon a reception was given to officials. This was followed by a banquet the last act of which was the exchange of the wine cup between the bride and the groom.

The amnesty includes thousands of prisoners. Even the most desperate criminals are getting reduction of their terms.

It is expected that a number of promotions will be announced shortly. It is understood that Baron Makino will retire from the post of Minister of the Household and may be succeeded by Viscount Chinda

THE FUTURE EMPRESS OF JAPAN

Life and Education of Princess Nagako

By Our Tokio Correspondent.

The formal announcement and betrothal ceremony of the Prince Regent and the Princess Nagako-Kuni, who after her wedding will receive the title of Crown Princess, took place on Saturday, August 25, 1923, one week before the terrible catastrophe that resulted in such dire devastation throughout Tokio, Yokohama and the surrounding country. Soon after the formal betrothal ceremony, the Prince Regent proceeded to the Imperial Shrine where he reported his engagement to the Imperial ancestors.

Princess Nagako Kuni is to-day almost 21 years of age, having been born on March 6, 1903, at the residence of her father in Toriizaka, Azabu, Tokio. The official residence of Prince Kuni, has a stately and elegant sound, but the house in which the Princess was born is really the least pretentious of all the residences of the Imperial Princes in Tokio. Opposite to it stands the mansion of Marquis Sanjo and next door is a magnificent edifice reared by an exceptionally well-to-do Tokio banker. The Kuni palace is rendered humble in appearance beside these two gorgeous homes of Tokio's merchant princes.

In this comparatively humble dwelling the future Empress of Japan was born at a time when war with Russia was hanging over the country. Prince Kuni, the father of the Crown Princess, then a soldier, was so busy with his military duties that he seldom got home before dark. On February 20, 1904, Prince Kuni, like many other soldiers, had to go to Manchuria, leaving behind his wife, two sons and little Princess Nagako. Prince Kuni joined the staff of the First Army and remained in Manchuria till the end of the war, returning to Tokio in 1905. The infancy of the future Empress was thus passed during the absence of her father and entirely under the influence of her

THE PRINCESS'S SCHOOL LIFE.

[illegible] was home from the war for scarcely a year when he was ordered [illegible] to study in Germany. Princess Nagako was then five years old. It was at this time that she was placed in the Kindergarten of the Peeresses' School at Akasaka Mitsuke, Tokio, which by the way was built to the ground on September [illegible] Until she was seven years old she was under the daily care of her mother, but then her mother also went to Europe to join Prince Kuni in Germany. The little princess entered the primary department of the Peeresses' School on April 11, 1909. General Nogi, hero of the Russo-Japanese war who slew himself and Mrs. Nogi on the day of the Emperor Meiji's funeral "in order to be able to follow my master in death as I did in life," was then president of the school.

Princess Nagako is now a little taller than the average Japanese woman, but then she was small for her age and wore her hair bobbed just below her ears as many Japanese school-going children do now. She is said to have liked her school, to have been an apt pupil and to have learned quickly.

It was just after her first summer vacation in the primary school that her parents returned to Tokio from Europe. At this time it became evident that the residence at Toriizaka had become too small for the large family, for, besides the five children of the family, there were two younger brothers of Prince Kuni. It was finally arranged for the family to move to one of the residences of Prince Iwakura, then Minister of the Imperial Household Department. The residence chosen was at Ichiban-cho, Kojimachi, one of the most picturesque districts of Tokio. The new mansion was, by no means, too spacious for the family, but it was far more comfortable than that at Toriizaka, Azabu, and it commanded a fine view of the green slopes of the outer moat of the Imperial palace and in the spring a fine view of cherry blossoms.

THE PRINCESS AS SCHOOLGIRL.

Here Princess Nagako lived from the time she was eight years old until three years ago when she was informally selected to be the future bride of the Prince Regent. She was undoubtedly popular and her bearing is said to have been easy and graceful.

It was not until she had finished with the primary school that she really began to grow and attain the stature usual for a girl of her age. She became a good tennis and pingpong player. Every day she wrote in her diary. Some passages of her writing, which have been printed by the Japanese press, reflect the beauty of her home life and the charming thoughts she entertained during her adolescence.

EDUCATION BEFITTING EMPRESS.

After this it became necessary for Princess Nagako to enter upon [illegible] education to [illegible] position. Therefore, she left the Peeresses' [illegible] had finished the junior course there. A study, in pure Japanese style, was built for her in the premises of her father's official residence, and an able woman teacher, Kiku-ko Gogan, was called upon to instruct her in the lore that a Japanese empress ought to have. The Princess had, as companions in her studies, Miss Suda-ko Sato, daughter of Dr. Tatsujiro Sato; and Miss Nobu-ko Hirayama, daughter of Baron (then Mr.) Narinobu Hirayama, who to-day is President of the Japan Red Cross. Both of these girls were former students of the Peeresses' School and class mates of the Princess.

During this special phase of her education, Mr. Jugo Sugiura, who had studied in England and was then delivering lectures to the Prince Regent, was called in to give lectures in ethics to the Princess. The course was in general conformity with that of the Peeresses' School, but Princess Nagako and her companions were able to make greater progress in their studies than the schoolmates they left behind. Their lessons included the Chinese classics, Japanese language and literature, ethics, history, geography and science. The instructors were of course, the best in the land.

Princess Nagako finished her course in universal history the year before last and then took up physical geography, which she is said to be very fond of and in which she desires to specialize. She has also been having a series of lectures dealing with the current happenings in the world and this enabled her to follow the deliberations of the Washington conference very closely. She reads the foreign cables in the newspapers under the guidance of her teachers and also special political and economic articles. She is, therefore, supposed to be conversant with the trend of events and the currents of thought in the world. The Princess has also studied French and is said to be attaining considerable fluency in it.

loves poetry and recently translated the sentiment of a poem: "A Spring Morning" into music of her own composition. This piece will be played by massed bands at the entertainment to the public which the Tokio Municipality hopes to give soon after the royal wedding in order to celebrate the occasion. The Princess has been taking lessons in Western music, both instrumental and vocal, for some time and is said to have a good soprano voice. Her artistic studies have now turned to water colour painting and to charcoal drawing and she is also interested in purely Japanese painting.

HONOURS TO THE GODS

Fond of athletics, the Princess has a particular liking for tennis Near her study she has a small garden which she cultivates herself and where she grows flowers, strawberries and some vegetables In keeping with an ancient Japanese custom she also raises rice in a tiny paddy field of her own, planting the rice in the spring and harvesting it in the autumn. Then she puts the white grains on a tray and takes it to the shrine near her study to make the customary offering of the year's first harvest to the gods.

That instrument of modernity, the typewriter, is also being used by the Princess, the one she possesses now being a machine made in Europe which her brother brought to her as a gift when he returned from Europe recently

THE CROWN PRINCE

Prince Hirohito the Prince Regent, was born in April, 1901, and at the age of seven entered upon a long and extraordinarily varied course of special education to equip him for his future high office, beginning with the elementary course in the school of Peers, then having the famous General Nogi for its President. Even in very early school days, the Prince manifested qualities which have since become notable and admirable characteristics, showing a keen and highly intelligent interest in his studies and exhibiting marked powers of observation and memory. Leaving this school in 1914, he continued his education under private tutors, history, geography, moral philosophy and the natural sciences claiming his particular interest, and in all these subjects he is deeply read. His interest in science and natural history is evidenced by the excellent collection now to be found in the small private museum founded by the Prince. His interest in the arts also has not been merely academic, since he has proved himself a painter of some merit, his habit being to make little studies of picturesque landscapes and any object of striking beauty or interest observed by him. He was given the title of Crown Prince in November, 1916, attained his majority in May, 1919, and was appointed Regent on November 25, 1921.

THE EUROPEAN TOUR.

Upon formal completion of his education, he set out on the European tour, in fulfilment of the wish of the late Emperor, and this he accomplished with marked ability and success—for it was an enterprise by no means light Indeed, in many respects, it was an exacting ordeal, and the Japanese people watched with as much anxiety as deep interest the progress of the Prince, and naturally were highly gratified at the manner in which he distinguished himself. A memorable incident of the tour was the Prince's reception at the Guildhall, where over 1,000 distinguished guests gathered to give him greeting. In silence and an atmosphere almost of solemnity the Prince was conducted to the platform from which addresses of welcome were delivered, and when his turn came to speak he responded with a brilliant speech, a performance which completely overcame any misgivings as to how he might meet the demands of so important an occasion. The tour was a personal triumph for the Prince and further established him in the esteem and popularity of his people. Returning to Japan and entering on the important duties of Regent, Prince Hirohito at once manifested great energy and practical ability, applying himself very thoroughly to a variety of affairs, and constantly being in touch with men of authority in science, art and education as well as of government, and in intercourse of this kind he has shown personal ability of no mean quality and an inexhaustible interest in affairs of the day. The Prince is very keen on sport, and his principal recreations are riding and golfing. He has given a lead in encouraging a variety of games, supporting Western innovations and at the same time maintaining interest in the national games of Japan.

Prince Hirohito was very deeply concerned in the fate of the unfortunate victims of the great earthquake and spared no personal effort in visiting and comforting

OBITUARY

Mrs. Frank J. Courtney

With deep regret we have to record the death Mrs. Frank J. Courtney, which occurred at the Isolation Hospital on Saturday night.

The deceased, who is numbered among the younger set of the American community, fell suddenly and severely ill about a fortnight ago and was taken to the General Hospital where the trouble was diagnosed as ptomaine poisoning; but later symptoms of smallpox were found and she was removed to the Isolation Hospital, where she lingered fighting with excellent chances for recovery. A sudden turn for the worse set in on Saturday night and it was seen just before midnight that she could not survive. Her many friends were hoping against hope for final word of improvement which did not come, and the patient did not recover consciousness during all Saturday.

Mrs. Courtney's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James W. Montgomery, live in San Francisco, and besides her parents she is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Harry Fenstermacher, of Seattle, and Mrs. Fred Sarios of San Jose; and two brothers, Frank and H. James Montgomery of San Francisco.

Mrs. Courtney, known to all her friends as "Betty," was a lady of great charm and had not attained her 26th birthday. The news of her death has caused much grief among the large circle of close friends.

The funeral took place at Bubbling Well Cemetery on Monday afternoon, when many mourners attended. There was a profusion of floral tributes.

Mr. J. H. McMichael

Very widespread regret will be felt throughout the community upon the news of the death of Mr. J. H. McMichael, which took place at his residence in Sinza Road on Monday evening.

Mr. McMichael was among the oldest and most respected members of the community here, and there is to his credit a fine record of public service. He arrived in Shanghai in 1887, and within less than 10 years of his arrival—in 1896—he was elected a member of the Municipal Council. His work there was outstanding. Previous to that he had become a prominent member of the General Chamber of Commerce, and his public activities were further emphasized by the fact that he was one of the members of the commission appointed for the revision of the Land Regulations. Subsequently he was responsible for the formation of the American Chamber of Commerce, to-day a very influential body in the community, and he was its first chairman.

The funeral service for the late Mr. J. H. McMichael, prior to cremation, was conducted at the Bubbling Well Cemetery chapel on Tuesday afternoon by the Very Rev. Dean, C. J. F. Symons. The great popularity of the deceased gentleman and his family amongst old and young alike and the esteem and respect in which he was held had every proof in the attendance at the service, the chapel being filled with mourners and many more gathering on the steps. It would not be possible to identify them all, but amongst those who were noticed were:—

Mr. Stirling Fessenden (Chairman of the Municipal Council, of which the deceased formerly was a member), Sir Edward Pearce, Sir Skinner Turner, Messrs. A. W. Burkill, C. R. Burkill, Brodie A Clarke, H. J. Clark, L. Lienard, A. S. Campbell, A. J. Welch, J. H. Teesdale, R. S. F. McBain, E. Oxley Cumming, M. H. Logan, E. Gordon Lowder, W. L. Merriman, J. K. Brand, R. I. Fearon, C. Blix, P. W. Lambe, R. N. Macleod, Judge C. S. Lobingier, A. M. Wilkie, C. P. Holcomb, John Prentice, E. T. Byrne, R. G. Macdonald, G. C. Wingrove, R. W. Wingrove, V. Grosse, R. A. Curry, A. G. Mossop, C. G. S. Mackie, J. J. Dawe, and A. H. P. Koe. The deceased's son, Major E. H. McMichael, was the chief mourner.

A very large number of beautiful wreaths were sent.

Death of Rev. W. G. Thompson

In the early hours of Tuesday the Rev. Walter G. Thompson, an Independent missionary, passed away, leaving many sorrowing friends, both Chinese and foreign by whom he had been very greatly esteemed. Mr. Thompson came to Shanghai three years ago and during the past two years was a teacher in Beulah Schools, North Szechuen Road.

Mr. T. W. Richardson

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Thomas William Richardson, formerly a resident of Swatow, at the advanced age of 87. News of his death, which occurred on Tuesday, was received from London—where it is believed he passed away—by the firm with which he was connected as Governing Director, Messrs. Bradley & Co.

Mr. Richardson, who was one of the oldest residents in the Far East, was born in Edinburgh in 1836. He made his first acquaintance with the Far East at Hongkong, where he arrived in 1855. He did not remain there long, however, for in the same year he went to Canton and in the following year was sent to Takow in Formosa by the firm with which he was then connected. In 1857 he joined Messrs. Tait & Co., of Amoy.

A distinct change in his life occurred in 1860, for in that year he commenced his own business at Swatow in partnership with Mr. C. W. Bradley under the style of Messrs. Bradley & Co.; and until his retirement in 1918 from the Far East, was closely connected with that port. It is interesting to learn that in those early days all the European firms were stationed at Masu, a small island just off Swatow. Indeed, no Europeans were allowed to live in Swatow itself until Chaochowfoo became a Treaty Port. Mr. Richardson, therefore, may be regarded as one of the pioneers who built up Swatow as an important trading centre.

Mr. Richardson, whose wife died about two years ago, leaves a large family to mourn his loss. One of his sons is Commissioner of Customs at Tsingtao.

A TRIPLE MURDER IN TATUNG ROAD

Details are given in the official police report regarding a triple murder at 297A Tatung Road. It appears that at about 7 a.m. on Monday a man was admitted to the house as he wished to deliver a parcel to his friend Tsang upstairs. He was in the house about 45 minutes. At about 9.30 a.m. a woman named Tsang Wong-sz of 1688 Sinza Road visited the house and found her husband in bed with his third wife, Tsang Lee-sz, the man seriously wounded in the head but still alive but the woman dead. In another room the man's mother was found also dead. After the man's removal to the Police Hospital where he died, a medical examination was made the doctor stating that he believed the wound was caused by a bullet. As a result the pillow of the murdered man was examined and a spent bullet found. A thorough search is to be made of the room of the man's mother as there are indications that she was also shot, the bullet emerging from the top of the head and ricochetting against the wall of the bedroom. So far no motive has been discovered for the crime. The other occupants of the house, three families, deny any knowledge of a noise or dispute. Inquiries are still proceeding.

THE INQUEST.

Inquests were held at the Public Mortuary on Tuesday (Mr. J. E. Jacobs, American Assessor, and Mr. Kuan Chun, senior Chinese Magistrate, sitting as Coroners) to investigate the circumstances surrounding the deaths of the victims of the Tatung Road tragedy.

Formal testimony was taken and four Chinese (Tsang Chung-wu, Tsang Han-sze, Tsang Wong-sze and Wong Yung-sze) identified the three dead bodies.

According to the official police statements an empty 32 automatic pistol cartridge was found in the room of one of the deceased, and two of the same make in the other room where the double murder took place.

Medical certificates were produced, and the Court found that deceased came to their deaths as the result of bullet wounds from a weapon fired by some person or persons unknown.

THE BLIND SOLDIER

(The following poem appropriate to the day of entertainment in aid of St. Dunstan's first appeared in the "Spectator.")

"Will ye answer a question Mother, Say
Is it morn or early night?
It's funny at first, ye know
Not havin' your own sight,—
If I'm botherin' tell me outright"?

"Dearie boy, its the mornin', and
Don't you be 'shamed to ask
Of course I'll answer a hundred and more
And never think it's a task"

"Then tell me, d'ye see in the distance there
A misty haze o' blue
That hangs like a bunch of grapes untouched
Where the purple land's ploughed new Mother, d'ye see the view?"

"I see it dearie, now you've spoke
My, how your eyes do see!
I've thought I saw all that was there
Since ever I was three!"

"Look then again, don't a red blush creep
Through the pines where the field dips low?
It used to mind me o' man and maid
A kissin' wi' cheeks aglow
Mother d'ye see the show?"

"Did ever! It's just like that, my dear,
As like as life an' fine,
But it's queer, I niver saw before
The look o' that bearded pine!"

"Nearby, d'ye see the willows waving?
Jist watch them in the breeze;
They're whisperin', noddin', blinkin';
I bet
Ye like gossips at their teas.
Mother, d'ye see the trees?"

"Yes an' I'm smilin'—an' cryin', dearie,
At the lot you'be made me find
And to think it's you that's seein'
An' me the one that's blind!"

THRILLING TALE OF THE SEA

Steamer's Voyage of Sixty-One Days from Seattle to Shanghai in Teeth of Gales

Looking battered and bruised and evidently having suffered severely in a succession of storms, the str. Kurdistan, of the Hindustan Steamship Line, reached Shanghai from Seattle on Thursday. One shipping man who saw her reach port said that her appearance gave the impression of first having been sunk, then raised and set on fire, and it is probably difficult to improve upon this. The outward appearance of the steamer was due to the ice-coating which settled upon her and which did not really melt until within a couple of days of reaching Shanghai. For the rest the severe storms she encountered occasioned her appearance. Little wonder, either, for she had had to go as far north as Alaska for coal in the course of her voyage, and then prior to reaching Shanghai was burning woodwork and cargo to keep steam going. Her voyage required 61 days, practically double the usual length of time.

THANKSGIVING DAY DEPARTURE.

The Kurdistan left Seattle with her cargo of wheat on Thanksgiving Day, November 29. Twenty-four hours out she struck bad weather, and this continued for no fewer than 15 days. Seas broke over her continually, and so bad were the conditions that on occasion she made no more than 30 knots during the 24 hours. To make matters worse the sea was never true, the waves running in opposite directions and battling against each other. The lifeboats were lashed down, otherwise they would have gone by the board, and as it was they were all strained.

Making such slow progress as this, it became evident that coal would give out long before China was reached, and it was decided to run for Dutch Harbour in Alaska. This port was made under very great difficulties, and it is interesting to note that the Kurdistan was to some extent guided thither by wireless directions from other ships in the vicinity. Dutch Harbour is a place of about 450 inhabitants, most of them Aleuts, but there are also a number of Americans. Fortunately an American firm here had a good supply of coal, and the Kurdistan bunkered. The crew had to do the work, as local labour could only bring the coal to the quay-side.

FURTHER HARDSHIPS.

After staying at Dutch Harbour for seven days the weather prospects appeared to be more favourable and the Kurdistan set out for her destination. The port was left on Christmas Eve, but immediately the steamer plunged once more into the thick of bad weather. Without intermission this continued for the next three weeks, and then the only thing to do was to make for the nearest Japan port. Coal was again rapidly giving out, and whatever woodwork there was, fenders and everything else, was being used as fuel in conjunction with the cargo of wheat. By mixing these up with the coal it was possible to keep the furnaces supplied. By January 14 the weather fortunately moderated, and she was able to make the Japanese port of Kushiro.

To realize the hardships the Kurdistan had experienced up to this stage it may be mentioned that in the early part of the voyage the wind was blowing at any rate up to 150 miles an hour, while the temperature went as low as eight degrees Fahrenheit. To make matters worse, the Kurdistan had previously been on the west coast of Africa and at one period 22 out of 28 of the crew were down with malaria.

Kushiro was reached safely, but there it was difficult to make the ship's wants known as nobody really spoke English. The Japanese, however, did their best, each official, it is said, having three dictionaries to help him, and the Kurdistan secured enough coal to take her to Muroran. From there to Shanghai was a comparatively uneventful voyage after the original struggle towards Alaska and then Japan.

It is only a year or two since the London newspapers were full of accounts of the terrible experiences of Atlantic liners which made the passage from America to England with hurricanes of 100 miles an hour blowing, and it may be realized how much worse was the plight of this vessel, so much smaller than these, in its voyage across the Pacific under distinctly worse conditions, and the admirable seamanship and courage which brought her safely to her destination.

DAME ADELAIDE'S FIRST "ROTARY"

Guest of Shanghai Rotarians: Welfare of China's Workers

At the weekly Rotary Club meeting held on Thursday at the Astor Grill Room, Dame Adelaide Anderson was introduced by Mr. W. G. Hawkings, the President, as the speaker of the day. Complaining of a bad throat, Dame Adelaide much regretted that she would have to forego the pleasure of addressing her first Rotary Club meeting. There were two things in her life, she said, she had never enjoyed—although she was Australian and British—she had never attended a horse race or a Rotary Club meeting.

Miss Mary Dingman, Y. W. C. A. World Industrial Secretary, offered some helpful criticism on the industrial conditions in China. The world was fast realizing that it was now a single industrial unit, which was in great need of collective, creative thinking. Its ultimate aim was the solution of the intricate economic problems evolving from the relations of employer and employee and the horrible conditions under which thousands and millions existed.

The life of the child labourers in China was deplorable, even in Shanghai—if one were to visit the vicinity of the cotton mills between two and four o'clock in the morning an inkling might be gleaned of how they struggled for bread and butter.

It was a sign of improvement that silk filatures were adopting modern methods whereby the hot water process would be carried out by machine and the hands of the masses of workers saved for other labour.

With reference to the situation in America, the speaker quoted the report of a group of engineers under the supervision of Mr. Herbert Hoover, who though admitting the ingenuity of American mechanics, yet deplored great economic waste in American industry.

DOWN OF BETTER DAYS.

Miss Edith Johnson, local industrial secretary of the Y. W. C. A., graphically described the efforts of the organization for the welfare of labour round Shanghai, and those of the Shanghai Municipal Commission which had been at work for months now on a report of the mills and factories in Shanghai, which report she hoped would show the community light and lead them away from the vicious circle which employer and employees were running round. Perhaps the Council could and would introduce regulations which would prove an example for the provinces and Central Government of China.

In the opinion of the speaker it would be at least a decade before any visible results would appear, though the labourers were beginning to vocalize their troubles and the voluntary organizations for their relief were doing constructive thinking. Both were helping materially and the Chinese College Mission faculties had considered for some time the introduction of courses for training factory inspectors and industrial workers.

THE Chinese press reports a case of gland transplantation, mentioning a Cantonese staying at the Grand Hotel de Pekin who is over 50 years old, but now "feels stronger than ever."

SHANGHAI NEWS

MR. E. S. LITTLE AND THE AUSTRALIAN COMMISSIONERSHIP IN CHINA

Vigorous Reply to Attack in Australian Parliament: Demand for Open Hearing and Justice

Those who remember Mr. E. S. Little at Ratepayers' Meetings and how tenaciously he stuck to a point when convinced of the righteousness of it will not be surprised that the last has not been heard with regard to the cancellation of his office as Australian Trade Commissioner in China. Much was said in the Australian Parliament on the subject, columns have appeared in both Australian and China papers, but one is forced to admit, whichever side was right, that singularly little publicity was given to Mr. Little's side of the case. It is because of this that he has come forward once more and has published a pamphlet giving very fully, but not in a wearisome manner, the facts as he sees them.

Mr. Little opens very aptly with the following:—

"A great British statesman said words to the following effect, 'Men of our race, regardless of their political or party differences, have deep down in their hearts a profound sense of right.' It is to this 'profound sense of right' in the hearts of the Members Parliament that I now appeal for justice."

THE UNWARRANTED ATTACK.

Mr. Little then continues that in the summer of last year he was the subject of a violent attack in the Australian House of Representatives, that he had no knowledge such an attack was to take place, that he was not asked for any kind of explanation and consequently was unjustly condemned, defenceless and unheard. Yet the Ministry, he says, had in their possession the fullest and most detailed information which, if it had been put unreservedly at the disposition of Members, would certainly have placed a different complexion on the debate and would, undoubtedly, have led to a different result. Members repeatedly asked for this information, but the Minister declined to impart it. The Minister stated that he possessed some evidence which he did not disclose. This remark created suspicions of the existence of some misdemeanour or maladministration of his office by the Commissioner, which led one Member to say that the Commissioner must have done "something disgraceful to Australia." As to this, Mr. Little claims that there is not a shred of evidence, that his personal character is without reproach through 37 years in China and that his administration of the Commissioner's office has won the respect of the commercial and general public of China.

After showing that he received complete though belated exoneration on every count levelled against him, Mr. Little states:—"For that reason I am compelled to lay facts before Members of Parliament together with this my appeal and to ask, not for mercy, but for justice."

FINANCIAL CHARGES.

Mr. Little then details the circumstances of his engagement, as "an experienced and expert authority on Chinese commercial and other matters." He disclosed the whole of his share investments in China (which, he says, did not exceed $500) and received written permission to retain them on condition that he did not attend personally or by proxy any meeting and these conditions he claims to have scrupulously observed, and adds: "I wish to emphasize, in the most general and particular way, without any reservation at all, and in the plainest language I can command, that I have not made any money—not so much as a single penny—in any way, shape or form, except as stated above." This is in reply to the remark of a Member regarding Mr. Little and another Commissioner, that "it is common talk that they are there to make money for themselves and not to benefit Australia." Mr. Little informed the Minister by a special note that he had no interest in any of the three Shanghai firms using the name of Liftle, though his son-in-law was, but is not now, managing director of Little Bros., Ld.

THE FIRST ASSAULT.

In January, 1922, Mr. Little first heard of charges being made against him, and in the same month there arrived "Major I." with authority to conduct an investigation. Mr. Little writes of this:—

". . . the investigator informed me with some heat that they had been beaten in the first round, but that they intended to continue to throw all kinds of charges against me, regardless of whether they were true or false, in order to discredit me. He stated they were prepared to continue this conspiracy against me for 10 years, if it were necessary, to dislodge me so as to make room for one of their number to occupy my post. The investigator actually sent telegrams to the Government urging acceptance of my resignation and the appointment of my attacker to carry on my work and position."

After two and a half years—his contract was for five years—came his cabled dismissal, "as a bolt from the blue."

In the course of the Parliamentary debate, there was an obvious lack of knowledge as to exchange conditions in China, and one paragraph in Mr. Little's reply is distinctly illuminating. He writes:—

"Surprise was expressed that I was paid 30s.0d. for every £1! I have been paid, and have myself in turn paid to my employees, £4 for every £1! And yet, at whatever rate calculated, I and they have received and paid away again exactly the same quantity of silver which alone is current throughout China. I have paid my lady typist from £1,750 to £2,000 calculated in sterling and yet she only received the ordinary number of Shanghai taels and stated she did not have enough to live upon. If members had only understood and appreciated facts which are familiar to every junior clerk in China they would not have been betrayed into remarks which, when read in China, seem extraordinary."

CONVINCING EVIDENCE.

Mr. Little was paid Tls. 1,500 per month, whatever it cost the Commonwealth in sterling to purchase. For comparison he gives a table of the salaries of Municipal Council employees and suggests that his salary does not show a very favourable comparison with theirs. Again he denies his connexion with Little, Bros., Ld., and that he prostituted his position as Trade Commissioner to advance the interests of the company and stigmatizes it as a most cowardly and dishonest method of attack. "Messrs. Little Bros.," he writes, "were good enough, at my request, to engage a firm of chartered accountants to make a report on their Australian business. This report showed that the firm's total business with Australia since their establishment was £2,300, of which £1,700 had been put through before I was appointed Australian Trade Commissioner."

Samples which Mr. Little is alleged to have handed to Little Bros. did not, he states, arrive in China until two months after the charges were made.

It will be remembered that Senator Bakhap came to China to make a second investigation and Mr Little writes:—

It was stated on the floor of the House that Senator Bakhap stayed with me in my home as my guest, leaving the obvious inference that his report has been directly coloured in my favour. Senator Bakhap never came to my knowledge within 34 miles of my house; he never met my wife till just before he sailed, long after his work was concluded and his report sent away to the Minister in Melbourne, and then only for a few seconds on the public street; he never accepted the least hospitality from me, not even so much as a cup of tea; he absolutely refused to ride in my car from his hotel to the place of the inquiry, though I pressed him to do so since he was a sick man."

MY OWN DEFENCE.

Under the caption, "My Own Defence," Mr. Little writes:

I most earnestly desired to be allowed to make a statement, publicly and officially, in my own defence but was not permitted to do so. On September 5, I cabled the Minister in Melbourne as follows:—

"'Will you give permission to me to make public official statement concerning outrageous lies spoken of me in House of Parliament?'

"As I could obtain no answer I cabled again on September 24 as follows:—

"'Surely justice courtesy require [illegible] 5th.'

"On October 2 I received the following reply:—

"'Referring to your telegram September 5 consider it inappropriate that you reply in press to statement made in Parliament, will consider any reply you think fit make on subject.'

"On October 11, I repeated my request in the following cable to which no reply has been received:—

"'Will you give me permission to print my defence for presentation to every Member of Parliament both Houses of Parliament, this document to include fullest statement by me, and also copy of agreement, Bakhap's full report to Minister Rodgers dated April last year, together with all necessary correspondence, and a correction of the mass of misstatements made in Parliament, which were not contradicted, exposing me to gravest injustice to which I am quite unable to submit. Will you give me permission to appear at the Bar of Parliament asking for justice, since I have been wrongly condemned, undefended, upon no evidence but upon false statements and hearsay: absolutely no evidence can be produced by anybody against me or my administration. I do not understand your Parliamentary reason for dismissal, since 'results' never mentioned in any negotiations or correspondence at any time: further you have never once communicated with me on this or any other subject, consequently I am totally unaware of what you expect.'"

A DIRECT CHALLENGE.

To a Member "who did me the honour of describing my office as a pantomime" and who stated that various persons so described it to him, Mr. Little issues a challenge to give him the names of any responsible or reputable persons who made such a statement. Countering a statement made in the House that the way to do business was to frequent the clubs, Mr. Little replies:—

"In China it is with the Chinese that business is done and not a single Chinese is admitted as a member of these clubs, which are reserved for foreigners. The only Chinese found there are the bar boys and attendants. How can Australian merchants do business with Chinese by frequenting places where they are never seen It is a very good sample of the stuff that is served up to casual travellers. I heard of this suggestion 30 years ago and confess to surprise that at this late day anyone can be found to give credence to it. No merchant in China who values his judgment would be found giving serious utterance to such folly."

The same gentleman is reported to have asserted that the place for the office of the Trade Commissioner in China was in Yokohama, Japan!

In a final appeal Mr. Little asks that the office be re-opened, with himself at its head and that he be allowed to complete his contract. Attached to the pamphlet are copies of several letters and documents concerned with the case.

THE CATHEDRAL'S NEW SUB-DEAN

A letter was received on Thursday from the Rev. A. C. S. Trivett, Chaplain of the Church of St. John the Evangelist at Hankow, definitely accepting the offer made to him by the Dean and Vestry of the post of Sub-Dean at Holy Trinity Cathedral; he will be ready to begin work in Shanghai on May 1. Mr. Trivett, who is a Canadian, is a Bachelor of Divinity of Ottawa University. During the war he joined up in the Canadian Army as a private. Both he and Mrs. Trivett are very popular in Shanghai, and the Dean and Wardens feel they may congratulate themselves on their choice.

The engagement is announced of Mrs. Sophie Zwigin and Mr. G. S. Jensen of Shanghai.

TRAGIC END OF MR. M. FREDERICKS

Found Shot Through the Heart in His Office

The business community of Shanghai was shocked to learn on Tuesday of the tragic death of Mr. M. Fredericks who is stated to have shot himself through the heart during Monday night at his office at 201 Chung Foo Building in Jinkee Road. Death was instantaneous and the body was removed to the Mortuary in the morning.

The police reports state that Mr. Fredericks went to his office shortly before 10 p.m., remained a short while and then went out to return again just before 11 o'clock, after which as far as is known he did not leave again; further that he told his wife that he had a Chinese dinner party to attend and that he would be late in coming home. He telephoned her and said he was all right early in the evening. The police were informed by Mrs. Fredericks who went to the office and found the body of her husband. Mr. Fredericks' body was found on the floor with his back to the desk, the bullet having pierced the chest and heart and gone out through the back, after which it struck the desk, went through it and then into the chair behind the desk; struck a metallic substance and ricocheted into the ceiling where it was firmly imbedded. The instrument used was a .303 calibre S.V.C. rifle.

THE POLICE THEORY.

Although there were no witnesses and no one saw the body for some time after death, the police believe that the victim sat on the floor, facing the door with his back to the desk, after which he fixed the butt of the gun to the wall with the point of the barrel to his heart. The long ruler on the floor beside him suggests that he had used it to press the trigger. The night watchmen in the building report that they did not hear any sound at all, which was very likely, as the pressure of the barrel to the breast, must have certainly acted as an effective silencer, releasing the explosive gases very slowly. As a matter of fact the clothing showed how firmly gun had been forced between body and wall.

The first person to find the body was the coolie who was doing his daily cleaning of the halls and corridors, and who, seeing the door open and the light burning, peered in and discovered the tragedy. He notified the superintendent of the building, who came to the scene. Mrs. Fredericks herself was the first foreigner to arrive, having been worried over her husband's failure to return to the house. She immediately notified the police. The Spanish Consulate was informed, Mr. Fredericks having acquired Spanish citizenship, and Mr. V. Vizenzinovich, Chancellor attached, took charge of the remains. The Consulate is conducting a detailed investigation. Mrs. Fredericks called up the office between three and four in the morning but received no reply, whereupon she communicated with the police and asked if her husband had been heard of.

Mr. Fredericks had been suffering for a time from a severe attack of influenza and had been under doctor's care. The illness greatly weakened his physical and mental resources and his vitality and stamina had been considerably reduced. In this state it is thought that he brooded over minor financial difficulties, increasing them to an unwarranted magnitude, until he was not himself.

FOUGHT IN THE BOER WAR.

Mr. Fredericks had fought with credit in the Boer War while in his twenties. He was 53 years old at the time of death. While in Africa he acted as manager of several banks in the western portion and served as Acting Consul for Holland, Portugal, Norway, and Belgium in various South African ports. He and Mrs. Fredericks came to Shanghai two years ago, and he conducted an insurance and general brokerage business at 25 Jinkee Road.

With regard to the rumours of financial difficulties thought to have been troubling the deceased and that clients had failed to meet their obligations, we are informed that several years ago Mr. Fredericks had severe money reverses, but that he paid off every dollar that he owed. He was well liked and admired by the Chinese from compradore to coolie and was respected and well thought of by his foreign associates.

Mr. Fredericks is survived by his wife and his brother, Mr. J. A. Fredericks, with whom the deepest sympathy is felt.

MURDERED SKIPPER'S FUNERAL

Capt. F. J. Braudt Buried at Bubbling Well with Masonic Rites

The remains of the late Captain F. J. Brandt, which were brought to Shanghai from Ichang for burial, were interred at Bubbling Well cemetery. The service was conducted by the officers and brethren of the Ancient Landmark Lodge with masonic rites. The deceased was master of the str. "Tze-sui," and was murdered aboard his ship in circumstances which suggest that he met his death while resisting the piracy of his charge by Chinese at Kaochia chen, a village near Fengtu, a short distance down river from Chungking, West China. After dragging operations Chinese fishermen recovered his body from the river, into which he had either fallen or been thrown, wrapped it in silk, and coffined it, and the "Tze-sui," which went up river with the late Captain in command, came down again with all that was left of him. The coffin was covered with the red ensign.

The deceased was one of the best known masters on the upper river, popular alike with the foreign and native communities with whom he came into contact. He spoke Chinese fluently, was highly respected by all classes of Chinese, and loved by his crews. He was a colleague of the late Captain Plant, and shared with him the honour and dangers of his pioneering trips in the successful opening up of the upper Yangtze to steam navigation. As Chief Engineer on the famous "Shu-tung" he was yet a capable assistant on the bridge, and no little of Capt. Plant's success was due to the valuable co-operation of the deceased, who was unique in that he possessed both B.O.T. Chief Engineer's and Master's certificates, and was at home in the engine room as well as on the bridge. In recognition of which, when Captain Plant was appointed River Inspector of the Upper Yangtze and retired from his command, the deceased took his place, since when he had continued to justify his selection as an able master. The steamers Shu-tung, Shu-hun, Anning and Tze-sui, among others have known his captaincy at one time or another, and he was very successful in keeping his craft out of the upper Yangtze dangers, only to fall a victim to a gang of pirates on the eve of retirement, and at the comparatively early age of 45. There was a large attendance of friends represented at the grave-side, on the 24th instant in spite of the cold raw day, among whom were noticed many old friends and school-mates, and many expressions of grief and indignation were voiced.

The aged mother could not trust herself to attend. The chief mourners were the widow, brothers and sisters, and other relatives. A married sister, Mrs. Campbell-Heathcote is in England, and another sister in Geneva, while other relatives at Home have been advised of the sad fatality.

There was a very large number of beautiful wreaths, some of which had come all the way down river, and had been made by the crews with their own hands from materials obtained on the spot, and demonstrated the affection and grief of the senders at this sad last parting from one who was not only their superior, but comrade and friend.

According to the Chinese press, the San-men-wan Fisheries, Ld., an organization with a capital of $1,000,000, has been established and will begin operations in March or April.

During the intervals and at the conclusion of the performance at the Cercle Sportif Français on Saturday night one heard a variety of opinions regarding the play, ranging from not too severe criticism all the way up to lavish praise, and all were correct in some degree. One easily could ride the company hard on both whip and spur, if so minded, but it would not be quite justifiable. They had many and bad faults, yet all excelled at times, and, at any rate, they selected a play with which there could be no quarrel. "All-of-a-Sudden Peggy" is a wonderfully droll thing and thoroughly enjoyable throughout. It is to be hoped that Mr. Frawley has seen it, for then he would understand how we British like our bad language served. The play simply bristles with every naughty word from "Tut-tut" to as high as the big "D," but they are brought in so naturally—by the author, at any rate—and in so quaint a way as not to offend. The company may not have scored a triumph, but at least they were not a failure and one can thank them for a very pleasant evening and recommend their performance as one quite worth seeing.

The most unfortunate point in the performance was the allocation of some of the parts, particularly of Peggy and her mother. Mrs. Rawson did not look anything like Mrs. Dickson's daughter and Mrs. Dickson did not look like Mrs. Rawson's mother. The two ladies easily could have changed parts and done as well, for they are both exceedingly clever, but even then one still would have been compelled to say that Mrs. Rawson, (Peggy), unless she affected a complete disguise, never would have looked like Mrs. Dickson's mother. Also, there was a trouble over the dialect. Mrs. Dickson succeeded quite well in maintaining an Irish brogue throughout, but Mrs. Rawson was not equal to it, and it was decidedly curious to hear the obvious difference in dialogues between mother and daughter, especially in a case where you can tell the relationship by our faces." Beyond this, there is only praise for both of the ladies, for their acting was very clever and natural and they were well deserving of all the applause they received during the performance and the loads of beautiful flowers when the final curtain came down.

Mrs. Feely, as Lady Crackenthorpe, never faltered throughout the several long and undoubtedly trying scenes in which she was engaged. She was admirably gowned and in every way looked the part. There was just one slight fault. When she was speaking she was perfect, but when she was silent she concentrated rather too much on her acting and rather overdid the haughtiness. Even the bluest-blooded ladies do not have their heads in the air all the time, for the backs of their necks would not stand the strain. Miss Richardson had not very much to do, but that little she did very well and she could be trusted with a more difficult part. The fifth lady was the one in all the play with whom no fault could be found. Probably with a professional company not too much would be expected of "the Hon. Mrs. Colquhoun," for she comes upon the stage but once, monopolizes it for a few minutes, and having, in her cattish manner, provoked a wealth of trouble, departs to allow others to put it right, and then she is seen no more. However, small though the part may be it calls for good acting and gives an amateur a splendid chance, and it must be remembered that many a famous player has been promoted for saying no more than, "Your Grace, the carriage waits" in the manner in which it should be said. Mrs. A. J. Stewart was the titled mischief-maker. Arrayed in a superb gown, she drifted on to the stage in the lazily impudent manner of the Society woman of the type, insulted everybody, clipped her words, drawled slang and never hesitated once. It was a really splendid impersonation and the audience gave her a great ovation which was thoroughly deserved.

Now one comes to the men. In a general way Anthony Lord Crackenthorpe (Mr. S. H. McMurray) was quite good. Mr. McMurray looked the part admirably, but he overdid the attempt to appear studious. No man, if pincenez fitted him so loosely as Mr. McMurray's apparently did, would continue to wear them. On the other hand, if Mr. McMurray fancied it was a natural mannerism to adjust them every six words, he went too far. Such little trifles irritate one rather than amuse. Also there was not a full stop, nor even a comma, throughout his discourse. Still, to repeat, he was good on the whole.

Mr. L. H. Rawson was not good as the Major. The part did not fit him at all. Never in the history of the Army has there been any Major, however foppish and dandified, though he be monocled, bespatted and corsetted, with so little emphasis as Mr. Rawson's Major. And retired Majors are the most vigorous, probably because most Majors are retired on account of their incompetence to become Colonels, and disappointed men always are the noisiest. Mr. Rawson was more mild than an elderly maiden lady who, when her pet pussy-cat hopelessly tangles up a skein of wool, exclaims, "Oh, dearie me," and then puts a penny in her mission fund box for having lost her temper and used bad language. More emphasis would have improved the part.

Mr. H. J. Collar was the best of the men At the opening he showed signs of nervousness and was often nervous when making a restart, but when he warmed up and got into the really exciting parts he recovered self-possession and was very successful. The part suited him very well and he did not disgrace it. Mr. R. C. Johnson, Mr. E. R. Morrison and Mr. A. P. Stoner filled minor parts. It is a pity Mr. Morrison had not more to do. He is a fine actor and he impresses one even in the trifling part of a footman. One would like to see more of him in local plays.

A feature of the play was the manner in which it was put on and the ladies all were splendidly dressed. It remains but to say that there was a report that the A. D. C. contemplated playing "All-of-a-Sudden Peggy" but for some reason dropped the project. It was a terrible mistake, for with their strong membership probably they could have given a performance which none would have questioned.

MOULE'S MEN

Tributes to Retiring Headmaster of the Anglo-Chinese School

A feature of the proceedings at the Anglo-Chinese School last Friday, when the annual prize distribution took place, was that the popular headmaster, Mr. W. A. H. Moule, officially said good-bye to the school in view of his approaching retirement after 34 years' service. The Rt. Rev. Dr. J. H. Malony was in the chair, supported by the Trustees, Messrs. L. J. Cubitt and J. H. Teesdale, Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Dean Symons, Archdeacon Moule, the Rev. F. L. Hawks Pott, and Mr. G. S. Foster-Kemp (Headmaster of the Public School for Chinese).

During an interval in the proceedings, Mr. Moule was the recipient of several handsome gifts. The old boys of the school presented him with a purse containing $450, and the school and members of the Bible Class sent up a small deputation loaded with presents, these including a handsome mounted screen, and some beautifully designed panels done in silk, their spokesman paying a handsome tribute to the work and influence of the retiring Headmaster.

On behalf of the Trustees, Mr. L. J. Cubitt presented Mr. Moule with a handsome silver salver, bearing the signatures of the donors. He spoke in high praise of Mr. Moule's conduct of the school during his long term of service, and of the excellent results shown, saying that after many early embarrassments, when the present system was begun and Mr. Moule took charge there had never been an anxious moment, and the school was now in a properous way.

A MASTER HEADMASTER.

Bishop Molony, in his appreciation of Mr. Moule, said that the traditions he had established would live beyond him. He had been headmaster of the school for 34 years, a life's work. He found it a broken down institution, started it with a dozen boys, and now he was leaving it a flourishing school with 200 boys. He had had probably about 2,700 pass through his hands, and they were known in most of the old business houses of Shanghai as "Moule's Boys." Mr. Moule had just gone on "doing his bit." That seemed to be the way with the Moules. They all had what an old China hand had called "stickatability." They stuck to their jobs. Mr. Moule's father and uncle, both so well known here, stuck at it, each for about 50 years. His brothers and cousins were doing the same, and they were teaching China by precept as well as example that what the country wants is men. The Bishop went on to say that Mr. Moule had proved himself to be a master headmaster; and when he looked back on Shanghai in the years to come he might fairly think that he had made more than 2,000 men as well as the 11,000 runs at cricket, and that his 15 centuries were only child's play compared with the fine men he had produced in this character factory (applause).

Archdeacon Moule, in a short Chinese speech, referred to his father's interest in the work of the School, and his love for China, and to the work of himself in Ningpo and his brother in Shanghai side by side through many years. The name of the School had remained unchanged through its existence and gained an established reputation. It was, and he hoped it would remain under its new Principal, Mr. G. F. C. Newsam, a British Chinese School. He believed in both those races, and that British and Chinese, working in union, could do a real and lasting work for good.

Mr. Moule, in brief acknowlegement and thanks, expressed on behalf of Mrs. Moule and himself their deep appeciation of the various gifts, and their personal hope in the future welfare of the school and all who pass through it. Mr. Moule also gave a full and very interesting account of the school's history, going back to the early days of the Settlement, and with regard to its future, expressed the hope that the British Chamber of Commerce would not forget the appeal made by Mr Wilkinson that the school be not overlooked when the time comes for distribution of the Boxer indemnity. He expressed his thanks to the Trustees for their help and sympathy in all matters connected with the school, and particularly to Mr. Cubitt, who has been honorary secretary and treasurer for 16 years.

In proposing a vote of thanks to the Chairman, Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, pointing out that the school's title was "C.M.S." Anglo-Chinese school, said that whilst no doubt they had had the prayers of the Church Missionary Society for many years, they had had no help. He trusted the Society would be reminded that the School bore its name, and would realize that a subscription to the funds would make the lot of the masters easier than it was. The Trustees would have done more for Mr. and Mrs. Moule if they could have done, but they had to remember they were Trustees. Mr. Wilkinson hoped that when Mr. and Mrs. Moule arrived Home, the Church Missionary Society would pay in something more than good wishes the debt which they owed to them (applause).

"VICTORY OVER BLINDNESS"

St. Dunstan's Great Achievement: Where Hopelessness is Turned to Capability

"Victory over Blindness." This phrase, St. Dunstan's brave motto, must have been uppermost in the minds of all who listened to Mr. W. Evelyn Cowen, Travelling Commissioner for St. Dunstan's, at the Olympic Theatre on Monday, where an entertainment took place under the auspices of the four Shanghai British National Societies, the "North-China Daily News," the Race Club and the British Women's Association in connexion with the formation of a local committee which will regularly remit contributions to St. Dunstan's.

Mr. Cowen, in the course of his most vivid lecture, amazed his audience by showing how, thanks to the opportunities for proper training afforded at St. Dunstan's, hundreds of men were actually better off in blindness. To see them at work on the film was to believe that they were ordinary working men or clerks with unimpaired vision.

Assisting Mr. Cowen, who is blind, to the footlights, Mr. Sidney Barton, H.M. Consul-General, who presided, said the subject of St. Dunstan's and its great work for blinded soldiers and sailors needed no introduction to any British audience, still less the British community here who for some years past had contributed generously to St. Dunstan's, through various channels, but particularly through the "North-China Daily News" and the Race Club. What was required now was a reminder that the work of St. Dunstan's, although the war was over and the men blinded in the war were now taking their places in various branches of industry thanks to St. Dunstan's—had still got to go on. The reason for that was that not only did St. Dunstan's feel bound to look after the welfare of those already under its care. In addition to the thousands of men blinded in the war, there were now a considerable number of those whose eyesight was only injured during the war and who were now being overtaken by total bindness. This class were entitled to the same care as the others, and it was to enable it to carry on these two objects that St. Dunstan's was now making an appeal for further support from British communities throughout the world.

$3,000 SUBSCRIBED THIS WEEK.

The British Consul-General explained that it had been decided that Shanghai Britons should form a permanent committee which would undertake once every year to remember St. Dunstan's. Through the co-operation of the four national British societies here, the "North-China Daily News", the Race Club, and the British Women's Association it had been found possible to organize a committee to take charge of the matter.

Amidst cheers, Mr. Barton made the announcement that thanks to the activities of the committee and the generosity of a number of local firms no expenses had been incurred in holding the lecture and a sum exceeding $3,000 had been collected for St. Dunstan's.

Mr. Cowen, after thanking Shanghai for its former generous contributions, said that in addition to the war-blind who lost their sight in action, 30,865 men were discharged from the Services with damaged vision. Of this class St. Dunstan's was receiving men into its care at the rate of 120 per year. Many of them had since become completely blind. Putting this number at 10 per cent., it meant that a large number of men were still entitled to receive help from St. Dunstan's, in accordance with the late Sir Arthur Pearson's pledge. "No man," he said, "who should lose his sight in the war or as the direct result of the war should lack training and the common necessities of life." The latter class were entitled to just as much consideration as those blinded on the battle field.

"We confess to being very proud of St. Dunstan's," the speaker went on. It was a place where helplessness was turned to capability and courage in face of overwhelming difficulties. The heroism of their blinded soldiers, combined with the opportunities provided by St. Dunstan's enabled them successfully to fight the battle with darkness.

BLINDNESS NOT A CALAMITY.

Mr. Cowen astonished his audience in telling of the amazing proficiency of the blind and semi-blind at St. Dunstan's at various handicrafts and trades, and also in professional work. In many cases blindness, he said, was not a calamity but actually an opportunity. He recalled that one blinded soldier, formerly a booking clerk on the South African Railways, was now a barrister practising at the Supreme Court, Capetown. On arriving at St. Dunstan's this man showed more than average ability. He matriculated and finally went up to Cambridge, after which he was called to the bar.

He was only one of many. They had five or six barristers who were practising in various parts of the world.

There seemed to be little or no limit to the possibilities before a thoroughly well trained blind man in life. It was a truism to say that they simply had no blind men, but only semi-blind men. The blind were able to acquire a power of vision which could be very highly developed by intelligent effort.

BLIND MASSEURS.

Blind masseurs were not only as good, but better than those who could see. A very difficult examination had to be passed by all St. Dunstan's blind masseurs and they had yet to register their first failure. They were fortunate in having in Shanghai one of the best of them, Mr. A. A. Biggs. (Applause). He was third out of 300 in a masseurs' examination at St. Dunstan's and his success here was sufficient recommendation for the instruction he had received.

Passing to St. Dunstan's pressing need for support, Mr. Cowen said £100,000 a year was required for the care and after care of the blind. In spite of the most rigid economy the deficit last year was £48,000. Thus it was imperative to appeal once more to Britions all over the world.

"Shanghai has been most generous. I should feel I had not done my duty if I failed to express our deepest gratitude to Shanghai which, I believe, has confributed £23,000 to St. Dunstan's. This community holds the honoured position of having sent in more money than any other outside the United Kingdom." (Cheers).

The St. Dunstan's film was then shown. It bore amazing testimony to everything Mr. Cowen had said regarding the training of our blinded war heroes, depicting them as expert typists, basket-makers, gardeners, bootmakers, carpenters, and exercising their powers in a number of other useful activities. The Duke of York was seen at their annual athletic meeting at Regent's Park.

Mr. Biggs was another speaker and gave a graphic description of his own experiences at St. Dunstan's. Excellent films were also shown by the B.-A. T., which has most liberally supported the cause.

CIGARETTE TAX IN KIANGSU

Absolute Refusal of Chinese Merchants to Submit to Tax: Collection Now Postponed

There appear to be possibilities of the Kiangsu Provincial authorities rescinding their order for the imposition of a special tax of 25 per cent. on buyers of cigars and cigarettes in Chinese territory. An official letter has been received in which permission has been granted by Mr. Han Kuo-chun, Civil Governor of the province, for the postponement of collection until after the Chinese New Year holidays.

A report appeared in the "North-China Daily News" several days ago showing that, as the result of the proposed imposition of this tax, local merchants had refused to sell these two commodities, to show that they protested against and opposed the tax and were not going to accept it lying down. Upon receipt of the letter mentioned above, circulars were issued by the Cigarette Merchants' Guild urging members to resume sale of cigars and cigarettes until further notice. At a meeting on Saturday afternoon, it was decided to hold a mass meeting in the Ningpo Residents' Association this afternoon to discuss the situation and to formulate plans for passive resistance until the order for the imposition of the tax is withdrawn and cancelled.

The official letter mentioned is confirmed by a letter which had been addressed by the British-American Tobacco Co. to the Cigarette Merchants' Guild, in which it is stated that a letter had been received from the British Consul-General at Nanking, Mr. Pratt, through the Shanghai Consulate-General, reporting that the Civil Governor had assured him that the tax was not being imposed either in Shanghai or in any other section of the province, and that the administrative offices throughout the province had been notified to this effect.

Strong Speech at Mass Meeting

The imposition of the special tax of 25 per cent. on buyers of cigars and cigarettes in Chinese territory continues to attract much attention and excitement, with the result that a mass meeting was held on Monday in the Ningpo Residents' Association, Thibet Road.

The Chairman explained the reason for the merchants' opposition and said that, while all countries had the right and power to levy takes of their own this case was entirely illegal. "Other countries have their taxes on tobacco and levy much more than the 20 per cent. asked for in this case. It is not a case of opposing the 20 per cent., as many people think, but in our case merchants in the Settlement do not have to suffer while their colleagues in Chinese territory do. Such being the case, we would be forced to close our shops if we accepted the order.

"It is said that the money is to be used for educational purposes, but have we any guarantee to show that such money will not be used by other parties for other purposes.

"Officials in other parts of the country have tried to enforce the tax without success—in fact strikes have resulted. Thus it will be seen that the peace and safety of the place is at stake if the tax is enforced.

"We demand therefore that it shall be cancelled, and cancelled at once, as we will fight the matter out to a finish."

The shopkeepers' numbering over 600, present, elected four delegates to meet the directors of the Chinese General and City Chambers of Commerce to discuss the matter and the latter have consented to telegraph to the Civil Governor urging him to postpone collection of the tax until after the Chinese New Year.

TAX NOT POSTPONED.

The Ningpo, Shaohsing and Taichow gentry met on Sunday afternoon and decided to telegraph to Gen Chang notifying him that they oppose the tax and demand that it shall be rescinded forthwith.

In a notice issued on Monday, the Bureau for the Collection of the Tax in Paoshan and Shanghai deny that the Civil Governor had agreed to postpone collection of the tax temporarily and state that their instructions are the strict imposition and enforcement of the tax. They say that as the matter has been passed by the Provincial Assembly and that the funds derived are for educational purposes it is impossible for them to disobey orders.

CIGARETTES NOT FOR SALE.

The special tax on cigars and cigarettes has not been cancelled and merchants in Chinese territory who deal in these commodities continued on Wednesday in their refusal to sell them until the order for the imposition of the tax is withdrawn.

A circular has been sent by the Tobacco Dealers' Guild to its members urging them not to be alarmed or close their stores as such an action would attract loafers and other undesirables and trouble would be caused.

No reply has as yet been received from the Civil Governor of Kiangsu by the two local Chinese Chambers of Commerce in connexion with their request that the collection of the tax be postponed until after the Chinese New Year holidays when the financial market is easier.

In their reply to the British-American Tobacco the Guild state:—"You inform us that your consul has received an assurance from the Civil Governor that the tax will not be collected until a settlement is reached, and that the Shanghai and Paoshan Bureaux for the collection of the tax have been instructed to postpone collection . . . but, being very cautious, we are compelled to state that we are unable to resume business until an official notification is published stating that the tax has been rescinded. Meanwhile, you should note that the local Bureaux have issued a notice stating that the Civil Governor did not admit what were declared to be rumours. Hence we ask you to let us have an immediate reply in order to satisfy our suspicions."

The marriage has been arranged between Lt.-Cdr. Aubrey Charles Thursfield, R.N., H. M. S. Teal (upper Yangtze), fourth son of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Thursfield, of Lea House, Kidderminster, and Catherine Frances Shelley, only daughter of Major H. Fairfax B. Archer and Mrs. Archer, of Linnet House, Bury St. Edmunds.

Mr. Au Yang, department chief of the Chinese Government Bureau of Economic Information, gave a dinner on Monday at Kung Teh Ling, the vegetarian restaurant, in honour of Dr. Chen Chin-tao, ex-Minister of Finance and former acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, who is here on a visit. Among the guests were Mr. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, Mr. William Daniel, Consul, and Mr. G. H. Boissevain, Vice-Consul for the Netherlands, Mr. C. C. Nieh, Mr. L. K. Kentwell and a number of prominent Chinese merchants.

EXCELLENT START MADE BY CHINA SOCIETY OF SCIENCE AND ARTS

How China Produces More Boys than Girls: Bandits and the Increase of Secret Societies: The Demand for a Good Chinese Government

On Saturday afternoon at 445 Avenue Joffre, where the China Society of Science and Arts held its inaugural meeting as the guests of Messrs. Arthur and Theodore Sopher, a large and representative audience listened to the Presidential address by Mr. Arthur de C. Sowerby, a fascinating lecture by Dr. F. Oppenheim on "Birth and Death Ratios in China," and an enlightening discussion by Mr. G. E. Sokolsky upon the subject of "Secret Societies in China." The names of all attending were taken by Miss Clarice S. Moise, the popular manger of the China Journal of Science and Art, who is acting as treasurer of the Society, and by Mr. Verne Dyson, the active secretary of the Society.

The meeting is the culmination of the efforts of Mr. Sowerby, and those associated with him, to rouse popular interest in matters of an intellectual nature connected with China, and the enthusiastic gathering was ample proof that the Society and Journal are now thoroughly established institutions filling a long felt want.

Mr. Sowerby touched upon "Science" as it existed in China, referring to Dr. Chatley's paper in the last number of the R. A. S. Journal. He then discussed the situation of Science in China today, mentioning the various institutions where research work is being done or instruction in science given, showing the marked progress in this direction during the last decade.

MORE CHINESE BOYS THAN GIRLS.

After an adjournment for tea, Dr. Oppenheim held the audience spellbound for nearly an hour while he produced from sets of figures and mathematical formulæ truly startling facts. It seems [illegible] males and females of the human population in China shows a greater of males than in any other country in the world for which figures are available. An excess of boys over girls at birth occurs in all European countries but owing to the greater mortality amongst boys this excess tends to decrease as maturity is reached. In China the reverse takes place, the excess of males over females (i.e. about 115 boys to 100 girls) increases till at the age of 30 the proportion is about 125 males to 100 females. The greater mortality amongst girls in China is believed to be due to their lower value in the eyes of their parents and the consequent neglect they endure.

Statistics gathered in Shanghai (by Dr. Oppenheim), in Peking (by Dr. Gray and Dr. Lennox independently), and Singapore (by the Government), all show that the ratio of males to females amongst the Chinese at birth is about 115 to 100—a most interesting fact to biologists and ethnologists. Dr. Oppenheim pointed out the importance of such investigation and appealed to medical institutions and this Society for help. The president then announced that Dr. F. Reiss had undertaken to form a Medico-Biological Section of the Society, not in rivalry or in opposition to the Medical Missionary Association, but in co-operation, to carry out investigations at present not undertaken by the older association. All medical men and biologists in China were cordially invited to join this section.

SPREAD OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

Mr. Sokolsky, who spoke next, said that in investigating the cause of the extraordinary political unrest of China he was brought into touch with members of an important secret society, from whom he learned that a large part of the bandit trouble was the result of secret societies whose avowed aims are to secure for China a good, sound Chinese Government and to curtail by every means possible the corrupt and oppressive activities of the present military rulers of the country. Bandits holding these aims were looked upon as "good bandits" and the others as "bad." The recent famous bandit case was the work of "good bandits" to get foreign pressure brought to bear upon the Peking Government in order to have certain officials removed.

Votes of thanks were proposed to the lecturers, the hosts and the chairman and passed amidst general acclamation, after which the meeting adjourned till the last Saturday in February (February 23), the programme to be announced later. All subscribers to the China Journal of Science and Arts" may become members of the Society without any additional fee by sending in their names to the office of the Journal, 102 Ben Bldg., 25 Avenue Edward VII, or to Mr. Verne Dyson (Far Eastern Review, 16 Junkoo Road), the Hon. Secretary of the Society.

THE ELLIS KADOORIE SCHOOL

Annual Speech Day: Sir Skinner Turner's Good Advice to Young Chinese

There was a large gathering of pupils and friends at the twelfth annual speech day and prize distribution of the Ellis Kadoorie Public School for Chinese, in the handsome new school hall last Friday afternoon. Mr. Stirling Fessenden, Chairman of the Municipal Council, presided, supported by Sir Skinner Turner, Lady Turner, Dr. D. MacGillivray, several members of the Municipal Council and the Education Committee and Mr. R. G. Dowie, the Head Master.

Mr. Fessenden, in a brief speech, referred to his own experiences as a lecturer in a law school and, commenting on the work done at the school, said he was convinced the boys there would in after life be a credit to the school, the Council and their instructors.

The Head Master, in the course of his report, stated:—

We have, during the year, had a remarkable run of success. In sport we won both the inter-school tennis and football tournaments, but had to acknowledge the superiority of the Public School for Chinese in the Chairman's Shield Competition. In our examinations we had two wonderful years. Last year we had 16 distinctions out of 40 awarded Shanghai schools by Hongkong University; and this year we had 13 out of 24, records which we think so good that attention should be drawn to them. This year we were the only Shanghai school to have a distinction awarded in drawing, and Mr. Millington deserves our very hearty congratulations. The success in Mechanics, too, during the past two years is remarkable and Mr. Kay also is due congratulations. The boys in Form VI have a wonderful record. As Juniors they brought the school 16 distinctions and as Seniors five, a total of 21.

SIR SKINNER TURNER'S ADVICE.

Sir Skinner Turner said that he heartily congratulated the few boys who were to receive prizes. He could sympathize with the many who would not receive any prizes—he supposed they were the larger number—because when he was at school he was nearly always in the same category, and upon these boys he would impress the value of the old saying, "If at first you don't succeed, try, and try, and try again." If they did that, sooner or later the big prizes in life would come to them. The keynote in the Head Master's report was "success." Success in any life was a very right and proper ambition for any one. They would go a long way in escaping failure if in everything they did they would remember one great maxim—"Be fit." They could not play their games and they could not do their scouting unless they were fit in body. They could not do their work in school or in their calling in after life unless they were fit in mind. Fitness of mind and body, coupled together and working together, would lead to that success in life which they would deserve by their efforts to get it.

"China, like every other country," concluded Sir Skinner Turner, "is looking for its future towards its youth, towards the part you boys are going to play in the development of this great and wonderful country. Here in school you are laying a sure foundation of fitness of mind and body to enable you in the larger world outside to play your part and to build up a proper structure and assist your country as well as yourselves."

Lady Turner presented prizes and certificates to the successful boys and an interesting programme of recitations was contributed by several of the boys. The visitors were greatly interested in an exhibition of work done by the boys, all of it being of a particularly high standard.

The French Minister has consented to order the suppression of all stock and produce exchanges in the French Concession at Shanghai, reports the "Eastern Times."

METHOD OF DRAWING I. S. S. PRIZES

An Explanation of the Process to Satisfy a Correspondent

Yet another correspondent writes with questions regarding the International Savings Society and its methods of drawing. It is understandable, perhaps, that amongst the many thousands of bondholders there should be some who have different notions to those of the directors with regard to the disbursement of premiums, though it should be impressed once again that the number of letters of approval received far outnumber those containing criticism. The letter of our latest correspondent, however, is rather more difficult to understand, for he asks for "some insight into the method of drawing as now practised." The I.S.S. encourages the attendance of bondholders at the monthly drawings, and our correspondent undoubtedly would gain better information if he attended personally than we can give him in print. Yet the effort will be made.

The monthly drawings take plaie on the 15th of every month, or on the succeeding day if the 15th is a Sunday or public holiday. The drawings are held in the large upper hall of the Society's offices, 7 Avenue Edward VII, a place capable of accommodating several hundred persons and which on such occasions invariably is filled with bond holders, Chinese being in the majority. The drawing is done by officers of the Society, assisted by some of the bondholders selected at random from amongst those present. In addition, there always is present, not an employee, but one of the partners of Messrs Seth, Mancell & McLure, the Society's auditors, to watch over and personally vouch for the correctness and straightforwardness of the drawing.

THE MECHANICAL EQUIPMENT.

For each bond issued there is a small wooden ball bearing a corresponding number in plain figures. These balls are arranged in their proper numerical sequence in trays, this task occupying four clerks for 20 days in every month. Before the numbered balls are put into the drawing drum any bondholder may examine the trays to satisfy himself that his number is there, and many people do take this precaution every month. It is quite possible the directors even might allow a bondholder here and there to put his own number into the drum, though obviously they could not wait for every one to do it. The trays are emptied, in full sight of the assembled bondholders, into an enormous brass drum about four feet in diameter. Inside this are five large teeth which work backwards and forwards when the drum is revolved, so that the numbers are thoroughly mixed. When all is ready a small tap on the drum is twitched, one ball only rolls out, well clear of the operator's hand, falls into a brass channel about 6 ft. long, runs down this and drops into a deep glass bowl, where it is examined and checked.

Into a smaller drum are placed similar balls on which are stamped the amounts of the reimbursements. Thus, to take last month's drawing as an example, there was one ball representing $20,780: 20, $2,000 each: 20, $300 each: 20, $200 each: 20, $100 each: one cash, $1,560, $250, $150, $68, and 4,156, $12 each. The process of drawing is exactly the same as for the racing sweepstakes. From the big drum a bond number is drawn, then a reimbursement ball from the other drum and the two go together. Thus the prizes come out in any order and the big prizes may be the first, the last, or anywhere in between. It is a recognized and old-established method and is carried out throughout in full sight of the audience.

According to the Chinese press the projected Peking Air Service will be as follows: From Shanghai, every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday; From Peking, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

LONDON BULLION

Samuel Montagu & Co.'s Report

The following report, dated London, December 19, has been issued by Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co.:—

Gold—The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 12th instant was £126,196,335, as compared with £126,044,760 on the previous Wednesday.

India and the Continent have taken a fair proportion of the substantial supplies of gold which came on offer this week.

The United Kingdom imports and exports of gold during the month of November, 1923, were as follows:—

	Imports.	Exports.
Switzerland	—	96,100
Sweden	2,000	—
Netherlands	9,395	215,544
Belgium	—	1,480
France	—	30,596
Egypt	—	250,000
West Africa	101,452	—
United States	1,580	8,410,738
Java and other Dutch Indian Seas	—	10,000
Possessions in the Various S. American Countries	471	—
Rhodesia	221,790	—
Transvaal	2,754,327	—
British India	—	151,938
Straits Settlements	—	4,130
Other Countries	237	47,098
Total	£3,091,252	£9,197,675

According to figures issued by the Belgian Ministry of Colonies, the production of gold in the Congo has risen to 3,500 kilogrammes. In 1921 the production was only 2,100 kilogrammes.

SILVER.

On the whole the market has been quiet during the week. The Continent has been a moderate seller and America has been disposed to let out some supplies at the rising rates. Yesterday the quotation for cash—33 11/16d. was the highest fixed since November 7, 1922. The amount of speculative business open in this market on Indian and China account has been considerably reduced of late. As supplies are not yet plentiful, bear covering orders—even though they may be far from large—are bound to influence prices more than usual.

The latest United Kingdom silver coins have a more pleasing aspect than those to which we have grown accustomed, though with some reluctance. The use of nickel for alloying the silver to 500/1,000 fine has been abandoned for that of copper, and the exterior of the pieces has been blanched to a greater degree. The films of pure silver thus left upon the surface must eventually be removed by wear. We shall then be able to compare the appearance of the new copper with that of the old nickel compound, the greenish tinge of which failed to meet popular approval.

The following extract from a report by the "Times" correspondent from Peking throws interesting light upon the conditions in that country:—

"It had been generally expected that the widespread confusion throughout China would result in a serious check to foreign trade . . . . The Customs figures for the half-year, however, have falsified these forebodings and given proof of the extraordinary vitality of trade in China. The Customs revenue is ahead of all previous records, and even if a generous allowance be made for the increase consequent upon the application of the effective 5 per cent tariff for part of the period, there is a net gain of $2,000,000 (£225,000) compared with the "record" figures for the corresponding period last year. . . . The explanation is simple enough. It is that the Chinese are fast awaking to the utility of foreign manufactured goods, that their standard of living is steadily rising, and that the demand for foreign articles within the zones of the Treaty Ports alone is sufficient to maintain and increase foreign imports. In huge areas in the interior trade and enterprise are being stifled to extinction by the chaotic conditions prevailing, but the economic development of littoral and Riverine regions continues unabated. It is hardly affected by the political chaos and there seems to be no limit to its possibilities."

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Feb 2.

This week practically all departments of the local market have been inactive as far as actual business is concerned, attention being devoted to the annual settlement consequent upon the New Year. This seems to be proceeding smoothly, but naturally while dealers and merchants are solely occupied with finance no fresh business is being considered.

The yarn market closes stronger, and developments in local prices are anticipated following the strike in the Bombay mills.

Interest is being shown in exports by consuming countries, but in several cases local values are too high to permit of firms operating.

PIECE GOODS.

Certain deliveries of auction cargo have been taking place during the week, but apart from this the interest in the market has been confined altogether to the Chinese New Year settlement. From all accounts this is going through without any hitch, for it is reckoned that between 70 and 80 per cent. of the Chinese dealers have covered expenses during the past 12 months and made certain profits. The remainder have been able to carry on their business without any grave difficulty. Some of the old established firms doing business on sound, conservative lines and who decline to gamble in exchange have not done quite so well as the other class who combine a speculation in piece goods with exchange. The latter have generally been able to get a better rate with the banks for the cost of their purchases than those who fixed a large proportion of their commitments at 3/1d., and so in this case the speculative element has scored.

The only other point of interest in the piece goods market to call attention to is the fact that the British Chamber of Commerce statistics of stocks as on December 31 have not yet made their appearance. This is not the fault of the officials of the Chamber but is due solely to the dilatoriness of certain firms who have neglected or been late in sending in their returns. The importance of these statistics as a guide to the position of the market and to future prices is apparently not fully realized by these firms, but it may be pointed out that they are greatly valued by the majority concerned in the piece goods business.

COTTON AND YARN.

While business in local cotton and yarn has come to a halt this week, the future is being looked forward to with interest. The length of the holidays which the local mills propose to take over the China New Year is an irregular quantity, varying from one week to a month, and it is pointed out that this curtailment of production when coupled with a shortage of Indian yarn owing to the mill strike in Bombay, may appreciably affect the situation in two ways In the first place yarn stocks are expected to reach a very much lower lovel than hitherto and higher prices would naturally be the outcome, while the absence of demand for Indian raw cotton by the Bombay mills would lead to a cheaper price of the staple. Too much stress, however, cannot be placed upon this aspect of the case, as a private advice received in Shanghai suggests that the Bombay strike will not be of long duration.

Chinese Cotton—The spot market for Chinese cotton has closed, and on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange the last trading day was January 30. Quotations then were:—February 47.05; March 47; April 46.95; May 46.95; June 46.95. Compared with the previous week there was a drop of about 35 points.

Yarn—The last yarn quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange were those of January 30, since when no transactions have taken place. The market will reopen on February 9. The last quotations were:—February 180; March 181.10; April 181.20; May 181.30; June 180.60. In comparision with the previous week these figures show a rise of from 20 to 24 points.

PRODUCE.

Sesamum Seed—It is reported that business has been done locally at prices 1 or 2 mace per picul higher than the previous week. Home market prices have also advanced but are still well under the parity of local values.

Groundnuts—Owing to heavy purchases made during the past week the Tsingtao market is firmer. Home buyers, however, have not yet come into line with the higher C. I. F. prices, although there is no evidence of any slackening in demand, America is also again inquiring for graded nuts, and in consequence there appears little likelihood of any local decline in the near future.

Tobacco—The market is much stronger on account of the continued scarcity of cargo available for export.

Peanuts—Interest in the new season's supplies is being shown both in Europe and America, and parcels arriving here have been absorbed more readily.

Wool—No business is possible on account of lack of supplies from the interior.

WHOLESALE PRICES IN SHANGHAI

Bureau of Markets' Index Number

The Treasury Department's Bureau of Markets in publishing the wholesale price index number for January, states:—

The total index number for this month is 156.7, being 0.5 per cent, lower than the previous month, while it rises 2.6 per cent. above the corresponding month of last year. Among the five principal groups only metals ascend a little higher than before, whereas textiles remain at a standstill and the other three groups decrease approximately from 0.5 per cent. to 1.45 per cent.

Our index number has hitherto been based upon the market prices on the last Wednesday of every month. Since the last Wednesday of this month falls on the 30th and it is near to the end of China year, nearly every line of business stops wholesale dealings then. Thus in the present index number we use the prices on the fourth Wednesday, that is, the 23rd. as the base.

Our monthly figures since January, 1923, are given below:

USSURI RAILWAY DEVELOPMENT

Opening of a Traffic Office in Shanghai: Facilities for Transport of Goods

The directors of the Ussuri Railway are making a determined effort to extend its operations and their latest move is the establishment of a traffic office in Shanghai, at 3 Ezra Road, in charge of Mr. P. Sery-Siryk. The Russian railways are all Government-owned, but they work independently and in some cases even sections of them also are independent, as with the Ussuri Railway, which is a part of the great Siberian Railway, the other sections of which are the Siberian and Amur lines. During the civil war all the railways, like every other service in Russia, were hopelessly disorganized and even when travel was re-established it was very dangerous. Now, however, conditions along the railways have become more peaceable and in Shanghai it is known at least that the Siberian Railway is operating very nearly up to the pre-war standard.

In the course of a conversation on Monday, Mr. Sery Siryk assured a representative of the "North-China Daily News" that perfect order has been established all along the railway lines and that very considerable quantities of merchandise are being transported over the routes used before the war. Every day, he said, 300 fully laden freight cars pass through Vladivostok and the railway is so well equipped with rolling stock that goods are not delayed even for a day, whilst freight cars are run from Vladivostok to Harbin in four or five days at the outside. The Government offers a guarantee by the Far Eastern Bank for the safety of goods carried on the railway. Only goods going to the interior of Russia require licences, which can be secured in Shanghai. Freight going through to other countries does not have to be licensed. He pointed out that the Ussuri Railway is particularly convenient for many business houses sending goods to Continental countries, as it saves a great deal of time in transport and the freight rates are much lower than those charged by shipping companies.

During 1922, the exports through Vladivostok did not exceed 29,769,903 poods (one pood equals 36 lb.), whilst for the first nine months of last year the figures were 30,229,518 poods. These figures are offered as evidence that many business houses appreciate the convenience of the railway route and are satisfied as to its reliability. The following points were emphasized by Mr. Sery-Siryk:—

1.—Customs examination of goods may be executed at Harbin.

2.—Customs duty is 33⅓ per cent. less than that paid on the same goods through Dairen.

3.—There is no transhipment of goods between Vladivostok and Harbin.

4.—The management of the Ussuri Railway, having the development of industry, commerce and trade as their main purpose, do their utmost to restore efficiency in operating the most convenient route for Manchurian exports and imports.

5.—The railway freight may be paid at the stations of destination to the Shanghai local offices.

6.—The Ussuri Railway is the shortest route; in consequence of this the freight is cheap.

7.—Shifting works at Vladivostok have been reorganized, and the supplementary charges are reduced.

8.—There is no necessity to have government licences for the transport of goods.

9.—The Ussuri Railway Commercial Agency at Vladivostok undertakes all formalities concerning loading, unloading and transhipment of goods at moderate rates.

10.—There are all conveniences for importing goods into Europe through Russia, or exporting European goods via Russia.

11.—If necessary, a Bank guarantee can be procured.

EX-GUNNERS' ROLL OF SHANGHAI

Through the courtesy of the Stewards of the Shanghai Race Club, the annual dinner was held in the dining room of the Guests' Stand on Friday evening, January 25. Brigadier-General Macnaghten, C.M.G., D.S.O., the President, was in the chair and 45 members of the Roll were present. The dinner itself was a great success, and old friendships were renewed and new ones made. The King's health was drunk with full musical honours followed by the impressive Silent Toast to the memory of those who gave everything in the War. The President then made a speech on "The Royal Regiment," which was greatly appreciated by all. With glasses upraised and everyone at attention, the Royal Regiment's march was played, after which the toast was drunk with enthusiasm.

During dinner the old songs were revived and later everyone drew in their chairs and sang them all again to the accompaniment of an excellent small orchestra. The dinner was voted a huge success and everyone thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

CRUISE OF THE YAWL SHANGHAI

Arrival at St. Helena: Interest in the Island: The Voyage Prolonged

Mr. H. E. Middleton, hon. secretary of the Shanghai Yacht Club, has received a further account of the cruise of the auxiliary yawl Shanghai, which left here nearly a year ago on a trip to Denmark. A letter received from Mr. E. Haugeland, one of the crew, dated St. Helena, November 23, 1923, describes another stage of the voyage, and says, in part:—

"Arrived here at St. Helena on October 17, after having been a fortnight out from Capetown, where we stayed nearly a month, during which we were received with the greatest hospitality and kindness, especially from the Royal Cape Yacht Club. A Danish journalist, Mr. Redsted, has joined us in Capetown, so the crew now consists of four members, and this I consider to be the best number for a yacht of our size. It is our intention to leave here on the 26th instant (November, 1923) for Sierra Leone, on the west coast of Africa, and thence to the Canary Islands.

"I think this is one of the most interesting and historic places we have visited yet, and, of course, we took the opportunity to visit Longwood, where are situated Napoleon's tomb and house. A French officer, who is residing on the estate as a guardian, presented to us a small piece of tapestry from Napoleon's sitting room.

"St. Helena appears to be very bare and desolate when being approached from the sea, but in the middle of the island, where palm trees and firs are growing together, the beautiful valleys, with whitewashed houses, are very charming.

"We have decided to prolong our stay in the Canary Islands to avoid the worst winter months of the North Atlantic, so I do not think we shall arrive in Denmark before April or May."

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

English and Mathematics Combined

Middle Schools to-day face a perplexing situation in adjusting the legitimate demands of students for more English with the actions of Educational Associations tending to lessen the amount of English taught. The mastery of English is the open door to world citizenship, and to the literature, the science and the news of the world. It is quite vital to business success in China. The question is to learn to handle it well in the time allotted.

Professor H. B. Graybill, widely known as the author of "Mastery of English," agrees with leading educators that, apart from elementary study, this situation can best be met by teaching other subjects in English, especially subjects that will be useful to students upon entering careers after graduation. With Professor Lo King Tuen, of Canton Christian College, Mr. Graybill has just finished a Middle School Arithmetic which combines study in English and applied Mathematics to meet this widely felt need.

In this "Practical Arithmetic" this "Practical Arithmetic" contains the vocabulary used in shopping, travel, all sorts of business, the banking and postal services, newspapers and [illegible]. It also gives the English pronunciation of Higher Mathematical and Scientific terms. The first part of the book is as much a study and drill in English as it is an Arithmetic.

As a mathematics the Lo Graybill "Practical Arithmetic" is unique, the first elaborate, original arithmetic written for China. It meets the requirements of commercial schools, and of middle schools preparing both for college and for immediate entry into business. In addition to the usual arithmetical processes its arithmetical foundation in Algebra and Geometry gives an excellent basis for work in college. Short cuts in calculation of great practical value are incorporated as well as the most complete and convenient series yet published of tables of Chinese, metric and English measurements with their cross values. This arithmetic introduces the study to the understanding of Exchange and to many other actual problems met with in everyday life in China. It is unique in its inclusion of over 60 very original China-born individual and class projects, a distinct advantage on other texts.

"Practical Arithmetic" is direct and natural in method. The student is helped to build up processes in Mathematics for himself so as best to grasp the basic principles. Arithmetical terms when first used are given with their Chinese equivalent. To secure speed, accuracy and skill, ample drills and exercises are incorporated. The teacher is given a wealth of problems for his selection, all of which will prove of great interest to Chinese.

This book is now ready. Its price is $1.60 Mexican. Principals and teachers who are interested may ensure a sample copy by forwarding [illegible] to Edward Evans & Sons, Limited, Shanghai. (Advertisement)

Baby's peaceful sleep

Peaceful sleep at the right time is as necessary to Baby as the right kind and quantity of food. If he does not sleep, or is restless in sleep, he is unwell, and a frequent cause of Baby's ill-health is indigestion.

A suitable form of milk is the only food for a baby up to nine months, and GLAXO is milk in its most nourishing and most digestible form.

Glaxo has only to be mixed with hot, boiled water to provide instantly the required quantity of pure, fresh, unadulterated milk—milk made specially digestible and safe for Baby by the Glaxo Process.

CORRESPONDENCE

DOCTORS AND THE SOCIAL EVIL.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR, The letter to the Municipal Council, signed by the Secretary of the Shanghai Medical Society on the subject of venereal disease is one of much importance, deserving consideration from all points of view, and I would like to discuss it from the view-point of a member of the Moral Welfare League. Of the 11 points, I cordially assent to most and am glad that our doctors have stated them so plainly and convincingly, and I feel sure they will have due weight with the Council and most readers.

I join issue on Nos. 1 and 3, and I will state my reasons. It is said that "nothing is to be gained by the suppression of brothels." The doctors are presumably referring to the venereal disease side of the subject: as regards humane considerations, morality, and even common decency, it must be granted that something is gained. I cannot think it right to leave out entirely the religious and moral elements, any more than it is right to see nothing but these. The correct method of approach is to let all elements have their due bearing, and in so doing it will surely be conceded that much good does result, to the girls themselves physically and morally, and to the public, and to decency and order in general.

Before going further it is in order to query if the doctors had in mind only the few foreign brothels, or the much larger number of Chinese ones; the Vice Commission gave the proportion as forty to one, and it is at once apparent that methods and recommendations which might appear to be feasible with the smaller group, would be entirely impracticable in the larger group. The Vice Commission said that in its deliberations it "made no difference between the foreign brothel and the native brothel; the same conditions should apply to all." It may well be that we are justified in presuming that the doctors took the same stand, and we can consider the matter as a whole, at the same time remembering that from figures given some time ago we may reckon that in this Settlement there are 90 or 100 Chinese prostitutes to one foreign.

It is said to be "a well-known fact that brothel owners move to a new location and start business afresh" after their licences have been withdrawn. If the new location is at Timbuctoo, or the North Pole, or even nearer, it seems to me no argument against our keeping our own Settlement as clean and hygienic as possible. The doctors do not dream of allowing other contagious diseases to remain at large in our midst if they can prevent it, and if venereal disease foci can be removed right out of the Settlement, it is a gain to us; and if our neighbours co-operate, the whole territory will benefit. But if the statement means that the brothel keepers start busisess afresh in this Settlement, it is a serious matter for the police; it is implied that they cannot prevent the starting afresh in defiance of the By-law, or that they will not, or that they are simply unaware of what the doctors say is a "well-known fact" to others?

THE QUESTION OF DISEASE.

The letter uses the argument that "as a direct resultt of the closing of houses, the foci of venereal disease are scattered." That means that if left alone, the foci remain in our midst, a terrible danger; but it is thought better to have them easily accessible, thus inviting temptation and inviting new victims, rather than try to drive them away entirely, or at least to scatter to where they would be hard to find.

Now as regards point three, which states that "It is believed that in the interests of the prevention of venereal disease, well conducted houses of prostitution should be allowed to exist so long as they do not harbour foci of venereal disease." It is further said that houses in which the disease "is known to exist, should be proceeded against by the police." One wonders—and then what? Will they be left in situ, and all the diseased inmates treated, or will the place be closed and the inmates scattered? If the latter, will the inmates be compelled to go to hospitals or dispensaries, or be deported from the Settlement? if deported, how will the results differ from what is objected to now? The Medical Settlement? If deported, how will any given number of prostitutes, always about one third may be assumed to be diseased." That would imply that one-third of the women should be at once proceeded against by the police, according to part 3 of the letter.

Then, who is to certify that v.d. exists in a house? It might not be difficult to find out among a few foreign women, but when attempted among thousands of Chinese, it would be found impracticable, at any rate without compulsory notification. The recent Trevethin Committee's Report says "We think that in the prtsent sttate of public opinion, any system of general compulsory notification of venereal diseases would tend to concealment, and would prove a backward step." This Report, from people highly qualified to speak on the subject, makes no suggestion whatever that houses of prostitution should be allowed to exist in the interest of prevention of disease; it says that "the community should be make to appreciate:—

a. That promiscuous intercourse is the main cause of the prevalence of venereal disease.
b. That there is no absolute preventive except continence, and a single exposure may result in infection.
c. In addition to spread of knowledge, it is necessary that measures should be pursued which will diminish those conditions of life which tend to foster promiscuous intercourse and the spread of disease.

Houses of prostitution will long continue to exist, whether "allowed" or not; but they are not to be excused as existing in the interest of prevention of disease. The "Red light" house is a snare, no matter how well it is conducted, and its patrons go there at their peril, not only of physical disease, but of moral contamination also. Why is this generation, which prides itself on its straightforwardness and calling "a spade a spade" yet so anxious to avoid calling a sin a sin, and ever seeking excuses instead of frankly refusing to countenance it? When Jesus, in His compassion, said to an erring women "neither do I condemn thee" He added "go, and sin no more." The voice of today seem disposed to say "go, and be more hygienic next time, and patronize a well-conducted place," and on no account must the word "sin" be heard! But it is not to the true interest of the individual or the community to be so disingenuous.

AN UGLZ PICTURE.

I wish the doctors who sent the letter would use their imagination and try to visualize what the houses for which they plead really mean, for Chinese at any rate. Possibly hardly one per cent. of the girls have any real choice in the matter: it is not a case of too confiding love such as often leads foreign girls to the life, nor pleasure in sexual excitement, which might make things more bearable. It is sordid commerce of the lowest kind, leading to kidnapping, sale by parents or husbands, and a brutal compulsion to the life, which is often accompanied by beatings and starvings. These are the victims, many of them very young, who are to be sacrificed, and one in three of them doomed to disease—all in the interests of the prevention of venereal disease, we are told. I marvel at any doctor suyscribing to such a doctrine, and I cannot make it square with humane feeling, or morality, and certainly not with Christ's "Golden Rule."

Just a word about street soliciting, which the letter asserts has "increased considerably in Shanghai during the last two years." This may apply to a few foreign women, as it mentions the parks; but it simply is not true about the Chinese—the vastly larger proportion of our local under world. The police statistics show a decrease of charges for this offence, and if the doctors' statement is correct, it implies great laxity on the part of the police. We have no reason to believe there is such laxity. An average of about 30 cases per month is not to be considered indicative of great prevalence of solicitation in a large population like ours. Perhaps the soliciting referred to means men as well as women! A critic at the Moral Welfare League's recent meeting said that young and respectable girls were in greater danger now than they used to be—not from their own sex presumably,—so there are evidently many men the police should give attention to; and this suggests the question of men who are known to "harbour foci of venereal disease"; do the doctors suggest that they too should be proceeded against by the police, or is it only to be a one-sided affair, thus making the whole thing absolutely ineffective as a preventive measure?

Now having shown wherein I differ from the letter sent to the Council, I should like to add that as regards quack remedies and advts., etc., we are in full agreement with the doctors; we are also ready to help all we can to extend all sane methods of treatment of v.d. Our anxiety to put a fence round the top of the cliff in no way lessens our willingness to give aid to those who have fallen over. We especially welcome the encouragement to continue educating the public in these matters by the wise dissemination of information. No one section of us can cope with this whole problem, and doctors, Council, press, and M. W. League can all make some contribution; and as this is done in a frank and mutually tolerant spirit, we may expect to make at least some progress in the effort to benefit the whole community.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—When Mr. I. Mason last year addressed the Secretary of the Municipal Council with a lot of correspondence after the style of the one published in your today's issue, he was finally told that no good can come from prolonging the correspondence on the subject, or words to that effect.

Most of us, I think, are inclined to side with the Council in their decision in this matter for the reason that Mr. Mason invariably bases his argument on a lot of statistics, etc., that can have no bearing in a place like Shanghai, but when he goes so far as to quote various passages from Scripture to support his contentions, I think it is about time that we do not take him seriously in future when he again appears in connexion with the M. W. League's activities.

CHINA'S BANDITS, THE PEOPLE'S DEFIANCE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The man in the street and other ordinary men, should they be classed with Robin Hood and his merry men, would perhaps not very strenuously object, but I, for one, would hate to be dubbed a Chinese bandit, chief or otherwise. Who does not know that he is a lousy creature, merciless, villainous,—a skunk of the most odious.

Sir, when your friends, even, laugh at you, it is time to canvass your mind, and clear away the cob-webs.

Certainly, there is little to choose between any of them:—President, Tuchun or Bandit chief. I am perfectly willing to believe they are all honorific titles in China. But, when we come to the theory that the Chinese people—(which I take to mean: "Pah hsing": literally, "the 100 families," meaning "fellow nationals," respectable and law-abiding)—become bandits as a protest against injustice, the argument is so unconvincing it needs no further refutation.

The idea that banditry is a gesture of the people against the government is quite an attractive one, and may have its adherents, but it has nothing to recommend it except its poetry. It is a pipe-dream, nothing less, nothing more.

Some well-known writers have said that China has always been the same with regard to banditry and piracy. My own experience bears out this assertion. But, and that is a big But, foreigners were not much molested within the memory of the present generation, owing to action taken previously by the Governments concerned. The hydra-headed monster of outlawry in China is hidden and covered up except when an effete government allows it to show its numerous heads, and then, indeed, it is a job for the gods. I refuse to believe that the "pah-hsing" would change to the bandit rabble. They are not that way. Let us not mistake the cause for the effect. Bandits are the tools of the higher-ups, unscrupulous, astute or otherwise. They are not in danger of being so. The riff-raff coolie soldiers do the best they can and are not guilty of anything but ignorance. It is not they, who, after all, get all the kicks and no kudos, who are to be condemned. The undisciplined military is a curse, pure and simple, but the recruits for the armies everywhere in China are taken for the most part from the worst classes, criminals, ne'er-do-weels, exiles and outlaws, who welcome their uniform as a cloak of authority covering their further and greater depredations. For this reason the "Pah-hsing" do not choose the army as a career. It is only the "bad-eggs" who do. The people are not driven to the highway. Those in the highway are there of their own accord, and always have been there. The only difference is that they were hidden and covered up, and now they are not. Those left in the highway clamour to join the army. Their terms invariably are to be enrolled in the forces of corruption and disorder, to get a uniform, so as to be able to plunder and rob "legally."

By all accounts there is very little wrong with the Chinese Code of laws. The fault lies not in the Code, but in the administration thereof.

Burke says "the people have no interest in disorder," but Burke was never in China, or he would have said there are some. Who these people are it is the duty of those in high places to find out, and, finding out, to act without delay and without stint. Are we waiting for another Boxer outbreak?

Shaghai, Jan. 26, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Your Chinese correspondent "K.C.K." invites discussion on the question of China's misfortune.

I venture to suggest that "K.C.K." should endeavour to persuade his fellow-countrymen to petition the League of Nations to appoint a Committee (including, if possible, a representative from U.S.A.) to take over, for a term of years, the task of protecting China from all outer and inner foes. Details might be varied ad infinitum: what is outlined below is merely one possible method of tackling the job. China's "Sovereign Rights" must be satisfactorily safeguarded, and a guarantee given that the Committee will "hand over" and dissolve when it is obvious that "law and order" has been established, and there is a Central Government, accepted by all the provinces, with a reasonable prospect of carrying on properly. Possibly the better plan would be for the return to take place piecemeal, provinces being handed back when "law and order" is genuinely restored: other turbulent provinces still remaining under the control of the League of Nations Committee for the time being.

Chinese self-governing bodies—provincial assemblies, town councils, etc.—should resume their activities immediately, and as soon as practicable take over all local police work (i.e., such work as does not require rifles).

The League of Nations Committee should be in order in making representations or recommendations when they deem it desirable or useful; but, unless specially invited, for this to be the limit to which they can interfere in all such matters as sanitation, riverine improvements (improving rapids, reconstructing dykes, etc.), peculation in finance or corruption in politics.

The League of Nations Committee should adopt Chinese methods as far as possible, so that the Chinese Central Government would more easily "take over" when the time arrives. No doubt at first foreign troops would be required, but as quickly as possible these would be superseded by Chinese under foreign officers: these officers being also replaced by Chinese as it appeared practicable.

It would also be wise of China to allow this League of Nations Committee to take over control of China's finances, handing back as soon as stability is restored (which would be quite soon, if law and order is guaranteed).

The expenses of the work done by the Committee could be met by a special loan to China, negociated by the Committee.

The point of this scheme which should appeal to "K.C.K." and his fellow-countrymen is that it will be on the lines of helpfulness and sympathy: very different from punitive intervention.

To the Editor of the

SIR,—Your to-day's correspondent "S" propounds a scheme almost identical with mine, embodied in an essay I wrote more than a month ago for a local paper. We agree in the principle, and only differ in the details, which are not important. I am sorry I am not at liberty to publish my article, until I can get permission from its present custodian. But I am glad to have this voluntary endorsement, and should like to know how many more share in the same views.

CHINA'S SEARCH FOR PEACE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—If foreigners who shouted themselves hoarse over the Lincheng affair and who believe that we can compel the degradation and punishment of Chinese officials; who are of the opinion that we can force foreign railway guards on China and interfere generally in her internal affairs; who advocate the employment of the mailed fist, gunboats and foreign military intervention for the purpose of restoring order in the country, would have the patience to read Mr. Rodney Gilbert's articles on "China's Search for Peace," they would learn the reasons why none of these things can be done.

But as the majority are too engrossed in their own personal concerns to devote time and thought to a subject which ought to compel their attention, it will be sufficient if they will read and re-read the final paragraph headed "A New Cast Needed," which appeared in the "North-China Daily News" of the 28th instant. The paragraph referred too contains only forty lines but summarizes succinctly all-sufficient reasons why we are obliged to let China solve her own problems.

COMPANY MEETING

KALI GLIDIK COFFEE ESTATES

Statutory and Annual Meetings

The statutory meeting of the Kali Glidik Coffee Estates Ltd. was held at the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank, Shanghai, on January 25th, representing the Secretaries and General Managers (Messrs. J. A. [illegible]) were present representing 29,299 shares. Mr. A. J. Welch, the Chairman said:—

This meeting is called to comply with the Companies Ordinances which, as you are doubtless aware, require every public company to hold a statutory meeting within three months from the date on which the company is entitled to commence business.

The statutory report has been in your hands for several days and from it you will have seen that the whole present issue of 70,000 shares has been taken up and paid for and remittances have been sent to Java to pay for the purchase of the estates and to supply them with a certain amount of working capital for running expenses.

Preliminary expenses may appear high to you, but they include the 2½ per cent. commission paid to the underwriters as well as all legal and other expenses incidental to the flotation of the company.

The Dutch company "Cultuur Maatschappy Kali Glidik Estates, Limited," was duly formed on December 12, 1923, but up to the present time we have not received [illegible] statutes. The share certificates will be deposited in the name of this company with the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation in Soerabaya as soon as they are ready.

A list of shareholders is lying on the table and is open for your [illegible]

As an ordinary meeting is to be held immediately after this meeting, I will reserve any remarks that I have to make on general and estate matters until then, but if any of you have any questions to ask in connexion with the report, I shall be pleased to answer to the best of my ability.

There were no questions and the following resolution was carried:—

That the statutory report as presented be passed.—Proposed by Mr. A. J. Welch, seconded by Captain R. E. Sassoon.

ANNUAL MEETING

Following the statutory meeting of the [illegible] annual general meeting was held when Mr. A. J. Welch presided. In addressing the meeting he said:—

As it is [illegible] that the Companies Ordinances require that every public company shall hold a statutory meeting within three months from the date on which it is entitled to commence business, and annual meetings in every succeeding year and as our first financial period will not terminate until December 31, 1924—[illegible] ready until the spring of 1925. [illegible] advisable to take advantage of this gathering to do so, and to give you what information they can regarding the progress of the company.

This company, which obtained its [illegible] on November [illegible], 1923, was formed to acquire two estates in Java. [illegible] to improve the condition of the existing plantations and in the other to develop the property with coffee and products that cultivation. The estates [illegible] from the west coast, Kali Glidik, 1872 acres of which is situated in East Java, on the western slopes of the Smeroe Mountains, and about [illegible] fully planted with two varieties of coffee, approximately 500 acres being under Liberian coffee about 300 acres under Robusta mixed with Java coffee and 70 acres under Java coffee alone.

The soil is extremely rich and the estate is in the heart of the famous Smeroe district where the best coffee in Java is grown.

WORK ON THE ESTATE.

The Java coffee bushes that are interplanted amongst the Robusta have deteriorated, however, and as this variety requires a long [illegible] cannot be depended upon nowadays, [illegible] with Robusta or some other hardy [illegible] changed climatic conditions and not so liable to disease. The 70 acres under Java coffee alone are [illegible] coffee, and being situated at the highest point on the estate, will be retained as a permanent Java coffee area. Parts of the Robusta gardens have also been somewhat starved in the past through lack of adequate expenditure on upkeep, but this is a matter that is easily remedied and the improve- [illegible] is now being taken actively [illegible] I may tell you that, although we did not obtain possession of the estate until January 1, 1924, we were able to arrange with the late owners that work should be undertaken in some areas, under the advice of our visiting agent, which will enable the areas treated to reach full productivity a year earlier than would otherwise have been the case, since work of the nature of pruning and stumping must be done at the latest by the end of November if an extra year's crop is not to be lost. What I mean is that trees stumped not later than November, 1923, will yield nothing in 1924, a small crop in 1925 and be in full bearing again in 1926; if stumped later than November, a full crop would not be obtainable till 1927 and both 1924 and 1925 would yield nothing.

Writing early in January, the visiting agent described the then condition of the gardens as approximately 1,120 acres very good, 350 acres medium and 380 acres indifferent. The latter is the area under Java and Robusta Coffee to which I have already referred.

CURRENT YEAR PROSPECTS.

Robusta	7,000 piculs
Coca	75 "

In this connexion I must point out that coffee crops are estimated by the manager by the amount of blossom that appears to him to have set and with a large crop [illegible] to [illegible] a few hundred piculs [illegible] red berries and market coffee is not [illegible] until the crop has [illegible] prepared [illegible] have been unfortunate because 1923 was an [illegible] early dry year in Java. [illegible] had [illegible] drought or [illegible] than it did, [illegible] pass [illegible] for a still larger [illegible] have been extremely [illegible] the other hand, in [illegible] the [illegible] such a good year as in many [illegible] late [illegible] a [illegible] of their [illegible] failed to set.

You [illegible] have made a forward sale of the first 2,000 piculs of Robusta that are harvested at Guilders 41⅞ per picul Telquel, this price is equivalent to about Guilders 46⅝ per picul for first quality.

We have deemed it advisable to sell, with all faults, instead of sorting on the estate, as it will enable us to get the coffee away from the estate immediately the preparation is completed and furthermore, as a large portion of the crop next year will probably ripen at the same time, it will obviate the risk of our being short of women for plucking through our having diverted them to the work of sorting.

When we know how the supply of labour is and how the crop is coming in, we can sort the balance of our crop if necessary.

The estate is equipped with the necessary buildings for the [illegible] staff, factory and drying [illegible]

The Factory was practically rebuilt during 1923, at a cost of over F.80,000, and is now admirably arranged for economical working, the machinery being of the latest and most efficient type and most of the transport of the coffee, during the different stages of manufacture, being mechanical.

VIRGIN SOIL.

The other estate, Kawali, or rather I should say, Panawangan, which is its correct name, covers 1,246 acres and is situated in Mid Java on the new main road from Tjiamis to Cheribon; it is virgin soil never having been planted with any culture. The soil is reported to be extremely rich and the elevation and climate are eminently suited for the successful growth of Robusta coffee.

The whole area is cleared ready for planting and our intention is gradually to develop it on the most scientific and up-to-date lines.

It is anticipated that when the estate reaches maturity, the yields will equal, if not exceed, the already high yields on Kali Glidik estate.

We expect to have about 175 acres planted with Robusta coffee by the end of this month and propose to open up a similar area before the end of 1924. Our policy is to cut our coat according to the cloth available and to open only a small area annually for the first three years. The present plantings should yield a small crop in 1926 and a full crop in 1927 by which time the second planting should also have begun to bear, and the profit derived from the output should then enable us to embark on a large annual programme and complete the planting of the estate.

There are no buildings on the estate at present, but it will be necessary in a few months time to erect a small bungalow at a cost not exceeding F.3.000 for the manager, who is at present living in a native hut.

It will never be necessary to build a large number of coolie quarters owing to the fact that there is a village with 7,000 inhabitants right on the borders of the estate, but later on it may be found advisable to build a few houses to accommodate a limited number of labourers from a different district so that we shall not be entirely dependent on one class of labour.

COMPANY'S PROSPECTS.

On the whole, genelemen, the prospects for this company are extremely bright, the existing plantations, the condition of which is being steadily improved, should earn a dividend this year and from 1926 onwards the output from Kali Glidik will be augmented by the gradually increasing crops from Panawangan. You must understand, however, that coffee is a culture extremely susceptible to the weather conditions ruling at the time of blossoming so that large variations in the crop from year to year are unavoidable, but when Panawangan comes into full bearing, the combined outputs from the two properties should be sufficient always to earn a dividend no matter what the weather conditions may have been.

That is all I have to say, Gentlemen, but, if any of you have any questions you would like to ask, I shall be pleased to answer to the best of my ability.

There were no questions and the meeting then concluded.

CLUB AND SOCIETIES

ST. PATRICK'S SOCIETY

Successful Year's Work: Increase in Membership

The annual meeting of St. Patrick's Society was held at the Palace Hotel on Tuesday. Mr. J. J. Dunne, acting President, in the absence of Mr. R. E. Moorhead, presided. There was a good attendance.

The Chairman said he had to regret that their worthy President, Mr. R. B. Moorhead had resigned some two months ago on leaving Shanghai. He had been intimately connected with the society for many years and took a great interest in it, and served successively as a member of the Committee, as hon. treasurer, Vice-President, and as President. They hoped to have the pleasure of seeing him back in Shanghai.

The accounts showed that the ordinary receipts were some $806, from which had been expended some $748, including $301 on school fees for Irish children and $250 on advances and assistance to their fellow-countrymen in distress. The chairman was glad to say that all known cases of Irish men or women in need, or who had made application to the society for assistance had been investigated, and help given.

A new account, called "Charity Account" had been opened, the foundation of which was the proceeds of the raffle of a doll presented by Mr. R. B. Moorhead. Members of the society were invited to send subscriptions to this account when they felt so disposed and particularly in place of flowers in memory of their deceased friends. They had expended from this fund in the past year $300 in assisting towards cost of passage money to America.

Other activities during the past year were the celebration of St. Patrick's Day, which was held at the New Carlton, and passed off most successfully, and co-operation with the other patriotic societies of the Empire in the St. Dunstan's Committee. It was proposed to institute an [illegible] day of remembrance of St. Dunstan's and the speaker was sure this noble work of caring for the blind would receive generous support.

There had been a gratifying increase in membership since the last annual meeting, and he had great pleasure in welcoming new members, and also in welcoming re-joining members.

He had to thank their friend Mr. Ridgway for his successful efforts in increasing the membership, also the hon. secretary, Mr. Givens, and the hon. treasurer Mr. Stafford, both of whom had worked whole-heartedly for the good of the society.

Mr. L. M. Beytagh was elected President and Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Vice-President.

There was a lively discussion on the coming annual St. Patrick's Ball to be given on March 17 and it was the concensus of opinion of the majority present that the dance this year would eclipse those of the past. They would make it the biggest and the best. Committees were appointed

ULCERATED LEGS & Obstinate Sores

Quickly Healed By Zam-Buk

IN chronic sores, varicose ulcers and old wounds, where destruction of the tissues has occurred through disease or neglect of an injury, Zam-Buk is simply wonderful.

Zam-Buk is a pure, highly-refined balm, composed of rich herbal essences which soothe, purify and cool the skin, banish pain and inflammation, and stimulate the growth of healthy new tissue. At the same time, Zam-Buk is a most powerful natural antiseptic that kills disease germs.

Zam-Buk ensures permanent healing for it heals from the inside in Nature's own way. Common salves and ointments containing rancid animal fats and mineral drugs invariably produce false healing. They cover up surface trouble and leave the poisons in the skin. Thus the sores, abscesses or ulcers soon break out again, often in a different part of the body.

Also for eczema, Delhi sores, heat rash and swellings, ringworm, boils, poisoned sores, bad feet, bites, stings, and all cuts, wounds and sores, Zam-Buk is the soothing, speedy remedy. Of all medicine vendors.

AN OBSTRUCTIVE RICSHA COOLIE

Police Court Sequel: Mr. H. Quelch Charged with Assault

At H. M. Police Court on Saturday, before Mr. G. W. King, Mr. H. Quelch was charged with an assult on a ricsha coolie at 73 Szechuen Road on the 19th instant.

The coolie gave evidence that he was employed by Miss Barchet, of the American Bible Society, and on Saturday last was waiting with his ricsha in a passageway alongside the defendant's offices. Mr. Quelch came out of his office and told witness to go away, whereupon he went to tell his mistress. When he returned defendant came out and struck him hitting him on the nose and kicking him.

Miss B. Barchet told the court that when the coolie came up to her the second time his face was covered with blood. She went to speak to defendant about it and he said he had told the coolie repeatedly that he could not remain there with his ricsha, but witness was under the impression that he could do so during office hours. The result of the conversation was that both witness and Mr. Quelch became angry. She went and informed her employer, the Rev. G. Carleton Lacey, and they returned to Mr. Quelch's office together, defendant then threatening to call the police if they did not clear out. The coolie obtained a doctor's certificate, and this was sent to defendant with a note to the effect that if he would pay $15 for it the matter would be dropped. No answer was given.

His Worship—Isn't $15 rather a high price for the certificate?

Defendant stated that there were a number of ricshas in the passage way and he told the coolies to go away, all of them leaving except this particular one. When witness again told him to leave, he simply leered up in witness's face and stood perfectly still. Witness then turned the ricsha over on its side as an indication that the coolie would have to go, and in leisurely fashion he righted it and went out on the road. The matter was explained to Miss Barchet, and when she left she spoke to the coolie and he returned to the passage way and sat down with his ricsha. This was too much for witness to stand, and he forcibly ejected the coolie from the passage with the side of his foot and the flat of his hand.

His Worship said defendant ought not to have taken the law into his own hands. He should have called a policeman. Fined $5.

NEGLIGENT DRIVING

A Collision at Nanking and Tibet Roads

W. J. Moss was summoned before Mr. G. W. King at H. M. Police Court last Friday for negligently driving a motor car at the Nanking-Thibet Road crossing at 9.50 p.m. on the 15th instant; also for failing to have two lighted lamps at the front and one at the rear of the car whilst driving along Honan Road at 10.15 the same night. Mr. E. T. Maitland appeared for the police.

Mr. H. J. Brett, Commercial Secretary of the British Legation, stated that he was driving along Nanking Road and had reached Thibet Road crossing when defendant, coming from the west, turned south into Thibet Road directly in front of his car, without any warning. Witness jammed on his brakes and swerved slightly to the left so as not to get the car full on but, although both cars pulled up, there was a collision.

Defendant—Why did you send your driver to tell the Chinese policeman to put the blame on me? I know that was so, because a Chinese lady who was with me heard what was said.

Witness replied that he did nothing of the sort. Mr. Brett also denied that he "ran away" before the Chinese policeman could get his name and address.

Police evidence was given supporting Mr. Brett's statement, the Sikh policeman on traffic duty stating that defendant was talking to a lady in the car and drove carelessly.

Defendant said that he was driving slowly at the time, and there was no traffic about. Had Mr. Brett steered his car to the right instead of to the left there would have been no collision. He admitted that his lights went wrong for a few seconds.

His Worship fined defendant $5 for negligent driving and $3 for being without lights on the car.

AN OLD PROPERTY DISPUTE

Another Argument in U. S. Court

Mrs. Alice Rude Hansen, second intervenor in the cause of Emil S. Fischer v. Charles Stone, represented by Mr. A. S. Allan on Monday applied to the American Court to confirm the sale of the property in question, U. S. Lot 2725.

It was stated by Mr. C. S. Franklin, attorney for plaintiff, that the Marshal, according to the Court's judgment and the agreement by parties concerned, had sold the lot at a private sale and realized amounts to cover the judgment, Tls. 10,000 plus interest from February 23, 1920, for Mr. Fischer and Tls. 10,000 for the first intervenor, Mr. Woo.

Mr. J. B. Davies for Mr. Woo, said that his client would be willing to pay a higher price for the property than had been secured; as a matter of fact he would offer then and there in Court Tls. 40,000 for it and perhaps a little more.

Mr. Allan contended that in the agreement there had been no stipulation as to the price agreed upon, there had been a general consent on the part of all concerned to sell at a private sale.

Mr. Franklin argued that the sale had been in accordance with the stipulations of all concerned and that as the right to appeal had not been taken within 60 days nothing further could be done in the matter, further that he wanted interest on his client's share from the time of sale until the amount due was actually paid to him.

The disposition of the money from the sale and the interest claim was agreed to by the attorneys appearing.

"ALCOHOLIC POISONING"

Inquest Verdict in Hotel Death

A verdict of "death from alcoholic poisoning" was returned at the inquest held by Mr. N. E. Lurton at the U. S. Court on Thursday on E. V. Brey, who was found dead in his room by the Chinese servants at the Savoy Hotel, with an empty whiskey bottle beside him.

Brey was about 45 years of age and an engineer who came to the Far East some time ago, but had been in Shanghai for a few months only, having been employed here, as a salesman for an engineering concern.

The jury was composed of Messrs. James Dolan, C. A. Stewart, Fred Vincent, James Jones, John S. Potter and L. P. Schrag.

INFORMATION has reached the U. S. Consulate-General that the Japanese authorities at Yokohama are strictly insisting upon the possession of a valid passport visaed by a Japanese Consul before tourists may land at that port.

A coolie, Tsah Dzang-kung, was killed and another injured, at the Riverside Power Station on Tuesday morning at about 10.30 o'clock. It appears that as the employees on the premises were hoisting a load of materials by crane, the pulley broke and Tsah, who was directly below, received injuries from which he subsequently died. The other man received minor injuries.

AMERICANS IN LEASED TERRITORIES

Still Subject to American Consular Jurisdiction: The Alleged Offender in Dairen Assault Charge Must Submit to the U. S. Court

An important decision relating to American extraterritorial rights in the Leased Territory of the Liaotung Peninsula was handed down by Mr. N. E. Lurton at the U. S. Commissioner's Court on Saturday. The case was one in which an American shipmaster, Arthur W. Smith, was recently charged with assaulting three seamen at Dairen. Major C. P. Holcomb, on behalf of the accused man, moved that the Court had no jurisdiction, the alleged offence having been committed within the peace of the Emperor of Japan.

In overruling the motion, the Commissioner held that the United States Government had never relinquished its extraterritorial rights in the territory named, and that a primâ facie case had been made out against the prisoner, who must submit to the Court's jurisdiction.

In the course of his interesting decision, the Commissioner, after refering to various treaties with regard to the peninsula, said:

In analysing the intentions of the parties to these treaties, it appears that China in the original lease made with Russia reserved to herself her Sovereign Powers over this territory as it was explicity so stated in the body of the lease. It further appears that in the Treaty of Peace between Russia and Japan, these same rights were transferred to the latter subject, however, to the acquiescence of China which appears to have been given a few months later. The period of this lease as acquired by Japan extended only until March 27, 1923. In the beginning of the year 1915, Japan sought to renew the Liaotung lease with China, and exchanged notes respecting same under the title of The Treaty Respecting South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia. This treaty among other things extended the term of the lease of Port Arthur and Dairen for a period of 29 years. It also contained an article which can be said bears strongly on the question that is being considered here.

This article known as article No. 5 of said treaty in the second paragraph thereof, reads as follows: "Civil and criminal cases in which the defendants are Japanese, shall be tried and adjudicated by the Japanese consul; those in which the defendants are Chinese, shall be tried and adjudicated by Chinese authorities. In either case, an officer may be deputed to the Court to attend the proceedings; but amongst civil cases between Chinese and Japanese relating to land, shall be tried and adjudicated by delegates of both nations conjointly in accordance with Chinese laws and local usage."

In construing this particular part of the treaty, it shows conclusively that Japan recognized the sovereignty of China, and reiterated in specific terms her extraterritorial rights for her subjects and does not claim supreme powers to herself to the exclusion of Chinese sovereignty in this particular territory.

During the negotiations between Japan and China respecting this treaty, the famous 21 Demands presented to China by Japan came into existence, one of which, bore directly on the extension of the lease of Port Arthur and Dairen. On May 8, 1915, an ultimatum was handed to China by Japan requiring her to agree to these demands which the former claims was accepted under duress. However, before China's formal acceptance was given, the United States Government communicated the reservation of rights of the American Government under date of May 13, 1915, as follows: "In view of the circumstances of the negotiations which have taken place, and which are now pending between the Government of Japan, and of the agreements which have been read as a result thereof, the Government of the United States has the honour to notify the Government of the Chinese Republic that it cannot recognize any agreement or undertaking which has been entered into or may be entered into between the Governments of China and Japan or the treaty rights of the United States and its citizens in China; the political or territorial integrity of the Republic of China or the international policy relative to China, and commonly known as the Open Door policy."

It is here very apparent that the United States has not been a party to or has in any way waived her extraterritorial rights given to her by the various treaties with China, and took the occasion to so notify both China and Japan before this treaty was actually signed.

The same question subsequently occupied a very important part in the Sixth Plenary Session of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament held in Washington on February 4, 1922.

The Chairman, on behalf of the Government of the United States read in part as follows:

"With respect to this grant, the Government of the United States will, of course, regard it as not intended to be exclusive, and, as in the past, will claim from the Chinese Government for American citizens, the benefits accruing to them by virtue of the most favoured nation clause in the Treaties between the United States and China."

In these utterances which have been made a permanent record, and adopted by the United States Government, it shows conclusively that it never has relinquished its extraterritorial rights in this particular territory in question.

It further appears that Mr. Hay, Secretary of State in 1900, instructed the Consuls in China that they had no authority to exercise extraterritorial jurisdiction or to perform non-judicial Consular acts within the leased territory under their present Chinese exequaturs.

In the memorandum of Mr. Van Dyne, Assistant Solicitor for the United States, he seems to take a different view of this situation than did Mr. Hay, and says: "As it is expressly stipulated in the lease that China retains sovereignty over the territory leased, it could doubtless be asserted that such territory is still Chinese territory and that the provisions of our treaties with China granting consular jurisdiction are still applicable therein. But in view of the express relinquishment of jurisdiction by China, I infer that the reservation of sovereignty is merely intended to cut off possible future claims of the lessees that the Sovereignty of the territory is permanently vested in them. The intention and effects of these leases appear to me to have been the relinquishment by China, during the term of the leases, and the conferring upon the foreign power in each case of all jurisdiction over the territory. Such relinquishment would seem, also, to involve the loss by the United States of its right to exercise consular jurisdiction in the territories leased. And, as Mr. Conger suggests, as these territories have practically passed from the control of an uncivilized people to civilized, there would seem to be no substantial reason for continuing to exercise such jurisdiction."

Judge Moore in his International Law Digest says: "It is the duty of the courts not to construe an act of Congress as modifying and annulling a treaty made with another nation, unless its words clearly and strongly point to such a construction."

This principle of Judge Moore's seems to cover the situation herein involved. The defendant in this case is the one that is attacking the jurisdiction of the United States in exercising its authority over him in an action brought in its Fedoral Court. There is no positive assertion on the part of the United States that it has abrogated its treaties with China in respect to the issue involved in this case. It might be said that this situation would become more complex, should this same objection be made by a friendly Power, as the disposition of the matter would then be adjudicated by a totally different tribunal. But such is not the case.

S. V. C. MOUNTED UNITS

Sunday's Cross-Country Rides

Sunday was a busy day with the S.V.C. mounted units, both the Light Horse and the Field Artillery Battery having cross-country engagements. The Artillery were the first to get going with their annual sub-section point-to-point race, starting at [illegible] of Warren and Hungjao Roads at 10.45 a.m. and finishing along the Warren Line, which this season is counted a trifle too awkward even for the paper hunters. The Gunners had five sections out, all finishing the course and No. 3 coming home in the fast time of 20 minutes. No. 4 section were second and the plucky signallers were third. The winners were:—Sergt. Brown, Gnrs. Brown, Henry, Ferguson and Williams. No. 1 Section were doing easily the best time, but they had the misfortune to lose a man at the last jump and with the country in the state it is just now it is no disgrace to meet with disaster anywhere.

LIGHT HORSE RIDE

The annual section ride of the Light Horse was fixed for about the same time as the Artillerymen's ride and after giving the latter time to get off the course the Light Horse sent nine teams away on a stiff journey from the Warren Line out over Suez, one jump to Westward Ho platform, any route to Marah, Hungjao Road at the Octopus Tree, Dallas's Grave, round Clear Water, Family Tree platform, Westward Ho platform, left handed to two [illegible] jump, then righthanded to Suez and a finish at the Warren Line.

[illegible] enjoyable ride and all the nine teams finished. By common consent the honours were voted to Tpr. Thorn, who, [illegible] through the ice on one side whilst [illegible] subsequently met with other adventures, still managed to finish in good order. However, he had a good troop leader in Tpr. Matthews, who knows how to make the best out of awkward circumstances.

The prizes, which were presented by ex-commanding officers, were distributed by Mrs. McMichael at a gathering subsequent to the ride at Capt. H.M. Spence's house.

THE PAPERHUNT HANDICAP

Won by Mr. N. L. Sparke: Series of Accidents

Eighty members of the Paperhunt Club competed in the annual handicap on Saturday afternoon. [illegible] and bitter wind from the north west, but once on the move, this was not so trying. There were few spectators on the course, as the course being [illegible] most of the horses and [illegible] had [illegible] of [illegible] since they [illegible] the [illegible].

The going was rather dusty in spite of the recent rains and casualties were somewhat numerous. Mr. J. H. Liddell, who became qualified to ride in the "pink" at the last hunt, speedily came to grief, followed by Mr. David Brand, whose pony got into the Beeline Creek. Mr. Hickling lost his pony, Wiltshire, and General Macnaghten came down at the Clearwater Jump, Mr. Vaughan Craddock fell into the new nine-foot waterjump near Benbow's Finish and Mr. J. C. Greig fell at Clearwater, and his pony Mistylight unhappily broke its fetlock and had to be destroyed.

At the approaches to the finish Mr. J. H. Teesdale appeared to be holding the lead, but just before the finishing jump Mr. N. L. Sparke on Wild Chance overtook him and thus won the Handicap. The classes on the whole were well represented on the card which reads as follows:—

1. Mr. N. L. Sparke, 157 lbs., on Wild Chance (1¼ mins.)
2. Mr. J. H. Teesdale, 161 lbs., on Cape Horn (2 mins);
3. Mr. W. D. Fiddes-Wilson, 176 lbs., on Right Royal (2¼ mins.)
4. Mr. J. G. Lyon, 166 lbs., on Torrid (2½ mins.).
5. Mr. H. G. Robinson, 174 lbs., on Salamander (3 mins).

The game between England and Portugal in the first round of the Prentice-Skottowe International Cup competition produce a remarkable match—remarkable for the number of goals scored, for the [illegible] interest from beginning to end, for the complete mastery of the ball displayed by the English forwards, and last, but by no means least, for the plucky and tenacious manner in which the members of the Portuguese team, outnumbered and outweighed, outgeneralled and outclassed, stuck to their task, well knowing they had not the remotest chance of winning.

Goldman got nine of England's 14 goals, Coulcher four and Price one. Goldman also got another, but was adjudged off-side; and Coulcher, towards the end of the second half, was descending on poor Remedios like a wolf on the fold, and was right through with the goal at his mercy, when his elbows or his arms apparently did something that clashed with Mr. Marshall's conception of what is right and proper conduct for an advancing forward. The decision was not popular.

San Francisco, Jan. 25.

Sarazen was two up on Havers in the morning round of 18 holes of a 72-hole golf match to be played here and at Los Angeles. Sarazen was often in trouble but was saved by his putting.

Jan. 26.

Sarazen beat Havers over the first 36 holes of their 72-hole golf match by 5 and 3. The medal score made by Sarazen was 151 and by Havers 153.

It was raining heavily throughout and most of the greens were like duck ponds, compelling the players several times to discard their putters and use their mashies.

Havers's downfall was due to the greens. He was either short or over, while Sarazen was usually well up.

The British player halved the 34th hole and won the 35th and 36th, making Sarazen 3 up.—Reuter's American Service.

Los Angeles, Jan. 27.

Sarazen was two up on Havers at the end of the 45th hole. Havers won four of the first nine played to-day and Sarazen three, two holes being halved. The putting of both men was unsteady.

At the end of the 54th hole Sarazen was still three up, he and Havers having won five each and having halved eight.

Havers throughout the match, which was 72 holes for the unofficial world's championship, showed brilliant approach and ability as far as direction was concerned, but in most cases he was short by twenty or thirty feet on mashie shots of from fifty to a hundred yards. Sarazen placed his ball on the green better than Havers and in the off lies showed noteworthy ability to recover. The honours were even in driving.

Sarazen's card for to-day's 32 holes was 129 and Havers 133.—Reuter's American Service.

With reference to the incident of January 19 wherein Dr. Tartois, a French citizen, held up the traffic on Nanking Road by causing an obstruction with his motor car for a period of seven minutes, the following letter has been received, and is authorized for publication:—

Shanghai, January 23, 1924.

DEAR SIR,—I feel it my duty to bring to you and your colleagues' notice, an explanation of my action on Saturday last, in deliberately holding up the traffic on Nanking Road.

I did it in the interests of the Public generally of both the French Concession and the International Settlement.

In such a cosmopolitan community as Shanghai, we are, at the Municipal Council, faced every day with great difficulty in interpreting the Municipal bye-laws no matter how carefully they may be framed.

Believe me, I have the utmost espect for British justice and I have no doubt Mr. King's judgement was right from a purely legal point of view, but at the same time if our, if your bye-laws, were interpreted in such a way, the administration of both Settlements would become simply impossible, and I took this extreme step to demonstrate what might happen if the law was followed literally.

I felt perfectly sure of being summoned before my own Court and that I should be duly sentenced.

On the other side, I am aware that an appeal is being lodged against the judgement in the Willder case, and H.B.M. Supreme Court may not confirm this judgement.

Anyhow, being logical with myself, I realize that I am culpable and I consider myself liable to a fine. In consequence of which, I beg to hand you enclosed a cheque for one hundred dollars, which I shall thank you to donate to any charity which you may consider deserving.

I am, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
E. TARTOIS.

S. FESSENDEN, Esq.,
Chairman,
Shanghai Municipal Council.

Kawamura Memorial Clock Tower

As indicated in the following interchange of letters, the Council has accepted the offer of The Naigai Wata Kaisha, Ld., to present to the community a Clock Tower in memory of the late Mr. Rihei Kawamura, former President of the Company.

In compliance with the Company's request, the Council has undertaken to design the Tower, which will be constructed at the junction of Ferry and Robison Roads. The diameter of the clock face, viz., 7 feet indicates that the centre of the clock should be from 65 feet to 75 feet above the road; and the total height of the tower will probably not exceed 100 feet, with a base of about 20 feet. To provide the Tower with a satisfactory setting without interference to traffic, additional land has been scheduled for acquisition, to form a circus with a radius of 88 feet. The cost of the additional land required together with the buildings situated thereon is estimated at Tls. 6,000, which sum will be made a charge against the public funds:—

Shanghai, September 17, 1923.

DEAR SIR,—We take pleasure in confirming our offer to build a Memorial Clock Tower in memory of the late President of our Company, Mr. Rihei Kawamura, at the junction of Ferry and Robison Roads.

Mr. Kawamura, as head of our Company, has done very much towards development of the Gordon Road industrial area and we think the proposed Clock Tower will be a befitting memorial to his work.

We wish the Council to design the Tower which we shall undertake to construct and we shall install a 7 feet diameter [illegible] clock manufactured by Messrs. Gent & Co. of Leicester. The clock will have 4 faces and will be fitted with hour striking gear and Westminster Chimes. After the completion of the Clock Tower we shall make it over to the Council on the understanding that the Council will take charge of it and maintain it. We think a clock tower in an industrial centre as that proposed will not only add to the appearance of the district but be of very great value in giving correct time to an extensive area whose inhabitants are mostly factory workers with whom any device to give correct time is of very great value.

Thanking you in advance for your favourable reply,

Your obedient servants,
FOR NAIGAI WATA KAISHA, LD.,
(Shanghai Branch),
H. KAWAMURA,
Manager.

The COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC WORKS,
Shanghai Municipal Council.

In conveying to you an [illegible] sion of the members' cordial acceptance of your commendable offer, I am directed to state that, upon completion of the Tower, the Council will be pleased to take charge of and maintain it at the public cost.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

tion the various phases of this novel case, I fail to find that the United States Court for China has lost its jurisdiction over this defendant who is charged with committing a crime within the Territory of China, and more particularly described as being in the city of Dairen.

"JUNK" RECEIPT GENUINE

Verdict for Plaintiff in Jewell Dispute in U. S. Court

At the U. S. Court on Wednesday Judge Lobingier found for plaintiff in the jewellery dispute between Euly Greenfield and Lucille Slegman. The plaintiff, Euly Greenfield, claimed the defendant owed her $5,500 (American currency) for jewellery which she [illegible] to dispose of as her agent and for which transaction no accounting had been rendered. A feature of the case was a curious receipt alleged to have been given by defendant which stated: "Hongkong 29/9 1920. Received a lot of junk valued about $5,500 Gold. LUCILLE SLEGMAN. Gold rings with precious stones, jades, bangles, pins, pearls, etc. etc." Expert evidence was given by local bank officials on the signatures on a number of cheques produced.

The Judge held that the principal controversy turned on the genuineness of the receipt in question and on this point he said the pleadings themselves appeared to be conclusive. For, under the law of the jurisdiction, when such an instrument was attached "its genuineness and due execution should be deemed admitted unless denied specifically by the [illegible] pleading." In another jurisdiction [illegible] varied the doctrine had been carried even further.

The genuineness and due execution of the instrument sued upon were not specifically denied generally.

SIGNATURE GENUINE.

Independently of this rule it was more than doubtful whether the genuineness of defendant's signature to the instrument had been successfully impugned. The handwriting expert who gave the only detailed and intensive inspection of the two signatures, had furnished the Court with a clear and helpful opinion.

In any view of the case his Honour felt obliged to find defendant liable on the instrument.

Plaintiff would therefore recover from defendant the sum of $5,500, U. S. currency, less the value of any portion of the property which she might be able to return. If the parties could not agree upon such value further evidence thereon would be received. Costs would also be taxed against defendant.

PILFERAGE EVIL ON THE WHARVES

Story of Wholesale Theft from Holt's Wharf Told in Court

Six Chinese—Dzung Kung-sung, Yue Ah-yeu, Yih Lung-sung, Dung Lih-pung (alias Kompo Ah-sun, Li Tsang-kwei and Woo Tsung-kwei) were charged at the Mixed Court on Monday, before Mr. C. E. Whitmore (British Assessor) and Mr. Lee Sieu-mei (Chinese Magistrate) with sacrilege breaking and larceny at Holts Wharf.

Mr. C. Mansel Reese appeared to prosecute and Deputy Superintendent Woodfield was present for the River Police. Accused were not represented by Counsel.

WATCHMAN IMPLICATED.

In opening the case, Mr. Mansel Reese stated that the worst aspects of the case were that two of the men implicated were native police watchmen, and that it was not possible to discover the theft until some time after the arrival of the ship as the cargo lay in the godown awaiting inspection by the consignees. The River Police heard of the matter and, as a result of their smart work, the six men were now in dock. A seventh man, a shop assistant, together with his employer, in a shop in the French Concession, were alleged to have received the stolen property. The former was arrested and was ordered to put up security to appear in the Mixed Court when required. The proprietor of the shop had absconded.

Five of the six prisoners implicated two police watchmen, but the City authorities had taken jurisdiction over them and had them on trial. The man who had appeared at the French Mixed Court admitted that he rode to the wharf in a motor car to receive the goods, and also that he took them to the shop in seven or eight bundles. The fourth man, a godown coolie, denied any knowledge of the affair.

THE HELPING HAND.

The first accused stated that he was asked by another man to assist him to remove six cases of foreign goods which he had purchased by auction. He wanted them moved immediately (although it was 9 o'clock at night), saying that he was afraid that they might be taken away by mistake. Witness went and gave him assistance. Two policemen and three others were standing by and saw them remove the goods into a sampan from the wharf. Two days later he was given $4 by the man who asked him to lend a hand.

A similar statement was made by the second man, who stated that the fourth prisoner had asked him to assist. There were two policemen and five others standing by at the time. This prisoner said that he assisted in moving six cases to the lower part of the wharf.

The third prisoner's statement was similar. He stated that Li, the fourth prisoner had asked him to help him to bring something from the wharf at 8 o'clock at night. Witness asked what he was going to bring, but the fourth prisoner made no reply, and witness followed him to the wharf where there were six cases. The fourth prisoner told him to help in removing the cases to a sampan. He saw something improper about the matter and he refused, whereupon the fourth prisoner said "You see the policemen at the wharf do not interfere with us. Why be so cowardly? Be brave and move them to the sampan." He then helped and later went home. Three days later the fourth prisoner handed him $4 for his trouble.

MOTOR CARS USED.

The fourth prisoner denied any knowledge of the matter, and the fifth said that at about 10 p.m. on January 8, the first prisoner met him in a tea-shop and asked him to go out "on pleasure." They boarded an empty boat and went to the wharf, where they landed. The first, second, third and fifth defendants were present apart from himself. The first man entered the godown with his men and took out six cases which were moved to the edge of the wharf and placed on the empty boat where they were opened and found to contain serge, etc. This was then conveyed to another wharf. Two motor cars were hired, and the goods were taken to the receiver who paid them $1,842. They went to a hotel where the money was divided, witness receiving $40. On the following day, he again went to the hotel and saw one of the policemen talking with the first defendant. The policeman said that his colleague was unable to come to get his share of the money, whereupon the first accused then handed the policeman $1,200, after which he left.

The sixth accused gave a story similar to that of the second and third prisoners.

SENTENCED TO IMPRISONMENT.

The Court found all of the accused, with the exception of the fourth (the godown coolie), guilty and sent the first and fifth men to prison for three years each, while the other three received 18 months each.

HIS ANCESTORS' BONES

Remarkable Case of Indignant Landowner and the Unwanted Grave

A case such as is rarely brought to the notice of the Mixed Court was on Thursday the subject of proceedings before Mr. J. E. Jacobs (American Assessor) and Magistrate Li Sieu-mei, when Mr. N. E. Lurton (prosecuting on behalf of Ma Ah-foo) charged Lee Ah-yoong-sung, an ex-chauffeur with being concerned with others unknown in uncovering several graves of the complainant's ancestors and damaging, abandoning and stealing the bones and articles belonging to the corpses deposited in the graves.

Mr. Lurton stated that accused had purchased from his client, the complainant, the land surrounding the grave mounds which complainant refused to sell or part with. Accused tried to secure possession, but complainant refused to sell, with the result that accused and his friends uncovered the grave mound and stole the contents.

The case was remanded, bail allowed in the sum of $200.

RUSSIAN'S CLAIM FOR $49,000

The Action Against the China Merchants

Proceedings were continued before Messrs. Ivanow and Tsang at the Mixed Court on Monday in the claim brought by A. M. Vinagradoff, former second officer of the China Merchants' S. M. Co.'s str. Hsinming, against his former employers for the sum of $49,000, allegations being made to the effect that he fell from a faulty ladder into a ballast tank and sustained permanent serious injuries and ill health as the result.

Mr. P. F. Faison and Dr. A. Fishman appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. H. Lipson Ward represented the defence.

Captain P. Reilly, of Messrs. Parker, Reilley, & Simmons, consulting engineers, said that he inspected the ladder and found no irregularity.

Captain H. MacKinnon was called and stated that he told plaintiff to go to one of the company's doctors who had full power to take anyone off ship when necessary. It was suggested that plaintiff should take short trips which would be beneficial to his recovery. On June 1 the captain of the ship handed witness a letter from plaintiff complaining that he was unwell and not fit for duty. Witness told him to see the doctor. At that time he said nothing outside the letter and made no complaint about anything. He said that he wanted to see another doctor, a private physician of his own choice, and witness told him he could do so at his own expense. Upon production of a certificate from Dr. Marsh, plaintiff was sent to hospital. Some time later, plaintiff was told that he would not be fit for duty for three weeks. On July 4, another certificate was received from Dr. Marsh stating that plaintiff was progressing satisfactorily and would be fit for duty in a fortnight's time. When plaintiff had brought him this certificate he complained that some other doctors said that he would never again be fit for duty and asked witness to give him a position in the office. At the end of August he came for his wages and was paid, and a week later he brought a certificate from Dr. Bolton stating that he was fit for light duty, such as might be available on a river boat. Witness told him that he would post him on the Kiangteen and explained to him his duties, which were to keep watch with the pilot and sit in the wheel-house and witness anything that might happen during the day. He would also have to keep a watch for regulation lights at night, and was to work with the chief officer, four hours on and four hours off as usual. Most of the time he would be sitting in the wheel house. This arrangement apparently satisfied plaintiff, but he did not join the ship. The next thing that happened was a letter from his lawyers, stating that other doctors considered that another operation was necessary in his case. The letter was handed to Mr. Ward's firm, who replied regarding three months pay if plaintiff did not wish to carry on his work and desired to leave the company. On the last day of September, plaintiff came for his money and witness told him that he could not give it to him as the matter was in the hands of the lawyers.

Questioned by Mr. Ward regarding plaintiff's ankle, witness said that plaintiff had started to limp when the case started.

Cross-examined, witness stated that on September 8 plaintiff had produced letters from a German and a French doctor, and that plaintiff had objected to going on duty. He disobeyed an order to go on board the ship.

The hearing was again adjourned after Dr. Bolton had given evidence.

THE PAUL REGENDANZ AFFAIR

Startling Development: Chinese Authorities Claim Jurisdiction

Has the Mixed Court jurisdiction over alleged wrongdoers on board a foreign ship flying the flag of a country not enjoying extraterritorial rights in China, that ship being moored in the Huangpu on the Pootung (Chinese) shore? This important question was raised at the Mixed Court on Thursday when the trial was resumed of the 17 Chinese seamen charged with assault in connexion with the shooting affray on the str. Paul Regendanz (which flies the flag of Panama). The Court announced that a letter had been received from the Shanghai City authorities, requesting that the prisoners be sent for trial to the Chinese Court.

The Assessor (Mr. J. E. Jacobs) remarked that the letter put a different aspect on the whole case. The fight took place on the Pootung side of the river, which was, he pointed out, Chinese territory, while the vessel in question belonged to a nationality without extraterritorial rights in China. Had the Mixed Court or the City Court jurisdiction?

Mr. A. S. Allan (prosecuting) submitted that the Mixed Court had jurisdiction over the case.

The prisoners defended by Mr. L. K. Kentwell, through their counsel, intimated their willingness to be tried by the Chinese Court.

Mr. Allan said he had not seen the letter, but the matter seemed to him to be an interesting question of jurisdiction, which was a very important matter in this case. Even if the fight did take place, he said, on board the ship on the other side of the river, the Court could hear the case. If the Court decided to send the case to the Chinese Court it would be relinquishing foreign rights in this country.

The Assessor—What are your grounds? What is the basis of your claim. Have you any proof to support your argument?

Mr. Allan—The Court has accepted jurisdiction in this matter in the first place. At the outset of the case it was admitted that this Court has jurisdiction. The Police have given evidence and now to say that the jurisdiction is in the Chinese Court is preposterous. This Court has fully considered and matter and has taken jurisdiction. It is no disparagement on the Chinese Court but the matter is a very serious one and I feel sure that the true facts of the case will not come out. I would rather the Court consider this matter and not decide right away. We want justice and justice only. I submit therefore that the question of jurisdiction has already been settled and that we should have the case heard in this Court. If the question had not been settled, we could not have proceeded so far in the matter. The fact that the fight occurred on board a foreign ship, even though it was in Chinese territory, and that the foreign officers were assaulted and severely beaten, does not alter the circumstances or show that the case should be tried by the Chinese Court.

The Assessor (to Superintendent Woodfield)—Have you had any previous cases of this nature?

Superintendent Woodfield—Not in the four months that I have been in the River Police.

Is there any record of arrests made on board ships of foreign nationality?—That I could not say off hand.

What do you do in case you wish to make an arrest on a foreign ship—We can't go aboard any foreign ship without being called by the police flag or by invitation. In such cases we go and ask which jurisdiction the ship is under. When the name of a consulate is given we go there and get authority from the consular authorities to act on board the ship. A vice-consul generally accompanies us. If a theft occurred on board a foreign ship with extraterritorial rights the complainants would have the right to have the case tried in this Court.

Mr. Allan submitted that the ship was flying the Panama flag and had received clearance papers from the American Consulate.

The Assessor stated that the Court would adjourn the case to consider the request of the Chinese authorities. The bail would be reduced from $300 to $100 shop security each.

Mr. R. G. McDonald (for the defence)—The accused cannot afford the money at this time of the year. They have none. Can a guild stand as security? Accused have been in custody for a fortnight already.

Deputy Superintendent Woodfield stated that he was afraid that the men might find jobs and go away. The guild was prepared to offer a small bail.

The Assessor observed that accused were not Shanghai men, and the decision would have to stand.

We are asked to state in connexion with the case that the captain of the steamer is not a Norwegian subject (as stated previously), but a German citizen, and that the Norwegian Vice-Consul did not accompany the Deputy Superintendent of River Police on board the steamer on the day of the fracas.

THE CANTON STRIKE LEADER

Mixed Court Case Against Seamen's Union Official Pardoned by Dr. Sun

The case of Dzung Bing-sung (Chen Ping-sung), ex-President of the Chinese Seamen's Union, was mentioned again in the Mixed Court on Wednesday. Accused was charged with obtaining goods by means of false pretences, passing worthless cheques whilst well-knowing that he had no money in the bank. Det.-Sgt. Tinkler, informed the Bench that accused had absconded, but that an accountant in his office had been arrested.

Mr. Maitland (prosecuting), stated that, in asking the Court to make an expulsion order against the accused man Dzung, he would outline the man's career. Dzung was the instigator of a number of seamen's strikes and, after leaving Hongkong, went to Canton where he murdered his wife and a policeman and wounded a number of other people. For this he was sentenced, in 1922, to 20 years' imprisonment, but was pardoned by Dr. Sun Yat-sen when he got back into power. Dzung then went to Hongkong, where an order of deportation was made against him for a period of 10 years because the Colonial authorities found that he was a desperate character and a menace to the peace and good order of the Colony. Counsel would therefore ask that an expulsion order be made against him by the Mixed Court so that he would not be permitted to reside here any longer.

The Court, in granting Mr. Maitland's application, said that the warrant against accused would stand, but, if he were found in the Settlement again, he would be tried on the charges of false pretences and, if found guilty, have to serve his sentence, after which he would be expelled from the Settlement.

In the case against the accountant, who was charged with aiding and abetting, Det.-Sgt. Tinkler stated that the Police or counsel for the prosecution did not object to bail, which was accordingly fixed at $600.

The cash bail of $600, put up by Dzung, who has since absconded, was ordered to be forfeited.

Railway Companies' Statement of Their Attitude: The Mileage Basis

London, Jan. 29.

In the terms of settlement of the railway strike the railway companies declare that they never contended that the decisions of the Wages Board were obligatory, but they were justified in giving effect to them. The companies are prepared to alleviate the hardship, which, the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen represented, would have been involved by the decision, to drivers and firemen on a ... basis so that 130 miles ... equal on day's pay, but the ... will be increased to 140 ...July and 150 in January, 1925, ...s in the interval it shall be agreed otherwise.

The companies undertake that there will be no dismissals arising out of the application of the decision. All the strikers presenting themselves for work within a reasonable time will be reinstated as soon as practicable without reference to seniority.

The signatories agree to use every endeavour to secure that all the railwaymen shall work together amicably. Any proved breach of this condition will be a case for disciplinary action by the companies.

Threatened Strike of Dockers.

Following the settlement of the railway dispute, a dockers' strike is now threatened.

A national delegate conference of the Transport-Workers' Union took place in London to-day. One hundred and twenty thousand dockers were represented by delegates from all over the country. It was decided to instruct members to strike on February 16 in all ports in Great Britain unless in the meantime a satisfactory settlement of the wages dispute is reached.

The dockers demand an increase of two shillings a day and that they shall be guaranteed a week's work or pay in order to meet the problem of casual labour. The employers say that they cannot afford to pay the increase demanded, which would cost £2,000,000 a year, in view of the depression in the shipping industry.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 28.

A new transport crisis is threatened by the dockers who are not disposed to accept the decision of the employers that they are unable in the present condition of trade to concede any increase in wages. The Bristol branch of the Transport-Workers' Union has instructed its representatives at the delegate conference of transport-workers to-morrow to urge further negotiation with the employers and if the latter refuse, to request the Union to call a national stoppage of work.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 30.

The Council of Port Labour Employers have accepted the proposals of the Transport and General Workers' Union for a conference to discuss the dockers' threat to go on strike.—Reuter.

BRITISH RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

Mission Immediately to Be Sent to Moscow to Arrange Resumption of Relations

London, Jan. 25.

It is stated that the Government are immediately sending a mission to Moscow headed by Captain James O'Grady, M.P., to arrange for the resumption of full diplomatic relations.

Captain O'Grady is the prospective Ambassador at Moscow.—Reuter.

Washington, Jan. 26.

Britain's recognition of Russia will, in the opinion of President Coolidge, have less bearing on the attitude of the United States towards Russia than the investigation of the question of Soviet recognition which the Senate Foreign Committee is conducting.—Reuter's American Service.

Stock Exchange Strong

London, Jan. 25.

The Stock Exchange was strong to-day under the lead of gilt-edged securities and the growing confidence in the political outlook, together with the speeches of the chairmen at the meetings of the leading banks, buying emanating from London and the provinces. Consols are quoted at 56¼ and War Loan at 100.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 30.

It is understood that conversations are still in progress with regard to relations between Britain and Russia, but there is at present no question of sending a mission to Russia.—Reuter.

BRITISH LABOUR AND SWARAJ

Indian Nationalists Clearly Resolved to Challenge Trial of Strength

London, Jan. 25.

The full text of the message from Mr. Ramsay Macdonald published in the "Hindu" (Madras) on January 24, in which the Prime Minister pleads for reason and goodwill between India and Great Britain, has been received by Reuter's Agency.

It is dated January 6. The message emphasizes Mr. Macdonald's conviction that progress, if it is to be well-rooted, can only be carried on constitutionally. He can see no hope in India if it becomes the arena of a struggle between constitutionalism and revolution.—Reuter.

Delhi, Jan. 25.

Mr. Patel, a Swarajist, has given notice of a series of resolutions in the Legislative Assembly urging on the Government a boycott of British Empire goods and the imposition of an extra 15 per cent. tariff on Empire goods as a protest against the treatment of Indians overseas.—Reuter.

Russian Plots in India.

Calcutta, Jan. 25.

In spite of Government opposition, the Bengal Legislature today carried by 76 votes to 45 a Swarajist resolution urging the release of 17 men detained without trial.

Sir. H. L. Stephenson said that the existence of a revolution conspiracy proved that ordinary law was unavailing. The Government were aware that revolutionaries had established centres in various parts of the Province in the guise of philanthropic organizations and some of the leaders of the movement were in touch with the agents of the Third Moscow Internationale, who supplied money and arms. The revolutionaries possessed weapons and ammunition which could not be procured in India. The existence of a definite plot to assassinate police officers was discovered last year and the Government considered action imperative.

A crowded meeting of Indians this evening passed a resolution condemning the murder of Mr. Day, who was shot dead in the street by a Bengalee on January 12 in mistake for the Commissioner of policy.—Reuter.

Delhi, Jan. 30.

The ceremony of taking the oath of allegiance by the new Legislative Assembly passed off smoothly. Swarajists all wore Indian-made clothes and made the prescribed affirmation in low voices. There were remarkably few absentees. The Viceroy will open the session on January 31.—Reuter.

PORT SAID, Jan. 24. The Dutch steamer Vondel, from Batavia to Amsterdam, collided in port today with the British steamer Padua, from the Tees to Yokohama, which was en route to her moorings. The damage to the former was slight and she is proceeding on her voyage. The damage to the latter was all above the top deck. She expects to sail on Sunday.—Reuter.

ITALY'S PARLIAMENT DISSOLVED

Fascists Wooing Favour in Southern Italy: Treaty with Serbia Signed

Rome, Jan. 23.

The Council of Ministers at its meeting this morning approved the decree for the King's signature authorizing the dissolution of Parliament, with memorandum attached prepared by Premier Mussolini stating that the internal and foreign policy of the Government had met with unanimous approval.

The ten weeks' intensive election campaign which Italy is entering will be devoted by Signor Mussolini to wooing favour in southern Italy where Fascism has not been so popular as in other parts of the country.

To mark the occasion of the signature of the treaty between Italy and Serbia the King will give a dinner next Saturday at the Quirinal to which the Serbian delegates MM. Pasitch and Nintchitch, Premier Mussolini, Minister of War Diaz and Admiral Thaon de Reval will be invited.

The Latin Entente.

To-day's meeting of the Cabinet Council decided to despatch Signor Guirati, a Venetian M.P., to South America as Extraordinary Ambassador for the Latin Crusade. He will embark in the steamer Italia, which is preparing to sail for South American ports with exhibits of Italian manufactures, arts, crafts, produce, literature, and Latin propaganda, the King having already consented to Signor Guirati's appointment.

Originally the Italia had been fixed to sail at the end of December, but her departure was postponed in order that the organization for the crussade be rendered more complete. The crusade is timed to coincide with the visit of the Crown Prince to South America in March and April. His Royal Highness will travel on a warship. The crusade has aroused enthusiasm throughout Italy which has a deep sentimental interest in South America.—Italian Wireless through Reuter.

The Premier Demanding Proof of Nation's Confidence

Rome, Jan. 25.

A decree has been published dissolving Parliament and fixing the elections for April 6.

On December 10 the Cabinet unexpectedly decided to prorogue Parliament, when it was explained that Signor Mussolini considered it beneath his dignity to accept an offer of full authority from an Assembly which did not enjoy the confidence of the nation, preferring to prorogue.—Reuter.

RUSSIAN POLITICAL COMPLEXITIES

The Difficulty of Finding a Suitable Successor to M. Lenin

Warsaw, Jan. 27.

Despatches from Moscow report that a complex political situation has arisen from the death of M. Lenin. The Bolshevik chiefs are said to be squabbling behind the scenes, while M. Trotsky is said to be in disgrace.

M. Dzerzinski, who is in charge of M. Lenin's funeral arrangements, has come to the forefront. He is said to be strong-willed and fanatical and to be feared by the moderates, who are urging the factions to drop their quarrels and coalesce in order to solve domestic and foreign questions, especially in view of the early recognition of the Soviet by foreign Powers. This tendency favours M. Trotsky, without whom no reconciliation of the factions would be real or lasting. The military are also likely to side with M. Trotsky in the event of a reconciliation.

M. Kalinin, President of the Executive Committee, will probably become President of the Council of Commissaries in succession to M. Lenin as he is not regarded as belonging to any faction, but at present M. Kameneff or M. Stalin are regarded as likely successors to M. Lenin if it should be decided to replace him by one man instead of a triumvirate.—Reuter.

Warsaw, Jan. 28.

It is reported from Moscow that there is great unrest in the Army, partly in consequence of the death of M. Lenin. Barracks have become a scene of political disputation and lack of discipline is manifest. It is added that the central authorities are alarmed and are sending suspected battalions to the furthermost provinces of Siberia. The garrison at Moscow has been reinforced by troops from the Western frontiers.—Reuter.

ITALY'S TREATY WITH JUGOSTAVIA

Rome, Jan. 26.

Premier Pasitch and Minister of Foreign Affairs Mintchitch of Jugo-Slavia arrived in Rome today to sign the treaty of friendship with Italy. Throughout their journey though Italy they received demonstrations of sympathy. On arrival at the station in Rome they were received by Premier Mussolini and almost the entire Cabinet with great cordiality and friendliness. They will remain in Rome until Monday as the guests of the Italian Government. The treaty will not be signed until Sunday, several minor points still having to be settled by a committee of experts.

Signor Mussolini's settlement of the Fiume question, which has been dragging on for the past five years, and the treaty of friendship with Jugo-Slavia continue to be most favourably commented upon, being considered Premier Mussolini's most brilliant diplomatic success.

Public opinion has undergone a radical charge, for up to a few days ago Jugo-Slavia was looked upon as Italy's arch-enemy. There is now, however, a marked disposition to collaborate in peace and harmony. Nor should this change cause surprise, for, with the exception of Fiume, no reason for antagonism existed between the two nations. Now that the Fiume question has been settled to mutual satisfaction no outstanding problem separates Italy and Jugo-Slavia.

The Annexation of Fiume.

By the present agreement Italy annexes Fiume, which has been one of her fondest aspirations, for which her politicians have striven unsuccessfully for five years. By the treaty of friendship she gains security on her Eastern border, leaving her free to turn her attention to other problems. She also counterbalances the predominant position which France obtained with the Little Entente Powers by her treaty of alliance with Czecho-Slovakia, and which created more than a little apprehension in Italy.

All Italy's reasons for satisfaction at this settlement apply also to Jugo-Slavia. The latter gains security and peace and by the disappearance of a cause of unsettlement and unrest can now rest secure within her borders.

The Benefit to Fiume.

The chief gainer is probably the city of Fiume itself, which had imperative need for settlement of the question one way or another. Fiume is a seaport and depends upon traffic for its life. Unsettled conditions had discouraged ships from putting into that "Martyred city," as D'Annunzio called it. This reduced the city to the last stages of poverty. It is now hoped that with the definite settlement of its status commerce may again flow into Fiume, restoring its former prosperity.

Feather in Premier's Cap.

Premier Mussolini's diplomatic success is destined to have great influence on the success of his party in the general elections, which are now only about two months distant. Much of the criticism of Signor Mussolini's actions as Premier of Italy was directed against his foreign policy, the Opposition claiming that in his year of power he had not obtained more than any other Government would have done. His understanding with Jugo-Slavia has, therefore, greatly strengthened his position with the electors, while his understanding with Russia which, unless the negotiations should suffer condeath of Lenin, should be announced shortly, will strengthen it still more.—Italian Wireless through Reuter.

Rome, Jan. 28.

According to the newspapers, the Italo-Jugo-Slav Treaty of Friendship stipulates reciprocal neutrality in case of war and also, at Jugo-Slavia's request, provides for co-operation in economic and military defence, thereby giving a special character to relations between Italy and Jugo-Slavia in all political problems in Central Europe and the Balkans.

Later.

The Jugo-Slav mission was entertained to a banquet last night at the Venezia Palace. Signor Mussolini, toasting M. Pasitch, the Jugo-Slav Premier, said that the Treaty just concluded closed a tempestuous period in post-war history. Henceforward the economic, political and spiritual collaboration of Italy and Jugo-Slavia would constitute an essential element of European peace.

There were remarkable scenes of enthusiasm at Fiume. Church bells were rung, the sirens of ships sounded and the inhabitants held torchlight processions. The Governor-General and other dignitaries addressed the crowd, congratulating them on Italy's retention of Fiume and exhorting them to let bygones be bygones.—Reuter.

Prospects of a Commercial Agreement

Rome, Jan. 27.

Premier Mussolini achieved today what is probably his greatest diplomatic triumph so far with the signature of the Treaty with Jugo-Slavia, definitely annexing Fiume to Italy and establishing relations of friendship between the two countries. Signor Mussolini signed for Italy and Premier Pasitch and Foreign Minister Nintchitch for Jugo-Slavia. After the simple but impressive ceremony of signature the three statesmen congratulated each other on the solution of the problem, which had appeared insoluble and which constituted one of the gravest dangers to the peace of Europe.

Italian newspapers, commenting on the signature of the Treaty, point out that it confutes those who seized the slightest pretext to accuse Signor Mussolini and Italy of imperialistic designs and of attempting to settle the Fiume question by other than peaceful means. At the time these accusations were being made, Signor Mussolini was amicably discussing the question with Jugo-Slavia, and leading to the present friendly understanding with the country.

An Interchange of Exports.

Great as are the results of this treaty with Jugo-Slavia, Italy hopes for still more from the commercial treaty. Commercial relations are sure forerunners of political understandings and it is hoped that Italy's commercial relations with Jugo-Slavia will be close and mutually profitable. Italy exports chiefly manufactured articles, while Jugo-Slavia exports chiefly agricultural produce, and each country needs the exports of the other. The two countries do not clash as competitors in European markets. Their products complete each other.

Great demonstrations are being organized in Rome and other Italian cities on Tuesday to celebrate the union of Fiume with Italy. In Rome the demonstration will take the form of a grand parade of Fascisti and a ceremony at the tomb of the unknown soldier.

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

BRITAIN'S FOREIGN POLICY

Interview with the Premier: Anglo-French Entente and German Reparations

Paris, Jan. 27.

Interviewed by the "Quotidien," the organ of the left bloc, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, the British Premier, declared that British public opinion was uneasy with regard to French policy. The two peoples at heart were very friendly. The dangerous clouds to-day were due to mutual misunderstanding which frank and sympathetic explanations would clear up. The reparations expert committees would not be able to find a satisfactory solution within the narrow limits laid down. If the committees desired greater latitude and France refused, Britain would probably negotiate with them.

The question of the French debt to Britain could not be broached without discussing the whole European situation simultaneously.

As regards the Anglo-French Guarantee Pact the Socialists did not believe that the safety of a nation should depend on armaments and alliances. The British Government would work for the admission of Germany and Russia to the League of Nations. Germany's entry into the League would be the best guarantee for the safety of France.

New International Policy.

An entirely new international policy ought to be inaugurated and the prejudices and tricks of old diplomacy abandoned. Mr. Macdonald refused to believe that they would fail to establish a friendly entente with France. He was relying on the good sense and peaceful intentions of the French people to support the policy of Labour in delivering Europe from hatreds and fears. Labour would follow a policy favouring accession to power of the German democrats, who were certainly sincerely pacifist and disposed to pay reparations.

The Separatist Movement, if spontaneous, did not concern Britain, but Labour, the British Premier declared, would not recognize any Separatist government engineered by a foreign Power.—Reuter.

Early Problems at the Foreign Office.

London, Jan. 28.

Reviewing the results of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's activities at the Foreign Office last week, the diplomatic correspondent of the "Westminster Gazette" says that the Prime Minister found the question of recognition of Russia not quite so simple as it appeared.

Moscow, without repudiating her financial obligations, argues that she must first be placed in a position of political equality. This will probably be conceded but cessation of anti-British propaganda will certainly be the preliminary condition for recognition.

The correspondent says that the Government is likely to put some very plain questions to M. Poincaré arising out of the report of Mr. R. H. Clive, the British Consul-General at Munich, on the situation in the Palatinate, which is a scathing indictment of the French policy of fomenting the separatist movement. The Government is prepared to appeal to the International Court of Justice for restitution in accordance with the Versailles Treaty. France will be asked to abandon the Rhineland policy against the British zone.—Reuter.

BRITISH PREMIER AND REPARATIONS

Government's Policy of Restoring Europe and Re-establishing Co-operation

London, Jan. 28.

Reuter's Agency learns that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald was interviewed by the "Quotidien" prior to his assuming office as Prime Minister and he has given no interviews to the press since he assumed office. This does not imply that the general lines of his policy differ from those foreshadowed in the interview, but obviously their development must be a question of time. The questions of Russia, Anglo-French relations, reparations, etc., must be developed very carefully and in a very liberal spirit, always with a view to the Government's policy of restoring Europe and re-establishing universal co-operation.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 28.

Commenting on Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's interview in the "Quotidien," the "Echo" says that the British Premier asks everything without promising France anything.

The "Echo de Paris" declares that Mr Macdonald is at present very cautious, but he must sooner or later vote in favour of methods in regard to reparations very difficult to reconcile with the policy of the French and Belgian Governments and violent rupture is thus possible.—Reuter.

COLONIAL SECRETARY AND DOMINIONS

Australia Day Celebrated at Anzac Luncheon: Pride in the Empire

London, Jan. 28.

The Anzac luncheon was held to-day, Australia Day, at the Hotel Cecil. The Prince of Wales was the guest. Sir Joseph Cook, the Commonwealth High Commissioner, presided and Mr. J. H. Thomas and the Duke of Devonshire, the new and old Secretaries of State for the Colonies, were present.

A cablegram was read from Dr. Earle Page, the Acting Prime Minister of Australia, saying that Australia desired to continue to stand shoulder to shoulder with her sister Dominions and the Motherland to preserve intact the Empire whose existence offered the best hope for the future of the world.

Sir Joseph Cook declared that Australia re-affirmed her loyalty to the Crown and was determined to continue to be a buttress of the Empire and never a burden on it.

The Prince of Wales paid tributes to the services to the Empire of Mr. W. F. Massey, the Prime Minister of New Zealand, and to the straight statesmanship of Mr S. M. Bruce, the Australian Prime Minister. He said that he could not see too much of the Empire. He hoped that this year would see the fulfilment of his task of seeing all the Dominions when he sailed for South Africa on May 1. He was looking forward to his visit to South Africa as much as to any.

Pride in the Empire.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, the new Colonial Secretary, related that when he first visited the Colonial Office last Tuesday with all the humility and modesty characterizing his party, the porter asked him whom he wanted to see. Mr. Thomas said that he [illegible] the Colonial Secretary. The [illegible] turned to another porter and said "Another shell shock patient." (Loud laughter.)

Mr. Thomas said he was proude of the Empire than ever. A spirit of loyalty prevailed [illegible] Many were appalled [illegible] Labour Government, but [illegible] Wales and the King [illegible] the home authorities [illegible] and love of Empire were a service and a duty, and not the monopoly of a class or creed, because they recognized that there were men of humble birth and denied a Varsity education whose sense of duty and patriotism were equal to that of any other type of man; because they were not unmindful that during the war the Empire was preserved by the man from the slum as well as the man from the palace recognizing their common duty. If in the hour of trial all sections could unite to defend the right, all sections could be trusted to do the right thing at any given moment. Therefore the great change in the Government merely meant that the old country and the old Empire would continue.

A Characteristic Spirit.

When he succeeded to office, Mr. Thomas continued, the Duke of Devonshire had unhesitatingly placed all his experience at his disposal. That was characteristic of the spirit which made them proud of their country and feel that it would survive all changes and difficulties. He hoped that their successors would be able to say that they, as pioneers, did nothing to weaken the great Empire of which all were proud. The British Constitution, so broad and democratic, which enabled an engine-cleaner of yesterday to be a Minister to-day, must be preserved and the Empire maintained (loud cheers).

The Duke of Devonshire said that if he and his colleagues criticized it would only be because they were all anxious to arrive at the best possible solution. They were prepared to use every possible effort to further the development and prosperity of the Empire.—Reuter.

GOVERNMENT'S EMPIRE POLICY

Inspiring Statement by Colonial Secretary: Labour's Desire to Dominions' Welfare

London, Jan. 29.

Mr. J. H. Thomas received Empire journalists at the Colonial Office to-day and outlined the Government's Empire policy. He deprecated the idea that there would be rash and violent changes making for a new Jerusalem. The Government had the idea of a new Jerusalem, but they only desired to advance by reasonable and prudent steps.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies emphasized that the Labour Party was as patriotic as any other and desired to promote the welfare of the Empire and to draw the ties closer by fair dealing. Labour regarded it as a sacred trust, which the Party would exercise and develop impartially and freely.

Mr. Thomas expressed good will towards all parts of the Empire. He was genuinely anxious that when he relinquished office, nobody would be able to say that the Empire was less great as a result of the work of the Labour Government.

Many Matters Pending.

Replying to questions, the Colonial Secretary said that he had not yet had time to study many questions, but it was madness to assume that he would accept all his predecessor did or be able to tear up all he had done. All questions must be considered.

As regards Singapore, a statement would be made by the Cabinet.

As regards Empire development, it had already been decided that it could be developed, and unemployment at home would be helped by the expenditure of money, though it might not show an immediate return.

The Cabinet must consider the resolutions of the Imperial Conference. He was unable to add to the Prime Minister's statement, which would be rigidly adhered to.

As regards Kenya, the Government would discharge their trust to the African natives and would very probably follow the policy outlined in the White Paper.

[illegible] Mr. Thomas's statement [illegible] by Mr. Thomas was to the [illegible] the Imperial Conference would be submitted [illegible] vote of the House of Commons. Pledges so far as they had been made, would be carried out and the House given a full opportunity of deciding the important issues raised.—Ed.

Singapore Scheme Modified.

Jan. 30.

The "Daily News" learns that the Admiralty is prepared to make important modifications in the Singapore scheme. One alternative is to enlarge the existing dry-dock so as to take any British warship. The other, which the paper advances as cheaper and more practicable, is to send to Singapore one of the monster floating docks surrendered by Germany. The larger one has recently been repaired and strengthened. The dock could traverse the Suez Canal. Dredging operations would be necessary at Singapore. The Admiralty at the same time intend to press for the erection of new workshops, naval magazines and oil tanks.—Reuter.

MR. MACDONALD TO M. POINCARE

Frank Statement of Britain's Misgivings and Desire for Friendly Relations

London, Jan. 30.

The "Daily Telegraph's" political observer gives the gist of a letter, stated to be remarkably straightforward, which was despatched by Mr. Ramsay Macdonald to M. Poincaré on his assumption of office. The communication points out that relations between Britain and France have ceased to be as friendly as formerly. British public opinion views French policy with a certain degree of suspicion and is nervous about the European situation. Mr. Macdonald invites M. Poincaré to meet him half-way in the attempt to achieve a final settlement.

Paris, Jan. 30.

The Government have proposed to Britain that questions relating to the maintenance of public order and the security of the occupation troops in the Palatinate shall be submitted to the Conference of Ambassadors. The Government also favour reinstatement of the German officials whom the Separatists expelled. Belgium has acquiesced in these proposals.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 30.

It has been officially confirmed that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald sent a private letter to M. Poincaré, couched in a very friendly tone, expressing the hope that the serious differences between Britain and France would soon be satisfactorily settled. No reply has up to the present been received from M. Poincaré, but this is not surprising as the letter was only despatched a day or two ago.—Reuter.

THE RAILWAY STRIKE IN BRITAIN

Threat to Extend Movement to London Tubes: Coal Mines Suffering Greatly

London, Jan. 25.

While the negotiations to end the railway strike are apparently at a deadlock, a number of men belonging to the National Union of Railwaymen, who had joined the strikers, are returning to work at various places, notably at Hull, where 300 decided to resume their duties after a five-hour meeting, the voting in favour of resumption being 122 to 37. Some of the members of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen are also said to be resuming work.

A further hopeful sign is that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald has instructed the Ministry of Labour to inquire into the strike and report to the Cabinet.

Meanwhile practically all the collieries in South Wales are now idle and all the tinplate and steel works are closing down.

Jan. 26.

The only change in the railway situation is in the nature of a hint expressed by Mr. B[illegible] the Secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, that develop[illegible] are possible during the week-end. This is generally taken to mean that the executive of the Society is considering an attempt to extend the strike to the tubes and underground railways of London. Such a step will seriously aggravate the situation and bring matters to a head.

In the meantime considerable improvement is reported in travelling facilities. Trains are running faster and more frequent. Milk and other food supplies are well maintained. Industrial centres, nevertheless, continue to feel the effects badly. Peace efforts will informally continue in responsible circles but the time is not yet considered ripe for Government intervention.

Looking for a Formula.

Jan. 27.

There are no fresh developments with regard to the railway strike but it is understood that the Mediatory Council of the Trades Union Congress is pursuing efforts to devise a formula acceptable to both sides which will enable a new conference to be held without actually setting aside the findings of the National Wages Board.

The executive of the National Union of Railwaymen apparently attach little importance to the hint of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen that the London underground drivers, of whom an overwhelming majority are members of the N.U.R., will come out.—Reuter's Correspondent of Police.—Reuter.

Negotiations Now Proceeding Satisfactorily

London, Jan. 27.

Fresh hopes of a settlement of the railway dispute have been raised by an interview of the Trades Union Mediation Committee with the railway managers, to whom the Committee submitted a formula which, it is understood, the executive of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen had previously approved.

Later.

Mr. John Bromley, the secretary of the Associated Society, arriving late at a meeting of locomotive men at Willesden this evening after a conference with the railway managers, announced that he brought good news. Negotiations were proceeding which, he was confident, would result in many of the points objected to very shortly being non-existent. He emphasized the importance of the men holding on for the next few hours.

Hopes of a Settlement.

London, Jan. 28.

The prospects of an early settlement of the railway strike are regarded as having brightened considerably as a result of yesterday's peace efforts. After the mediation committee of the Trades Union Congress had visited the managers, a joint conference was held at a London hotel between the mediation committee, the managers and the executives of the National Union of Railwaymen, the Railway Clerks' Association and the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Fireman, which lasted five and a half hours, when it was adjourned until this morning.—Reuter.

Settlement Reached

London, Jan. 29.

The negotiations with the railway managers not having up to the present produced tangible results, the secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen this evening declared that his executive were considering intensifying the fight.

The railway strike is settled.

Later.

THE NAVAL BASE AT SINGAPORE

Proposal to Use Surrendered German Floating Dock: Premature Reports

London, Jan. 25.

Reuter has been officially informed that the report that the Government has decided to abandon the Singapore scheme is quite untrue. The question has not even been discussed.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 30.

The report published in the "Daily News" that a German floating dock surrendered to Britain under the Peace Treaty would be towed to Singapore in order to obviate the necessity of constructing a new dock is described in official circles as being at least premature.

Well-informed quarters are of opinion that it is possible that an attempt will be made to tow the dock to Singapore, although it is realized that it would be a very difficult task and that, anyhow, the necessary preparations for the reception of the dock at Singapore would take a considerable time to complete. Inquiries at the Admiralty have elicited the information that the matter is still under consideration.

Later.

Reuter's Agency has been informed that the statements published with regard to Singapore or any Government decision in connexion with the proposed naval base are pure imagination. Up to the present the Cabinet has not even discussed the matter.—Reuter.

DYNASTIC QUESTION IN GREECE

Warm Welcome to M. Venizelos in National Assembly: The Suggestion of a Republic

Athens, Jan. 24.

The National Assembly met yesterday evening. The galleries were crowded and the Royal Box was thrown open to the people unable to find seats in the galleries.

M. Venizelos was received with tremendous applause. He stated that the Government was of opinion that the only means of solving the dynastic question was a plebiscite.

This declaration aroused protests from the Republicans. M. Papanastassiou proposed Bills to overthrow the dynasty and establish a republic.

M. Venizelos, interrupting, said that, if the people were allowed to choose their own régime and favoured a republic, he would tell the people that there was no occasion to fear external dangers in connexion with the dynastic question.—Reuter.

THE LATE M. LENIN

Cause of Death: Monumental Funeral Projected

Riga, Jan. 25.

A post-mortem examination has established the cause of M. Lenin's death as arterio-sclerosis of the brain, apparently inherited from his father who died at the same age of the same disease.

M. Lenin's body has been embalmed. An uninterrupted procession of people is passing before the bier. The grave is being prepared in the Red Square beside the monument commemorating the fifth anniversary of the Russian Revolution.

The Diplomatic Corps have been invited to attend the funeral on Saturday and to present a joint wreath.—Reuter.

THE GERMAN SEAMEN'S STRIKE

1,200 Men Now Out: German Shipowners Forbidden to Negotiate

London, Jan. 30.

Mr. Havelock Wilson, on behalf of the National Sailors' and Firemen's Union, has telegraphed to the Prime Minister pointing out that 1,200 German seamen from German vessels have gone on strike at United Kingdom ports against the low wage of £3 a month as compared with £9 paid by shipowners in Britain and by other nations.

The German Government have forbidden German shipowners to negotiate with representatives of the German seamen and German ships are leaving British ports seriously under-manned, endangering other vessels trading in British waters. German captains have been making false declarations to the British Customs authorities with regard to their crews and cases have been reported to the Board of Trade, but the Government have taken no action to prevent infringement of the law, which the Union urges should be impartially applied.—Reuter.

Sir A. Geddes's Clean Slate: Debateable Point in Liquor Treaty

New York, Jan. 26.

Sir Auckland Geddes, the retiring British Ambassador, before his departure for England to-day expressed satisfaction at leaving "a clean slate" at the Embassy.

Replying to a request to interpret the clause of the liquor treaty "an hour's steaming distance from American shores" he said that one should be enabled to tell by the speed of the boat engine. If doubt existed tests could be made and averages struck.

Sir Auckland Geddes was the recipient of unusual honours. As the Aquitania steamed down the Bay, soldiers on Governor's Island fired a salute of twenty-one guns, Sir Auckland meanwhile standing at attention.—Reuter's American Service.

Unemployment was happily diminishing.

Railway construction proposals included electrification of certain lines in Natal and the Cape Province and the building of a line in North Zululand in order to open up a large tract where cotton-growing was successfully proceeding.—Reuter.

New York, Jan. 30.

A jury to-day convicted William H. Anderson, the New York State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, on both counts of an indictment charging him with forgery in the third degree. This scandal divided public interest with the oil scandal.

Anderson, who was the moving spirit of the Anti-Saloon League possessing almost autocratic powers, testifying on his own behalf, told an amazing story of how a mysterious stranger whose name he thought was King, some years ago gave him $25,000. He used the money for purposes of the League and subsequently recompensed himself out of the funds of the League and incidentally made the entries in the books which formed the subject of the charge.—Reuter.

RUSSO-ITALIAN TRADE RELATIONS

Soviet Government's Desire for Early Recognition: Italy's Attitude Favourable

Rome, Uan. 27.

A Note was received yesterday from Moscow in which the Soviet Goverment call upon Italy quickly to decide whether or not she will officially recognize the Soviet Goverment. The point at issue between the two countries is Italy demands an assurance from Russia that for 13 years Russian Imports and exports shall be transported via Triesto irrespective of the destination of the exports, but the Soviet Government wish to limit the assurance to three years, evidently hoping that in time other countries will recognize Russia. Italy, of course, is anxious to restore Trieste to its former prosperity. The "World" learns from Russian official circles here that unless Italy decides shortly all commercial negotiations will break down, including the question with regard to Triesto.

The attitude of Italy is uncertain, especially in view of possible changes at Moscow following the death of Lenin. It is important, however, to refer to a pronouncement made by Premier Mussolini in the Chamber recently on Italo-Russian relations as follows:—

Statement by Signor Mussolini.

"When a year ago I made a statement, the first on Italian foreign policy, I said that our relations with Russia were in a condition of uncertainty and ambiguity. But I am an enemy of ambiguity, and I said at that time that there must be no party prejudice, for the question was one of national interest and importance. When the Fascisti Government assumed power certain circles in Russia displayed a feeling of suspicion and animosity towards us, and there were certain reprisals in the Black Sea. Then followed an exchange of conversations, and the situation improved. When Krassin came to Rome I had a long conference with him. Discussions were initiated with Worowsky and were promising well when Worowsky was murdered at Lausanne.

This murder deferred the discussions for four months, and they have now been resumed with Jordansky. The negotiations have not undergone any political change on the one side or the other, but they are necessarily slow. You must not think that the Russians are in a hurry. They are minute and pedantic, but I admire the minute pedantry of these zealous defenders of Russian interests. Consequently, if we wish to conclude a commercial treaty which will really benefit our country, we must follow their example and not display too great haste.

"The negotiations are proceeding satisfactorily. There has, however, been an interruption, owing to some elements of a purely objective character. It is useless to discuss what the Cheka is, and what transformation, social or economic, it has brought to Russia. That is a Russian internal matter, but, as a matter of fact, it seems that, although the monopoly of internal trade has been abolished, that of foreign trade is still affected. This creates some difficulties.

"Another question to be considered is the damages suffered by Italians in Russia. The spiritual relations between the countries are excellent, and I will perhaps astonish the Chamber by saying that, during the Corfu affair, of the European press only that in Moscow was kind to us.

A Concrete Equivalent Needed.

"The question of the recognition of the Soviet Government is a screen behind which the Soviets are endeavouring to hide realities. From my viewpoint it is more advantageous to have a fully accredited Ambassador with all the usages which regulate international relations than a representation of an uncertain nature. Referring to the recognition de jure of the Soviet Government, I declare that there is no difficulty in that from the Fascisti Government. The question must be put in terms of frank and free national utility. Is it useful or not for our expansion, for the welfare of the Italian people? I reply, Yes, naturally when one negotiates problems of foreign policy on the basis of national utility the indispensable condition is the "do ut des." I, Italy, I, the Italian Government, giving a proof of unprejudiced policy, recognize your Government. I bring you again into the political and diplomatic circles, but you, Russia, must give me a concrete equivalent, give an advantageous commercial treaty, give concessions of war materials which Italy greatly needs. If Russia agrees to this, if Russia gives us what we ask, the current negotiations will no doubt have a successful issue. I do not say, I cannot say, when the agreement will be concluded, for as I say again there are still some difficulties of an objective nature dealing with the general situation and the difference of our two economies. But the Italian Government has the good will to complete it and, if this good will exists among the members of the Russian Government also, as some Socialist deputies have declared, the Italo-Russian commercial treaty will no doubt be signed soon.—Italian Wireless through Reuter.

GERMAN SEPARATIST MOVEMENT

Schlich the Leader Shot Dead: Threat to Murder British Consul-General

Cologne, Jan. 26.

The separatist leader. Herr Schlich, was shot dead to-day while returning from a propagandist meeting at Adenau. He was hit by eight bullets.

Herr Schlich constituted himself Governor of Eifel during the recent separatist régime and issued seven trillion marks of worthless currency called Schlichgeld which he forced the peasants to accept.—Reuter.

Berlin, Jan. 27.

A telegram from Ludwigshafen to the "Berliner Lokalanzeiger" states that one of the Separatist leaders has threatened that if Mr. R. H. Clive, the British Consul-General at Munich who was recently sent to inquire into the situation in the Palatinate, returns to Munich, he will be murdered because what he has done to the Separatists in the Palatinate cannot be left unrevenged.—Reuter.

An Abandoned Fiasco.

Paris, Jen. 28.

It is understood that the Government has proposed to Britain that the question of the maintenance of order in the Palatinate and the security of the French troops there should be submitted to the Conference of Ambassadors.

The "Temps" admits that the Separatist movements have all been a fiasco and adds that the movement in the Palatinate is apparently to be abandoned.—Reuter.

AMERICAN OIL LEASE SCANDAL

Sensation in Washington: Fall to Be Asked to Explain Doheny's Statement

Washington, Jan. 25.

The testimony of Mr. Doheny, the oil operator, in the Senate has electrified the capital. There was an echo in the House of Representatives to-day when the Naval Committee asked Rear-Admiral Gregory to produce the leases of the oil reserve in order to discover how the Government is using the localties.

The ex-Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Fall, arrived from New Orleans yesterday evening and he will appear before the Committee on Monday when he will be asked to explain the differences between his former testimony and Mr. Doheny's statement. Reuter's American Service.

A Thorough Investigation to Be Held: The President's Determination

Washington, Jan. 27.

President Coolidge has issued a statement that he intends to employ special counsel to prosecute in the naval oil leases case in the courts. "If there is any guilt, it will be punished; if there is any civil liability, it will be enforced; if there is fraud, it will be revealed, and if any contracts are illegal; they will be cancelled. As I understand it men are involved who belong to both political parties, and, having been advised by the Department of Justice that it is in accord with former precedent, I propose to employ special counsel, drawn from both political parties, to bring such actions for the enforcement of the law."

Teapot Dome Revelations.

President Coolidge's statement followed the publication of a manifesto by Mr. Cordell Hull, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, declaring that the Teapot Dome revelations comprised the greatest scandal of this or any other generation and created a new issue for the Presidential election campaign in November.

Senator Johnson, who is regarded as President Coolidge's chief competitor for the Republican nomination, declared emphatically that the oil leases ought to be cancelled without delay.

Ex-Secretary Fall's medical advisers declare that he is ill, that his heart is weak and that he will be unable to testify before the investigating Committee tomorrow.—Reuter's American Service.

Funds for Further Investigation

Washington, Jan. 28.

The House of Representatives Appropriations Committee have reported on a bill providing President Coolidge with a fund of $100,000 to cover the legal costs of any prosecutions necessary in the Teapot Dome case.

The Senate to-day discussed a resolution presented by the Democrat, Senator Walsh, favouring annulment of the naval oil leases. Senator Walsh declared that unless the resignation of Secretary Denby were in the hands of the President by sundown, he would seek the Senate's action to remove the present head of the Navy Department.

Senator Robinson, the Democratic leader, moved a resolution expressing the Senate's view that the President should request the resignation of Secretary Denby and also proposed that President Coolidge should demand the resignations of "other Navy Department officials and officers whose relations with the oil reserve leases indicate malfeasance in office." The motion went over under the rules of the House.—Reuter's American Service.

Secretary Denby's Defence of Action Taken by Navy Department

Washington, Jan. 29.

The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Denby, to-day announced that he had no intention of resigning. He was convinced that his action in connexion with the oil leases was right and he would do the same again regardless of consequences.

Referring to Senator Robinson's resolution in the Senate yesterday, expressing the view that the President should request Mr. Denby's resignation and also the resignations of "other Navy Department officials and officers whose relations with the oil reserve leases indicate malfeasance in office," the Navy Secretary said that he "would like to see the Senator who would vote in favour of a resolution besmirching the character of any man witout according him an opportunity to be heard.

Senator Wheeler proposes to move a resolution in favour of the resignation of the Attorney-General, Mr. Daugherty.—Reuter's American Service.

Mr. Fall Under Surveillance.

Washington, Jan. 29

The Republican, Senator Willis, declared in the Senate to-day that the ex-Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Fall, had been placed under surveillance of Justice Department agents at New Orleans on January 20 with orders "not to permit him to leave the country under the conditions."—Reuter's American Service.

Illness of Ex-Secretary Fall: Leases to be Repudiated

Washington, Jan. 30.

President Coolidge has appointed Mr. Thomas W. Gregory (Democrat), who was Attorney-General under President Wilson, and Mr. Silas H. Strawn (Republican), a prominent Chicago lawyer, as counsel to prosecute the persons concerned in the Teapot Dome Oil case on behalf of the Government.

Ex-Secretary Fall's physicians having testified as to the inadvisability of bringing him to the Capitol to give evidence before the Senate Investigation Committee, it has been decided to appoint four physicians to make an independent examination.

The Senate to-day carried by 46 votes to 38 the resolution by the Democrat, Senator Walsh, repudiating the naval oil leases.—Reuter's American Service.

THE REBELLION IN MEXICO

U. S. Men-of-war to be Recalled from Tampico

Washington, Jan. 24.

Upon the receipt of advices by the State Department that the rebel leaders have definitely and absolutely abandoned the blockade of Tampico, the cruiser Richmond has been ordered to withdraw from Tampico. It is understood that when the salvage work on the wrecked cruiser Tacoma is completed, the cruiser Omaha and the six American destroyers at Vera Cruz will also be recalled.—Reuter's American Service.

Paris, Jan. 24.

The report of M. Bokanowski, the Reporter of the Finance Committee, which was distributed in the Chamber of Deputies to-day, affirms the urgency of the vote of the Government fiscal measures to secure the balancing of the general and special budget of Frs. 6,063,000,000 by a revenue of Frs. 6,234,000,000.

The "Temps" emphasizes that on the ordinary budget of Frs. 23,596,000, balanced without recourse to a loan with Frs. 23,599,000,000 in revenue, figures an annual charge of Frs. 3,500,000,000, representing the interest on part of the loans contracted to supply the place of Germany's defaults.

Paris, Jan. 26.

The Chamber of Deputies has begun the debate on the Government's proposals to strengthen the franc. The debate is expected to last 10 days. The proposals will be hotly fought by the Left bloc in the hope of overthrowing the Government, but the latter's defeat is unlikely.

A Government representative declared that the proposals at the outside mean an increase of the cost of living by four per cent. It is expected that M. Poincaré will endeavour to close the general discussion to-day in order to make room for detailed discussion.

Jan. 27.

The Chamber of Deputies yesday resumed the debate on the Government's financial proposals. Socialists attributed the fall of the franc to the Government's foreign policy. M. Poincaré asserted that an organized campaign existed against the franc with a view to discrediting the French policy which he proceeded firmly to defend.

M. Mermot, the Radical Socialist leader, declared that the recent heavy fall was due to British Conservatives selling sterling and francs to buy dollars. He declared that a Dutch bank had bought 1,000,000 dollars with francs.

A closure was adopted without opposition. Further debate will take place on Monday.—Reuter.

Further Federal Successes: U. S. Men-of-war Remaining at Vera Cruz

Galveston, Tex., Jan. 30.

The Mexican Federal troops have captured Orizaba, and are now advancing on Cordoba. It is reported that several rebel trains have fallen into their hands.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 30.

It is officially reported from Mexico City that 1,500 prisoners were taken when Esperanza fell.

Later

Instructions have been countermanded for the withdrawal of the cruiser Omaha and the six destroyers from Vera Cruz, where they have been ordered to remain until further instructions. It is believed that the change of plans is due to the possibility of conflict between the rebels and the Federals in the vicinity of Vera Cruz and the United States desires to have warcraft in the region to look after American interests.—Reuter's American Service.

El Paso, Jan. 30.

Direct rail communication with Mexico City from the border is again severed. The rebels have dynamited the track and forced a train containing Federal troops to return to the south.—Reuter's American Service.

FRENCH AND CZECHS

Treaty Signed: Declaration of Joint Maintenance of All Peace Terms

Paris, Jan. 25.

The Franco-Czecho-Slovakian Treaty was signed to-day.

The two countries proclaim respect for international engagements, firm desire for the maintenance of peace in Europe and fidelity to obligations as defined in the Peace Treaties.

They declare that they are ready to take concerted action on external questions likely to endanger their security and agree regarding the measures to be taken in the event of peril.

They affirm their adhesion to the political principles contained in Article 88 of the Treaty of St. Germain and their desire to adopt a common policy against any attempt to restore the Hohenzollerns or the Hapsburgs.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 26.

The Franco-Czecho-Slovak treaty of alliance and friendship, which will be published to-morrow, comprises eight articles. The first two provide that the contracting parties shall take action in concert on questions interesting their security and the order established by the treaties and if threatened they will take joint measures. Articles 3 and 4 deal specially with the Treaty of St. Germain and the Hapsburg question. Article 5 deals with the common attitude to be adopted in case of an attempt to restore the Hohenzollerns. Articles 6 and 7 deal with obligatory arbitration in case of litigation, the connexion between the present treaty and those already concluded between the two parties and communication of the treaty to the League of Nations.—French Wireless through Reuter.

THE FRENCH LOAN TO RUMANIA

Other Means Now Being Sought to Tide Over Financial Difficulties

A long and authoritative statement now makes it clear that Rumania has finally renounced her intention of asking the French Government for a loan of Frs. 100,000,000.

It is explained that the inevitable delay involved in the French Parliament voting on the loan compels Rumania to seek other means of tiding over her difficulties, and most orders for war

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE IN BRITAIN

Appalling Outbreak of Most Infectious Cattle Plague Known: Huge Slaughter of Herds

From Our Trade Union Correspondent

Manchester, Dec. 12.

Great Britain is in the grip of one of the most serious outbreaks of foot and mouth disease she has yet experienced. The epidemic started last August and since then 40,000 cattle, 20,000 sheep, and over 20,000 pigs have been slaughtered in infected areas to prevent the spread of the disease. Nearly a million pounds have already been paid by the Government to the farmers in compensation for this wholesale slaughter, and it is reported to be their intention to pursue this drastic method of coping with the evil until 1½ million pounds have been expended.

In November it was thought that the outbreak was under control but a disastrous accident gave it a new lease of life. A consignment of affected animals was sent by rail from Aberdeen to Newcastle and spread the dread disease to all the cattle pens and sidings along the route. Over 150 new outbreaks were definitely traced to this source. Cheshire is now the most affected county and drastic steps are being taken there to stamp out the epidemic. Many famous herds of prize dairy cattle have been slaughtered. All social functions have been cancelled. Roads and foot-paths have been closed. Hunting has been discontinued, and foxes are robbing hen roots in broad daylight. Hundreds of acres of the finest pasture land are denuded of cattle. Here and there tall columns of dense black smoke can be seen disfiguring the landscape and indicating the affected farms. They come from the huge pyres where the diseased cattle are being burnt with coal and wood. Six hundred men are at work in the county, slaughtering and burning, and rifles and revolvers are being used to supplement the usual butchering methods in a desperate effort to stamp the infection out and prevent its further spread.

THE MOST INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

Foot and mouth disease is famous as being the most infectious of all diseases. Farmers say that it can be spread by a hare running from field to field. Some veterinary surgeons believe it can be air-borne by birds. The finest porcelain filters known to science are impotent to prevent the passage of this microscopic virus in fluids. Farmers whose herds are not affected will not enter a room where there is another farmer who has the disease among his cattle. By drinking infected milk a very mild form of the disease can be transmitted to human beings. The policy of wholesale slaughter has not, however, been adopted on grounds of public health. It is purely economic. America stamped the disease out by the same method at the cost of £4,000,000. In France, Spain, and Holland, the disease is endemic and it has cost the first of those countries over £5,000,000 in a single year.

It is not a difficult disease to cure and 90 per cent. of the affected animals could be saved by careful treatment. But the process is slow and the farm a continual danger spot. By slaughtering all the contacts and clearing the farm it is freed from infection and fit for re-stocking in less than three months. The adoption of this policy has reduced our losses from this source to less than £30,000 per annum during the last 30 years.

The disease first manifests itself by superficial ulcers on the hoofs. The animal licks them and the infection is transmitted to the tongue and mouth. Unable to eat, its milk now dries up, and it gets very thin, and unless specially treated dies. If killed in the early stages of the disease the carcase, with the exception of the head, is fit for human consumption. Until a week ago all infected animals were burnt and the contacts were salvaged. As a result of this English meat was greatly reduced in price, although the price of cheese, butter, and milk has been increased. The Ministry of Agriculture has now ordered that only fat stock shall be salvaged, all lean beasts whether contacts, or infected, are to be burnt.

OPINIONS DIVIDED.

There is a great division of opinion among farmers on the wisdom of the Ministry of Agriculture's killing policy. The cleavage, however, is fairly well defined. Farmers possessing fine herds of dairy cattle among whom the disease has appeared are bitterly opposed to their slaughter, and are filling local newspapers with indignant denunciations of the Ministry's action. Farmers whose stock is not yet affected are criticizing the Ministry for their slowness, and demand that herds shall be slaughtered within a few hours of the notification of the disease.

It is evident from this that the Ministry is pursuing the wisest and most far-sighted policy. There are six million cattle, twenty million sheep, and about two and a half million pigs in the United Kingdom. To adopt half-hearted methods of preventing the spread of such a scourge among this vast number would be courting disaster and fatal to our pedigree export trade.

Rumours have been circulated that the disease is being deliberately spread by our enemies with the intention of injuring us commercially, and reducing our supplies of home-grown food. Farmers have alleged that a few days before outbreaks among their stock mysterious strangers have been seen lurking around their farms. It is improbable that there is any truth in these alarmist rumours. Casual wayfarers can often be seen lurking around farms at dusk in the hope of finding shelter for the night.

SPITING THE "SURGEON"

Skull Cemented with Coffee: Brains Put Back with Spoon

An extraordinary story of an Arab whose brains were dashed out by a fall of 40 feet, but who returned to work after three months in hospital, is told in a letter published in the "British Medical Journal."

The man was painting the frame-work of the Ashrafi Lighthouse, in the Red Sea, when he fell on the cement base, striking, in his descent, a dinghy swung out from davits. He landed flat on his back, insensible and apparently dead, with the base of the skull broken.

A piece of the skull bone was found on the cement, and brains with it. The light-keeper gathered up the brains with a spoon," says the writer, "put them back in the skull, and fitted the piece of bone into its place, making a sort of cement of coffee grounds."

The man was then put in a box made of old packing cases, and taken to hospital of Suez. It was found that he had several ribs broken as well, but he was back again at work after three months.

The writer of the letter states that he knew all the persons concerned in his remarkable case.

A London surgeon said that he did not believe the Arab was as seriously injured as the report suggests. "No man with such injuries could survive such primitive treatment," he said.

"The skull of an Arab, like that of the negro races, is thick, but the effect of a smashed skull is the same on all men, black or white. There can be no recovery."

OUR PARIS LETTER

The Suicide of M. Daudet's Son: Alleged Anarchist Plot: Mystery Still Unsolved

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Dec. 6

It is quite a long time since Paris provided an expectant world with one of those sensational affairs in which political passion plays a leading rôle and quite ordinary people find themselves suddenly with leading parts in a drama of absorbing interest. I am bound to admit that some of the best elements are lacking in the present case, inasmuch as the central figure is only a boy, and, so far as we know at present, none of the important strings are pulled by a woman, but of course we can always have a certain amount of expectation that the missing features will be added as the story develops.

The hero of the tragedy is Philippe Daudet, aged 14 years and 10 months, son of M. Léon Daudet, editor of the Royalist organ "L'Alliance Française," who was largely instrumental in exposing the Malvy scandals, and, in addition to being one of the severest critics of the present régime, is a bitter enemy of Socialism in all its degrees. Philippe was not a normal boy by any means. He had a peculiar brain twist, of a kind well known to mental specialists, which impels the subject to get away from his ordinary surroundings and live an entirely different life until the fit passes off. He had twice run away from home without any motive. On one of these occasions he woke up to find himself in a place about 15 miles from Paris, without knowing why or how he had made the journey. On Tuesday, November 20, he left home as usual in the morning to go to school. His parents never saw him again until he was brought home in a coffin on the following Monday.

The first intimation they had was a newspaper paragraph stating that a young man had been found shot in a cab and had died in hospital.

HIS MOTHER'S STRANGE PRESENTIMENT.

Mme. Daudet, seized by a presentiment, asked a friend to go to the hospital, and he identified the young man as Philippe. According to the cabdriver's story, Philippe hailed the cab in the Place de la Bastille and asked to be driven to the Cirque Medrano in the Boulevard Magenta. The driver heard a noise which seemed to him like the breaking of glass. He looked round and saw that his fare was huddled up in a corner of the cab, with blood on his face. He hailed a policeman, who drove with him to the hospital, where the boy soon expired, the bullet having gone right through his head.

Knowing his son's mental trouble, M. Daudet concluded that he had committed suicide in a fit of temporary insanity. A few days after the funeral, Mme. Daudet received a brief farewell letter from her son, in which no allusion was made to his father. This letter was forwarded by Georges Vidal, one of a small group of young fanatics who bring out an Anarchist sheet called the "Libertaire." The Daudets next learned, to their inexpressible surprise and horror, that their son, whom they had always looked upon as being as Royalist as themselves, had spent the last two days of his life in the company of Anarchists—men whom the boy had always been taught to regard with horror and loathing. They at once came to the conclusion that the affair was a dark plot against them.

A CONVERT TO ANARCHY?

The trial of Germaine Berton, the Anarchist girl who shot M. Marius Plateau, of the "Action Française," is to take place shortly, and M. Daudet became convinced that the Anarchists, knowing Philippe's impressionable nature, had deliberately planned to use him against his own party by instilling into his mind the idea of a crime against one of its leaders. It is even suggested that he was told to assassinate his own father, and that, revolting against this idea and finding no way out of his position, he killed himself.

As for the farewell letter they say it must have been dictated to the boy by someone who had acquired influence over his mind. Otherwise he would surely, they argue, have sent some message to his father, of whom he was very fond.

The Anarchists deny that they went out of their way to influence Philippe. He came to their office, they say, as an enthusiastic neophyte professing Anarchist ideas and asking if there was anyone whom the party would like to see removed. He spent two afternoons and evenings with them, and was accepted as one of them, without their knowing his name. He volunteered a subscription of Frs. 200 to the party funds. Next day, his money being at an end, he was trying to sell his overcoat.

YOUNG DAUDET'S FLIGHT MANIA.

Inquiries in other quarters show that immediately after leaving home Philippe went to Havre, where, no doubt under the influence of his flight mania, he made inquiries about going to Canada. He tried to get employment on a steamer, but failed, and not having enough money to pay for a passage he gave up the idea, wandered about Havre for a time, and finally returned to Paris and made his plunge into anarchism. Whether this was the unaccountable impulse of a disordered brain, or whether he had already come under influences unknown to his family and friends, it is impossible to say at present; but the mystery is by no means cleared up. There is, to begin with, the puzzle about Philippe Daudet's overcoat. The Anarchists say he sold it, and the driver of the taxicab declares emphatically that the boy had no overcoat, but the garment has been found at the hospital to which he was taken. This opens up the possibility that the driver is unobservant, and that some unknown villain opened the door of the cab, shot the boy and decamped. This is dramatic but highly improbable. Such doings can hardly take place unobserved in a busy thoroughfare such as the Boulevard Magenta, in daylight. Moreover, the post-mortem examination indicates that the muzzle of the pistol was touching the skin when the fatal shot was fired. This of course points to suicide.

THE MYSTERY DEEPENS.

Another mysterious occurrence has taken place at the garage in which the taxicab is kept. A man wearing clothes that were too big for him, and what looked like a false beard and whiskers went to the garage and, without offering any explanation to the astonished youth temporarily in charge of the place, carefully examined the cab, getting into it, jumping up from behind on to the hood, lifting up the cushions and prying into every corner. The youth, being unable to obtain any reply to his questions, at last went to fetch the driver, who lived close by, but when he came the strange visitor had left. Before this happened, the driver had cleaned out the cab as usual. He found nothing connected with the tragedy, but, when the police went through the cab, they found an empty cartridge case. If this case belonged to the fatal bullet, how did it come out of Philippe Daudet's revolver, which was lying on the floor of the cab when the driver opened the door?

Yet another dramatic touch has been supplied by the Camelots du Roi, or Royalist partisans. To the office of M. Barnaud, the magistrate who is investigating the case, they escorted a common-looking man with long black hair and wearing a cap of the kind affected by sandwichmen. He was closeted with the magistrate for two hours, and when he came out the camelots surrounded him, held overcoats in front of his face so that he could not be photographed, and took him away, saying that his life would not be safe if his identity became known. Everyone of course is agog to know who he is and what he said.—"To be continued in our next."

PRODUCTION GOES FORWARD

Decrease in Ranks of British Unemployed: The Prices Barometer

It is early as yet to estimate the effects of the General Election and its results upon British trade. When the dissolution came trade had been on the mend for a couple of months. The election itself had little effect upon production, though it is asserted that it was harmful to retail trade, and in any case must have concentrated Christmas shopping into a shorter season than usual. But production went steadily on, and in many branches—including the Lancashire cotton trade and the tin plate and sheet trades of South Wales—there was a definite increase of business.

The result of the election and the prospects of a Labour Government for a moment or two frightened the Stock Exchange into marking down the prices of securities; but a little reflexion showed that there was no likelihood at present of any extreme legislation from a Labour Government, kept in power by Liberal votes, and, as the public showed no signs of wishing to sell, prices were marked up again.

This, we think, will prove to have been the story in most industries. There is every indication that business will resume its slightly upward course and that the steady development which the muddle in Europe checked for a time, but did not destroy, will withstand the instinctive fears engendered by the expectations of a Labour Government.

UNEMPLOYMENT.

Some further improvement in trade is reflected in the recent falls in the numbers of the unemployed. The totals recorded on the live registers of the unemployment exchanges in Great Britain have varied as follows during the last few weeks:

	Number unemployed.	Decrease durirg week.
Nov. 19	1,234,700
Nov. 26	1,218,200	16,500
Dec. 3	1,194,700	23,500

Over the last fortnight of November, therefore, about 40,000 workers found jobs of one sort or another. The improvement, of course, is totally unconnected with political matters. In part it, no doubt, represents an absorption of workers for the Christmas trade, and a slight falling-off in the first week or two of the New Year should cause no misgiving.

Another feature is the conclusion of the protracted dispute among the boilermakers, which caused an accumulation of work in some of the yards, which will now have been taken in hand. The recent blowing-in of a certain number of blastfurnaces will also have had its share in the increased demand for labour.

ANOTHER MARTYR TO X-RAYS

French Physician Loses Right Hand

Paris, Dec. 9.—Dr. Soret, who has been for thirty years Director of the Radiography department attached to the hospital at Havre, is the latest French martyr to his work. In March last he underwent amputation of the forefinger of the right hand, which had been attacked by radiodermatitis. This proved insufficient to stop the advance of the disease, however, and he has now lost the whole of the right hand. It was amputated on Saturday by Professor Cuneo of the Lariboisière Hospital here.

Dr. Soret began his professional life as a professor at a Havre Lycée, but became such an enthusiastic believer in the future of radiography for curative purposes that he decided to adopt a medical career. He accordingly entered as a medical student, and subsequently qualified.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

FREE FIGHT IN THE JAPANESE DIET

Wild Charges of Instigating Assassination of Opponents Against Cabinet

Tokio, Jan. 31.

The session of the Diet in the Lower House this afternoon ended in a riot. The trouble started with the refusal of the Premier to reply to the accusations of the Opposition that the Cabinet had instigated the attempt to assassinate leading members of the Opposition last night by derailing their train.

Mr. Komatsu, the Minister of Railways, attempted to reply, but was attacked by an agitator disguised as a member of Parliament. Pandemonium ensued, members of the Opposition throwing bottles, books and other missiles and fighting with fists with the Ministerialists and their adherents.

No serious casualites occurred and the Diet guards quelled the riot, the House afterwards adjourning.

The dissolution of the Diet was announced while the Lower House was in recess following the riot. While the Opposition were holding a conference as to their future actions, Viscount Kiyoura, the Premier, applied to the Throne for permission to dissolve Parliament, which was granted. The announcement was issued immediately.

Great surprise was caused inasmuch as the action was not expected at the time. The Premier thus forestalled the imminent vote of non-confidence.

Political circles are in a turmoil and are unable to forecast the future.

Popular Excitement.

Later.

The dissolution announcement was strongly condemned by the Opposition members who immediately held meetings denouncing the "overbearing attitude" of the Government. Giving three lohd cheers for themselves they dispersed, but are meeting again to-night.

Thousands of people hung around the Diet building and on the streets. Police reserves were called out to patrol the streets this afternoon and to-night to prevent the expected disturbances.

An Official Statement.

Later.

The Government have issued the following statement:—

"The three Opposition parties (the Seiyukai, the Kenseikai and the Kakushin Club) having declared themselves allies for the purpose of overthrowing the Ministry, have created such a serious condition in and out of the Diet as to prevent a proper state of administration and progress. The Government have been compelled to resort to dissolution of the Diet in order to appeal to the public."

It is believed that the elections will be held in May. Announcement will be made within 30 days, when the Government will ask the country to support their platform, included in which are the restoration programme and manhood suffrage, the principal bones of contention.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

OPENING OF INDIA'S ASSEMBLY

Viceroy's Powerful Speech: Indians in South Africa: The Bengal Outrages

Delhi, Jan. 31.

At the opening of the Legislative Assembly to-day, the Viceroy, the Earl of Reading, in a personal speech, said that the Government would continue to try to persuade the Government of the Union of South Africa to [illegible] to the view of the Indian Delegation, strongly denied the allegations that the British Government and the Afghan Government were at loggerheads and warmly acknowledged the action of His Majesty's Government in giving India full opportunity to express further views on the Kenya situation.

The Viceroy declared that the Government was determined to suppress outrages and conspiracies in Bengal. He was finally examining the case of each individual now in gaol.

Alluding to the reforms, the Earl of Reading declined to discuss certain matters until he had discussed them with the Secretary of State and the British Government, but he said that after profound study and reflexion he was anxious about the future of the reforms. He solemnly warned the Assembly that there was a possibility of a check to their progress. No constitutional change could be effected without the consent of the British Parliament and people.

The Viceroy concluded by praying that calm judgment and goodwill would characterize the session. —Reuter.

LEPROSY IN BRITISH EMPIRE

Campaign to Raise Funds for Relief: Recent Medical Discoverics

London, Jan. 31.

A campaign to raise £250,000 for the British Empire Leprosy Relief Association was inaugurated at a meeting to-day at the Mansion House presided over by the Lord Mayor.

Messages from the Prince of Wales and the Earl of Reading were read. These paid a tribute to the work of the Association.

Viscount Chelmsford said that the fact that Sir Humphry Davy Rolleston, the President of the Royal College of Physicians, and Sir Leonard Rogers were identified with the Association constituted an assurance that the claims made on its behalf could be substantiated.

300,000 Lepers in the Empire.

Sir Humphry Rolleston pointed out that there were at least 300,000 lepers in the British Emiire. There was good reason to believe that Sir Leonard Rogers had found a cure in the fatty acids of certain oils and the preparation was called morrhuate of sodium.

Sir Leonard Rogers stated that a trial of chaumoogra preparations in 4,067 cases in the Philippines had indicated that numerous cures were possible.

Mr. Frank Oldrieve anticipated that the Empire would be practically free from leprosy within 30 years.

Viscount Chelmsford announced the receipt of £100 from the King and also of £100 from the Prince of Wales.

A Great Social Problem.

The Duke of Devonshire declared that the movement had been viewed with the greatest satisfaction by the Colonial Office as dealing with a great social problem, which was pressing very severely on the administrations of various colonies and protectorates.

Sir Sydney Oliver, the Secretary of State for India, said that no medical discovery had so encouraged or overjoyed him as those of Sir Leonard Rogers which were comparable with the cures of malaria and yellow fever.—Reuter.

CANADIAN MINISTER TO WASHINGTON

Appointment Construed to Portend Direct Diplomatic Relations

Washington, Jan. 31.

The report that General Sir Arthur Currie has been offered appointment as Canadian Plenipotentiary in Washington is construed to mean that the oft reported project of Canada for direct diplomatic contact is in process of being carried out. The appointment will not mean establishment of an independent Canadian mission, but merely transfer by the British Embassy of jurisdiction over diplomatic matters affecting Canada and the United States to a Canadian official. For the purpose of negotiation with the State Department he would speak for the British sovereign.

The change will be important for Canadians as communications would pass directly between the Embassy and the Government at Ottawa instead of viâ the Foreign Office in London.—Reuter's American Service.

ITALY'S TREATY WITH JUGO-SLAVIA

Further Details Regarding the Cession of Fiume: A Restricted Corridor

According to the text of the Italo-Jugo-Slav Treaty, Fiume town is annexed to Italy, while the port of Bargos and the delta and Fiumara go to Jugo-Slavia. The corridor uniting Fiume town with Italy is restricted owing to the inclusion of three villages in Jugo-Slav territory.

Altogether about 200 houses with 3,000 Jugo-Slavs pass to Jugo-Slav territory, while Fiume harbour and three piers and docks are leased to Jugo-Slavia for 50 years for an annual rental of one gold lira as a reaffirmation of Italian ownership. Jugo-Slavia administers the harbour.

AMERICAN OIL SCANDAL

Resolution Repudiating Leases Unanimously Adopted

Washington, Jan. 31.

The Senate has adopted the Walsh resolution directing the President to sue for annulment of the Doheny and Sinclair oil leases. It appears that yesterday's voting related to one of the various amendments moved.

Vain efforts were made to soften the language of the resolution which, as finally unanimously adopted, alleges that the leases were entered into "without authority and in violation of the law."

The Republicans vainly tried to secure the elimination from the resolution of the name of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Denby, in association with that of ex-Secretary Fall as signing the leases.

Washington, Jan. 31.

The Senate adjourned to-day without taking any action on the resolution of Senator Robinson expressing the view that the President should request Mr. Denby's resignation and also the resignations of "other Navy Department officials and officers whose relations with the oil reserve leases indicate malfeasance in office."—Reuter's American Service.

TAKING TROUBLE

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent in Union Church, Tientsin, December 2, 1923

Philippians II 6 & 7; "Who, being in the form of God, thought not a prize to be on an equality with God, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

This seems rather a "tough and sluggish text," for men of the present who, we are told, though they do not believe it, want their theology boiled soft. But even if people do want their theology made sweet and tender instead of hard and tough, as it sometimes is in its phraseology, it can be done, for this is the beauty of the Gospel, that its root principles can be expressed in quite plain and every-day language, and thoughts and imagery. That is the secret of the undying charm of the parables of Jesus. So we will start our consideration of these great words of Paul by spending a good deal of time over two phrases current among us, on both sides of the Atlantic. There is the phrase "getting it over." That means doing a thing with as little trouble as possible, getting done with it, and being glad when it is off our hands. A boy, who is sent to wash his face, is reputed to wash it on this principle. Very often people have to write a letter; they talk of it as a bore; they scribble it as fast as they can, and get it over; they put the bare name town on the envelope, leaving it to the post-office to find the street and number. This is so common, that I see that the American Post Office has had to stamp a notice on each envelope as it passes through the post, asking people to write "street and number." That shows how slack and hurried folk are. Anything to get the letter done with! No wonder people mostly burn their letters. It is much the same with many people in business. They hurry over their work, putting as little time and thought into it as possible, just to get it over. Edward Cook noticed this when he first went into an office., how some men's coats were hung with a look of their chair ready to start at the minute the clock struck five. That is getting work over, getting done with work with the first stroke of the clock.

TAKING TROUBLE.

In contrast to that, there is another phrase of an entirely different signification, and one which throws a far more rosy light on human nature. It is the phrase "taking trouble" over a thing of any kind whatever that we have to do. Taking trouble! When we say of a person, he has taken a lot of trouble we mean he or she has done more or more than was strictly necessary; we mean that the person has laid himself out to be as agreeable as possible or as helpful as possible. It means, that someone has gone out of his way to give us pleasure, that we were not entitled to expect. You can tell at once when people have taken trouble to please or help you. And there is nothing that touches us more than that. We feel not only complimented, but have a feeling that we have had more kindness shown us than we deserved. There is often a look of surprise in such an action. People who take a lot of trouble are the very salt of the earth. It comes in letter writing. Sometimes you get a letter, that you feel it a crime to throw it into the waste-paper basket. It would be. I suppose we all have little packets of well-written carefully sent letters from friends that we could not destroy, so full that the writer has to tell of the news that will interest them. If there are a few sketches in a travel letter, we cherish them. You feel that a friend has gone to some trouble to interest and please you. It is a treasure; you are sure he thinks a lot of you. Most things we do in a skimped way. We live on in a rich and generous way. And we appreciate it when our friends do things in a rich and full way, take a lot of trouble over us. Some take a lot of trouble in entertaining their friends; others get it over.

Take the matter of business. There was a poor lad named Andrew Carnegie. He got an office-boy's job in an American city. His employer was surprised to find, that when he was given, what we in the East call, a chit, to take to some other office, the lad always know where their office was; he knew the addresses of the firm's correspondents the first day or two. The head of the firm was taken by surprise at the lad's intimate knowledge of the district, and asked how it was. The boy said that he knew he would have to take notes out, so he had learnt all the names of firms from their door-plates. No wonder that lad got on.

THIS FOR REMEMBRANCE.

But, the best example of the way in which one is affected when people take trouble to please you is this. At least it is the best, that I know personally. I have a little manuscript book, which I value more highly than any of my most costly printed books. The story of it is this. I went home for my first furlough from Union Church, Shanghai, in 1904, in the old "Preussen." We had a "Christian Endeavour Society" then. And before I left there was handed to me a manuscript "Diary for the Voyage." A little book, bound in blue paper, with some forty pages, a page a day for the voyage. But that was not all. At the head of each page was a verse of a poem on the sea; there were pretty little water-colour pictures here and there and pen-and-ink pictures, and scroll-work; and pages at the end for the names of the passengers. Now why do I tell you this? Because I felt it a very great kindness. They might have bought an expensive book, bound in morocco leather, but it would not have affected me with a sense of undeserved kindness as this did. And the trouble they took over it! First, there was the time spent over the selection of over 40 verses about the sea, from the poets. What trouble that must have been for someone! Then for the writing! The lettering is beautiful, each letter separate from another. That cannot be done quickly. Then there are the paintings, delicately done! They could not be done in a few minutes. And I rightly felt touched by it. There was no getting away from the conclusion that these young people thought a good deal of me, by the trouble they had taken to give me a pleasant surprise. It was "real kind," and one would have been a wooden-hearted churl not to have felt it deeply. Without cant, I felt I did not deserve that such a world of personal trouble should have been taken over me.

THE TROUBLE GOD TOOK.

Now, all this seems to have been a long way from the text. But that is not so. I have been right on the text all the time. I never have been more on a text, from the first word I have said. We are always being asked, what Christianity is? If we like to be foolish, we can bamboozle and mystify the plain man, for whom the Gospel is intended, with stiff discussions, hard and Latinized and Graecicized words, as if we were lecturing in a class-room. Christianity can be described in such terms; sometimes it has to be. But there is no need for it. The Lord Himself always used plain terms. So can we. And so, all I have tried to say leads to an easy and touching definition of Christianity. It is that God took so much trouble to save us. That is it. God did all that even He could, to save us, a sinful people. That is saying a odd thing of Almighty God, but it is the case. Our Lord puts it that way. He told a parable of a householder sending his servants to receive the harvest of a vineyard. The husbandmen killed some of them. Then the man said, I will send my son; they will have some respect for my son. That means that God did all He could do to bring a rebellious world to Himself. He took all the trouble He could, He made the greatest sacrifice possible, even to Him, when He gave his "only-begotten Son" to save the world. That is Christianty, this "tremendous stoop" of the God of heaven to rescue man, and save and eternally bless him.

That is all the text means. There is no difficulty about it. All it carried in it is just this, God took an infinity of pain and thought and sacrifice in the giving of His Son to save such as we. Consider the text for a moment and you see that it is so. St. Paul says that "Christ counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God." A truly astonishing statement for it means, that He was in the Godhead. The great division of all existing things is not, as we sometimes put it, between material and spiritual things. No. It is between the uncreated and the created. The uncreated is the eternal life in God, who has "life in himself" as Christ says. That is the deepest saying in the whole Bible. And what St. Paul says is that in this Jesus there was that uncreated life. Somehow, as St. Paul says, "God was in Christ."

THE GOSPEL KERNEL.

There is no time to go into all that. But this is the kernel of the Gospel. The Son of God took the trouble, shouldered the burden, endured the pain, of a descent from heaven to earth. That is the thing that the Church has always held. One who was equal with God, took all the pain and loss and trouble to come and be one with us and save us. He "emptied himself." There is a statement. It cannot be said of us, when we are born that we have "emptied" ourselves of any glory we had before we were born. Indeed No. We are empty enough anyhow. He wasn't. This is what He was, as we believe, "By Him were all things created." He could speak of the "glory He had with the Father before the world was." And He came, and was poor and humble, a wanderer, "despised and rejected of men." He was a servant, not covered with decorations as philanthropists often rightly are. He was a "servant." He was "in the likeness of man." Had you met Him on a country road you would have have passed Him, possibly thinking Him a fine-looking man, yet in half an hour He might heal a leper. Being what He was He said He could have twelve legions of angels to defend Him; but He did not. He was obedient "even unto death, the death of the cross." You see, it all comes to this, St. Paul is trying to make the people feel what love there was in God for us to make Him do all this for us. His down-coming to our level; His life of toil and healing; His suffering and patience; what trouble and pain and self-sacrifice they imply! That is Christianity. It is not, according to the ridiculous idea of its enemies, a hash-up of Babylonian myths, Buddhist and rabbinic sayings. No. It is the coming of the Son of God to save us. It is not just the giving of a philosophy more than usually good and wise. God could send any number of them.

This is Christianity as the world has always known it, an paralleled divine favour done to men, nothing like it before, nothing like it will happen again. There are, of course, people who dislike it. You are bound either to dislike it, or be unspeakably glad over it. It has all the marks of the nice things we sometimes have done for us by good friends, such as I have described, the trouble taken over writing an interesting letter, or like the diary those good friends of mine made for me. It is sheer kindnes, sheer grace, absolute unmerited favour from God to sinful man.

THE GREAT OBLIGATION.

And finally this makes the appeal of the Gospel. What is it? Professor Seeley hits it off exactly in "Ecce Homo." The appeal of the Gospel to man is that God has put us under an "immense obligation." It is just as it is whenever friends do unexpected, gratuitously kind things for us. First we say," I didn't deserve that." And we didn't. A great deal of fuss is made of the Christian doctrine of sin. Why? It is natural enough. We say of gifts, that have caused the giver a lot of trouble, "I didn't deserve this." We are not decent people, if we do not feel that. Well, this is what any decent soul that is not eaten up with pride must feel over the grace of God in giving His Son to save us. Again, we take things that friends take trouble over as evidence of their unexpected regard and love for us. And this always has been the Christian appeal, what a love God must have for man, to have done all that to bring us to Himself. And it is, again, a revelation of the value our friends set on us. "God commended His own love to us, that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." Just so. It surely argues a good deal of callousness in men if they can know and believe that and yet be indifferent to it. We, hard as we are, should not receive the gift of a pincushion someone had worked for us without feeling touched by the kindness. How much more should we feel the love of God in Jesus Christ, who "emptied Himself" and became obedient to the death of the cross for us? Christianity has its roots, not in the laws that govern impersonal nature, but in the laws of human nature, at its best, and these are personal. And in the text, Paul tries to show the overwhelming appeal of the Gospel to decent-minded people; that what even we, sinners as we are, have sometimes grace enough to do for our friends, to take a lot of trouble for their sake, that the God of heaven has done for our lost race in giving His Son to save us.

CHINA'S SEARCH FOR PEACE

V.—The Talk of Intervention

By Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 19.

Among the thousands of foreigners in China who clamour for the restoration of order and the establishment of a respectable Government so that they may live, trade and travel in peace throughout the land and so that the Chinese people may buy and sell and ship their produce and their purchases, there are now very many who are convinced that the Chinese have passed the point where they might have reestablished peace on their own initiative and that international intervention is inevitable and therefore immediately desirable.

A very large proportion of these persons live in the Treaty Ports, know very little outside their limited field, have made no broadminded appraisement of conditions either in China or the Occident and are therefore voicing an opinion based neither upon intelligent study nor common sense. There are, however, not a few highly intelligent and well informed foreigners in China who are paid well for an authoritative insight into one phase of Chinese life or another and who, at the same time, keep in reasonably close touch with conditions at home, who urge prompt military intervention by the Powers as the only possible means of establishing permanent peace in China within a reasonable time. The writer does not agree with these authorities and cannot understand how they arrive at their conclusions, but this is by no means sufficient warrant even in the writer's mind for dismissing the idea of intervention without a thorough discussion of it. Conditions are so bad in China now that even the least practical schemes for restoring peace emanating from the most humble sources demand careful consideration. The people who advocate intervention are neither humble nor obscure and are for the most part the most practical and hard-headed kind of men in their various vocations.

IT COULD BE DONE.

Neither the writer nor any other opponent of intervention with whom he has come in contact doubts that under the right conditions an international force could restore order in China, make disorder so unprofitable that the present trouble makers would earnestly crave peace and set up an administration which would very soon reestablish respect for authority, build thousands of miles of railways, train, discipline and equip a small but efficient army and a useful navy, pay the country's debts with ease and develop commerce and industry beyond the fondest dreams of any Chinese of this generation. The great difficulty is that the conditions upon which the success of international intervention, depends are not met either in the Occident or the Orient and are not likely to be met in the near future. A few of the difficulties in the way of intervention must occur to anyone who reads the daily papers and at the same time follows the course of diplomatic manœuvring in Peking.

In the first place the Ministers in Peking cannot order intervention, either individually or collectively, on their own authority, though there is never a week in the year when one or another of them would not derive intense satisfaction from marching an army into one quarter of China or another and shelling somebody's yamên after giving somebody's army a little real military instruction. Ministers are human and often feel like the motorist in China who entertains the barbarous wish for a killing license which would entitle him to run down so many pigs, impudent brats, truculent soldiers, somnambulistic coolies and demented cyclists per annum. Intervention can only be undertaken upon the initiative of the home Governments and before any home Government in this generation can be induced to consider intervention in China it must be persuaded that it is both essential and inevitable, that it would serve to restore order, that it would be financially worth while and, more than all else, that such a drastic measure would meet with approval of the Occidental peoples. No Minister in Peking believes that his fellow countrymen in his homeland would endorse military intervention in China on a scale big enough to do any real good or would sanction intervention over a long enough period to lay the foundations of a permanent peace. Apart from the domestic problems, both political and physical, which Japan has to face at home, apart from the fact that she wants to devote all of her time, energy and money to the rehabitation of the cities and districts recently devastated by the earthquake, no one can doubt that both the Government's foreign policy and public sentiment would at this juncture be radically opposed to military intervention; and even the most obdurate militarists must hesitate to undertake a big and expensive campaign against the will of a people as heavily taxed and as spiritually restive as the Japanese are at this moment. Russia is an entity apart whose whole policy in the East is that of playing the Oriental against the "capitalist" nations. As an ally in China she is out of the question. All Europe is a financial and political maelstrom, seething with old and new hatreds, wherein the frenzied mariners are so engrossed in saving their own craft or in sinking others that China might blow to atoms and elicit no more than a spasmodic snort from Europe. No European people would dream of shipping an army to the Orient at this juncture any more than in the most crucial period of the war and no European Government would think it commercially worth while to finance an expedition and an administration in China, except possibly with the idea of taking and holding a slice of China by way of recompense.

CAUTION AND FALSE SENTIMENT.

This reduces the possible factors in a scheme of intervention to Great Britain and the United States, which would be the last

THE NOVELS OF IBANEZ

A Notable Spanish Writer

Mr. David W. Caddick addressed the "To-day" Literary [illegible] on "The Novels of Vicente Blasco [illegible] Mr. [illegible] presided.

[illegible] lecturer, while enjoying a world-wide reputation, particularly in [illegible] United States, was little read in this country until very recently. He was essentially a man's novelist, and a feature of his books was [illegible] in who were born too late, while most of his female depictions were more or less vampires. He clung to the old Spanish traditional love for exploration and [illegible] of Patagonia. Ibanez approached many subjects in a manner that greatly resembled the styles of Arnold Bennett and John Galsworthy, and on social problems took a much wider view than H. G. Wells. Noticeable throughout his literary work was his accuracy of detail.

"Woman Triumphant" was much underrated by the critics, being largely misunderstood, but "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "The Enemies of Women," "Blood and Sand," and "The Dead Command" had met with an infinitely better reception here. Mr. Caddick gave several extracts from the author's works, including many of the quaint customs of Spanish courtship, taken from "The Dead Command."

A discussion followed.

NEW BLUE BLOOD CLUB

Plantagenets the Password

If you are descended from a Scottish, Irish, or Welsh king or prince, or from the Royal House of Plantagenet at Home, Mr. E. A. Bowers-Taylor would like to hear about you.

He is the organizing secretary of the Plantagenet Club, which has for its object "to provide an inexpensive yet exclusive centre for poor old women of good ancestry." The membership will be limited, and applications considered strictly in order of date of receipt.

Mr. Bowers-Taylor lives in Holland Park. In an interview yesterday he said: "There are about 10,000 descendants, and some of them may be unaware of their ancestry, and even working as labourers."

But Royal blood is obviously not enough, for the organizing secretary went on to say that "such people are not desired as members of our club, the centre of which is to provide an inexpensive yet exclusive centre."

One hundred Plantagenets have already enrolled their interest of forming members, and when 850 have followed suit the club will begin.

Mr. Bowers-Taylor hopes to secure suitable West End premises where the dining hall can be furnished in the style of the Plantagenet period, while the servants will wear period costume.

The Plantagenets rival England from 1154 to 1399. The first king of the dynasty, Richard II, died in prison. Everybody knows what happened to John, who has been called the worst of the line. Edward II, was murdered.

There was [illegible] the family, which Richard Coeur de Lion accepted by saying: "Let us fight; son with father, brother with brother; it is instinct in our family. From the devil we all came; to the devil we shall all go."

It is to be hoped that the curse has died out by now. Otherwise the Plantagenet Club is going to be an interesting [illegible] London.

WHISKERS COME BACK TO TOWN

New Beaver Fashion at Kensington

One of the directors of the Royal Palace Hotel, Kensington, decided that the face decoration of his staff was too varied. So he suggested a standardized ornament, the whisker and forthwith it has been the aim and object of the staff from the page boy to Antony, [illegible] to grow day by day in every way hairier and hairier.

Antony spoke with great glee to a "Daily News" reporter—"Yes, we're all doing it," he said. "Mine are splendid, thank you."

"Is it spreading to the female staff, too? Well, they do their best with side curls. But the pages have some difficulty in cultivating the right type of whisker owing to their youth. Some of them are going to wear false ones."

Antony says there is going to be a competition with prizes up to £25. It seems a remunerative sport, whisker growing, and appeals to the primitive instinct in every man. The guests at the hotel are also trying to compete.

"Does it affect home life, Antony?" asked the "Daily News" representative, thinking of possible domestic troubles over this latest fashion.

"Not at all," said Antony gaily, "the waiters' wives are all cheering on the men to victory."

It is to be hoped, however, that the wearing of false sets by waiters will not be encouraged. Enough things fall in one's soup already. Presumably the diner of the future will call not "waiter!" but "Beaver!"

It is the fashion for the young, smart officers in the new armies of Czecho-Slovakia to wear whiskers, so the Royal Palace Hotel are not alone in their noble endeavour to be fashionable and yet manly.

And, perhaps, as a protest against shingling, the more women bob and cut their hair, the more men will grow theirs.

The self-sacrificing wife who sells her hair to save the mortgage may later find it on her husband's dressing-table in the shape of false whiskers.

THERE IS NO RUSSIA

Moscow Disowns the Name

There is no Russia. A strange statement but true. Russia has officially ceased to exist as a name in the mouths of those who now control the destinies of that country.

About three months ago they took a decision which has remained strangely secret. They notified the various nations with whom they have trade relations that the title of their Government was changed from that of the Russian Soviet Republic to the "Union of Socialist Soviet Republics," constructed after Russian fashion to U. S. S. R. The word "Russia" was dropped completely.

At the same time the emblems [illegible] their official notepaper, the sickle, hammer and sheaf, were now surrounded by a [illegible] of [illegible] bearing the names of the various units of the country and the [illegible] territories, [illegible] "independent" local soviet governments, have been formed, such as "Ukraine," Azerbaijan, and so on. But for any these, for the name "Russia" [illegible] astonishingly added, the name of an entirely independent State!

MASTERS OF EVERYWHERE.

[illegible] that [illegible] Pagan Majesties in Moscow regard [illegible] as potentially the masters of everywhere, and not at all limited by the boundaries of Russia. Needless to say the British Government in its dealings with the Soviet Government has never accepted or used this predatory title.

The matter is of some import- [illegible] the verge of renewing relations with Russia officially. The Liberal Party has made it a plank, or at the least a small board, in its election platform. The Conservative Government has had the matter under consideration for some time past, and was disposed to recognize the Soviet Government, but with this major difference, that it would only do so after the Russians had recognized the principle of pre-Soviet Russian indebtedness, and had agreed to reinstate or compensate British subjects in their Russian property. —"Daily Mail."

WOMEN SAILORS

By L. G. Green

Women are serving to-day in nearly every branch of the merchant service.

The most unlikely profession in the world now seems to be open to them. The time when only positions as stewardesses were available has certainly gone.

Quite recently a woman skipper took her own motor cargo-boat down the Thames to the Isle of Wight. Several large foreign ocean-going freighters are commanded by women.

Possibly the most remarkable instance of a woman at sea is that of the woman engineer, Miss V. A. Drummond, who stood her watch in dungarees in the engine-room of a Liverpool liner.

Several Norwegian girls are serving as wireless operators in [illegible] —and, indeed, this is among the most suitable jobs afloat for them.

On deck, able-bodied "sea-women" would find the task no more exacting than work in a factory ashore. A novelist recently sailed halfway round the world in a tiny yacht with his sister as mate—and wrote en- [illegible] proficiency.

Little ships seem to have provided most jobs for women up to now. Scores of Thames barges carry the skipper's wife, a person who is up to any emergency, and as good as most men in the matter of steering, cooking, and washing.

BREAKING A SUPERSTITION.

The "signing on" of a woman breaks one of the oldest superstitions of the sea. To the real old shell-back, a woman afloat is only slightly less dangerous than sailing on a Friday. But old shellbacks are passing with the prejudices of their days.

Generally speaking, life at sea nowadays is not the grim profession of hardship that it was when ill-found wind-jammers beat their weary way round the Horn.

There are plenty of women air pilots, and if the female brain is quick enough to carry out that task successfully, it can navigate a ship with ease, even in time of danger. Night watches will trouble the female sailor no more than they do the hospital nurse.

In one branch of work in liner and tramp alike the woman will be welcomed, and that is the galley. Her arrival will synchronise with the departure of the notorious "grubspoilers" of the sea. Board of Trade rations will take on a new flavour [illegible] tender feminine care.

When we discuss ways and means of restoring peace and good Government in China, we are not talking of a hypothetical millennium far, far away, but of something that we want to achieve within the reasonably near future. One can conceive of conditions in both China and the Occident under which intervention and foreign control in China might be desirable, successful and profitable to all parties. The foregoing paragraphs are designed to show that these conditions do not exist now in either East or West and that foreign intervention is not therefore a negotiable highway to peace in the reasonably near future.

A NEW CAST NEEDED.

After discussing the proposal of foreign control with many foreigners in and out of the Legation quarter the writer would say that something like the following is a fair digest of intelligent opinion upon the subject in Peking. With China in her present temper intervention on a small scale would serve only as a violent irritant which would stimulate an anti-foreign movement, which might easily end in an enormous sacrifice of foreign life and property. If there is to be intervention at all, it must be undertaken on such a big scale that the hopelessness of resistance will be obvious to even the most fanatical young nationalist. Intervention on such a scale no Power on earth would consider at this moment, nor would the Powers begin to consider it seriously and discuss it with one another until conditions were much better in Europe than they are now, until conditions in China were ten times worse than they are now, until the European and American people were ten times as much concerned about what happened in the remote Orient as they are now. As an immediate solution of China's difficulties intervention is out of the question so, if we are in a hurry for peace in China, we had better forget it and start on some now scent.

MARS AND JUPITER IN CONJUNCTION.

The two large outer planets, Mars and Jupiter, will be in close proximity on the morning of the 14th. On this date both will rise about 2.20 a.m., thus allowing the observer on the earth to follow the phenomenon till sunrise, that is during 4 hours. Mars may be seen about 1° South of Jupiter.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF MOON.

A total eclipse of the moon will take place on the evening of the 20th, extending to 3 a.m. in the morning of the 21st. The phenomenon may be observed at Shanghai for about 6 hours. On the above date the moon is full, hence at greatest brilliancy, a fact which strongly contrasts with the darkness which will ensue during the eclipse. The moon rises in the East at 5.32 p.m., and enters the penumbra at 9.14 p.m., being totally eclipsed at 11.19. The phase of totality can be then followed till about 2 a.m., the next morning, when the Queen of the Night emerges from the shade, and beams out again in full brilliancy until she sets in the morning gloom at 6.50 a.m.

CHINA'S NEW YEAR (FEBRUARY 5).

China's New Year is again upon us, awakening thrilling memories of firecrackers, gaudy lanterns, hand-shaking in the air, bowing, well-wishing, drumming of kettles and cooking-pans, and all the "Sons of Han" enjoying a holiday and good chow, seasoned with a merry cup of samshu. The Gods are also visited, and fortune sought at the hands of the wizard. The Mixed Court is closed, the burglar and purse-snatcher enjoy a rest, and litigation and strife are no more.

The present year is the first of the cycle of 60, and is presided over by the rat and the element wood, both of which are expected in some canny way to bring happiness to China's millions.

THE PROPOSED COTTON SURTAX

Views of the National Southeastern University on the Proposal: Reply to Recent "N. C. D. News" Article: Many Misunderstandings Alleged on our Part

Following an article published in the "North-China Daily News" on January 11 dealing with the proposal of Chinese cotton interests to institute an export surtax on cotton, we are requested to publish the following article which has been written by Mr. Tung Teh-fu, of the College of Agriculture, National Southeastern University, Nanking. Reference to the matter will be found in our leading article.

With the hope of improving the cotton industry in China, the Chinese Cotton Mill Owners' Association, the Cotton Association of China and the National Southeastern University have asked the Chinese Government for the imposition of an export surtax on cotton, the proceeds to be devoted to the work of cotton improvement and extension; and they have already gained the sanction of the Cabinet concerning this matter. The "North-China Daily News" of January 11 contained, however, an article bearing a good deal of misunderstandings regarding this purely honest intention of the two associations and one national educational institution, which should be clarified in order to convey a correct impression to the public.

THE PROPOSED $30,000,000 LOAN.

It is emphasized in that article that the intention of the cotton traders to make this request is to devote the proceeds derived from the surtax to serve as the basis of a loan to help the cotton interests at Shanghai. Last year the Chinese Cotton Mill Owners' Association planned to issue a bond of $30,000,000 to help the cotton spinning and weaving industry at Shanghai. Owing to political disturbance in the country, the plan was finally given up notwithstanding the fact that it had the sympathy, in this regard, of the foreign capitalists in China.

It is perhaps on this fact that the writer of that article had his assumption based. But think that the average export of Chinese cotton is but 500,000 piculs a year and if a surtax of one mace and half were levied on each picul of exported cotton, the revenue would be only Hk. Tls. 90,000. Can this small amount serve as the basis of a loan of $30,000,000? The Chinese would never be so ignorant to accept this.

That the proceeds would be used to help the cotton interests at Shanghai is again impossible. A 10,000-spindle mill requires $20,000 every month for buying raw material and paying labour and H.K. Tls. 90,000 is only sufficient to keep up a single such mill for five months. As there are altogether 600,000 spindles in all the cotton mills at Shanghai, how can this insignificant amount, as derived from the imposition of export surtax, be utilized to relieve this immense cotton industry?

THE EMBARGO SUGGESTION.

The article again realizes that about a year ago Chinese spinners here sought to have embargo on cotton exports imposed as they were suffering from a shortage of supplies and that the present surtax suggestion had been put forward with a similar end in view. This sounds as if the export surtax will cause the price of cotton exports to rise and subsequently lower down rate of exportation, and as exportation decreases, local cotton will become cheaper. It should be remembered, however, that foreigners buying cotton from China are actually paying less tax than the Chinese cotton buyers. The latter have to pay 1.75 mace more for each picul of cotton than the former. Even if a surtax of one mace and a half is levied on each picul of exported cotton, foreigners will still pay .25 mace less than the Chinese.

THE SOUTHEASTERN UNIVERSITY.

The article also mentions that from inquiry in well-informed circles it was known that the intention of the surtax suggestion is to devote the proceeds to the work of cotton improvement under the auspices of the Southeastern University at Nanking. The petition is so made only because the Southeastern University has undertaken the cotton improvement and extension work under the auspices of the Chinese Cotton Mill Owners' Association and has done good work. The surtax is not made for developing the University but for the support of cotton improvement and extension work of all China.

THE DEMAND FROM ABROAD.

It is also emphasized in that article that China owed her modern cotton industry to foreign enterprise, and that the demand for Chinese cotton from abroad has been of material assistance in promoting the cultivation of the staple in the country and the present proposal is to penalize this source of consumption for an object which originally did not commend itself to those who now make the suggestion of a surtax.

It is true that China owed her modern industry to foreign enterprise because her spinning and weaving industry has only recently developed. It is not true, however, that the demand for Chinese cotton from abroad has assisted to promote cultivation of the staple in the country. That foreign countries buy much cotton from China is owing to two facts. First of all, the cotton production in the United States and India has been much decreased in recent years and in meeting the demand of the world much Chinese cotton has gone abroad. Second, since the close of the great war, all countries have endeavoured to recover their spinning and weaving industry and in doing so very much raw material has been consumed. These two facts are enough to prove, that foreigners buy Chinese cotton simply for their private ends and their continuous purchase threatens a cotton famine in this country and consequently injures the industry here instead of assisting it.

THE NEED FOR DEVELOPMENT.

Chinese people constitute one-fourth of the total population of the world, but the country produces only one-tenth of the total cotton. They have already seen this deficiency of the country and are convinced of the possibility of greatly developing her cotton industry because of her suitable soil and climatic conditions for cotton growing. Therefore the present cotton improvement and extension work has sprung up from the self-consciousness of the Chinese and evidently the demand from abroad has nothing to do with the promotion of cotton cultivation in China. In opposition to the fear that the surtax proposal is to penalize foreigners' consumption of Chinese cotton it should be pointed out that the proposal aims to benefit the whole world by supplying more and better cotton. China possesses favourable conditions for growing enough cotton for the world and will be depended on in the future by many countries for their raw cotton supply.

AN IDEA 30 YEARS OLD.

In this connexion I may also mention the fact that the idea of cotton improvement work germinated in the Chinese mind 30 years ago and the actual work began in the first year of the Republic. Unfortunately, owing to financial difficulties the work was not systematically carried out. The Chinese Cotton Mill Owners' Association, however, commenced this work five years ago and the yearly expense is about $30,000. Although this amount is small, it shows, anyhow, the anxiety of the Chinese for starting the cotton work from its beginning. For further progress along this line the Association has made the present proposal, and therefore it seems unreasonable to criticize the Chinese being late in this matter.

It is true that Japan, being the largest consumer of Chinese cotton outside of the republic, will have something to say on the subject of surtax. But improving cotton in China is a direct advantage to the future cotton industry of Japan and so, instead of prohibiting this attempt, Japan certainly will assist in making it a success.

THE WORLD SHORTAGE.

"The world's cotton industry will be short of two million bales of cotton this year and owing to the high prices prevailing for cotton, the extension of cotton cultivation in China will be a renumerative undertaking for many years to come. The International Cotton Federation, not having any national limitations, is anxious to assist China where cotton growing is an assured commercial enterprise." This is the idea of Mr. A. S. Pearse, general secretary of the International Federation of Master Cotton Spinners & Manufacturers'.

two big nations on earth to enter rashly upon such an enterprise even if all the world but China were prosperous and at peace.

Long before the recent phenomenal growth of the labour party's strength in Great Britain, diplomatic and consular agents in China got the distinct impression that the British Government did not consider that China trade would be worth the cost of intervention. It was the conviction in the best informed circles in Peking that if China were to burst into a great conflagration, such as Marshal Tuan and others predict, British subjects would be ordered into the ports and the merchants would have to be content to deal in such wares as the more courageous Chinese agents could smuggle in and out of the hinterland. With the rise of the labour party this conviction is confirmed in every mind. A liberal or conservative Government, even though converted to the belief that intervention might be worth while from a commercial point of view, would not think of challenging the labour element with a call to arms and a call for funds for a campaign in China. Little as could be expected from a labour administration, there would be more hope of getting drastic action from labour in the saddle than from a liberal or conservative Government on the defensive against labour. Americans in China who are in close touch with the United Statee Government are certain that there is no mere chance of inducing Washington to consider military intervention under present conditions, or even under much worse conditions, than there is of persuading Great Britain to intervene. The American people, more than any other people, dictate to their Government when and how war shall be made and on what terms peace shall be made, as the world has had an opportunity of observing during recent years. The American people have a sentimental concern for the rights and liberties of other peoples, irrespective of their worth, and will always go out of their way to champion the interests of anyone who advertises that he is struggling for "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Once they have fastened their affections upon a nation or a race whom they consider abused and in need of sympathy, they refuse obstinately to be disillusioned. The Revolution in France was about over and the Napoleonic era beginning before a note of doubt crept into young America's vociferous whoops for liberty, equality and fraternity. Kosciusko, Kossuth, Cavour Mazziri and Garibaldi are still names to conjure with and their shades still demand a sentimental regard for the countries which they represented in seasons of stress. The Cubans and the Boers are still thought of tenderly. Whenever Mexico boils over Yankee sentiment is inevitably pro-rebel, though the rebels be bitterly anti-Yankee, bandits and cutthroats, because American still sentimentalizes records every Mexican chief-tain as a Diaz and every one as a Madero. The big navy was half over before America as a nation had forgotten the Maine and became pro-Belgian and now the sentimentalists are completely bewildered by their divided sympathies for poor persecuted Belgium of yesterday and poor downtrodden Germania of to-day.

THAT EVIL WORD DEMOCRACY.

Lavish as America has always been, with her sympathies, the Chinese and the Americans have always come in for the least share. The Americans are martyred men, consequently noted to be treated. Their heroism of their past and their shining virtues give humor some always a goodly, honest and courageous contempt. People facing aggressive Europe and ruthless Russia think rather than Japan to favour but with perfect resignation. Since the Revolution they are credited as a people who have seen the heavens open and have raised their toil-worn hands to Democracy throned on a silver cloud. They are now a people struggling in order to give birth to something as a republic as America is proud of. They are therefore entitled to unlimited forbearance and sometimes protection against imperialistic aggression, interference or bullying of any sort. This is the attitude which Washington has to take very seriously into account even when it contemplates insisting upon China's observance of existing treaties and pledges. It would take years to educate American opinion up to the point where it would endorse military intervention with a view to imposing good Government upon China. This is not the writer's opinion alone, but is obviously that of the American Government, which will be very pleased for the immediate future if it can elicit from the American people a popular mandate to use such drastic measures as are necessary from time to time for the protection of existing treaty rights, American persons and American property. Such a limited mandate even is not so easily obtained as the people of other nations may think. A great proportion of American opinion is much more tolerant towards picturesque bandits who are as remote in space as Robin Hood is in time, than towards Americans who go abroad and get into trouble. The traditional American attitude towards the citizen who leaves his country is that since he has been silly enough to emigrate when he could just as well have stayed at home in the most wonderful land on earth, he deserves whatever he gets and cannot expect sober, law-abiding, stay-at-home folk to spend any money or adopt a hostile attitude towards other peoples to get him out of trouble. The American who resides abroad is guilty of a mild form of treason in the sight of the Kansas farmer and his representatives in Congress reflect this attitude.

IT DOES NOT PAY.

Apart from all this question of sentiment, there is a widespread feeling throughout the Anglo-Saxon countries that intervention does not pay. They are inclined to cite Russia and Turkey as examples of the dismal failure of intervention. They lose no opportunity to observe that the arbitary remapping of Europe since the great war has not established peace nor yielded any promise of permanent peace. The results up to date of French and Belgian intervention in the Ruhr are by no means accepted in English-speaking countries as evidence of the beneficence of such enterprises. The sum and substance of all the foregoing is that these Powers which might be inclined to intervene cannot, while those which could do so will not. This is the verdict which one hears passed by most of the diplomats in Peking when the question is raised and they are, after all, in the best position to know.

This whole group of arguments, designed not so much to show that intervention is undesirable as that it is impossible, might easily be invalidated if the Chinese at large were inclined to call in the doctor. An unmistakeably sincere appeal from the Chinese people for intervention would break down all opposition in America and Great Britain and bring immediate action, where upon all the other nations would subscribe for participation, whether they had anything to contribute or not, so as not to be left out of the game. There are many persons who argue for intervention who believe that the majority of the Chinese people would welcome intervention and be grateful for good Government under foreign control. They say that Chinese traditions sanction it, that the Chinese are used to it, that they have submitted time after time to the rule of aliens after the failure of their own dynasties that they got used to such domination in a short time in each case and were loyal to their foreign rulers. They believe that the minority who would oppose intervention would accept it meekly, get used to it, and finally come to appreciate the blessing of a just and honest administration.

CHINESE PEOPLE'S ATTITUDE.

The writer does not believe any of this. There are a great many thousand Chinese who know perfectly well that they cannot any foreign Government, if given a free hand in China, could restore or even retrieve the national credit, make the country very prosperous and give it a great deal cheaper and better government than China has enjoyed in modern times. This does not mean, however, that these same thousands would prefer a good foreign administration to a bad Chinese administration. There is every evidence all about us to prove that the very opposite is true. There is every reason to believe that all classes of Chinese would be moved either by self-interest or prejudice to fight foreign control to the last ditch.

Like every other foreigner who has to do with Chinese officials, the writer has heard Chinese of high degree say confidentially that they think it would be a good thing for China if the country were taken over and run by the Powers. Some of the men who make this or similar remarks are disgruntled officials out of office, who have had such a bad run of luck in the political game that they have little hope of recovering their losses and would be glad to see anyone, even an alien, promote the discomfiture of those who unseated them. Such encouragement is worthless. Others are merely trying to flatter their foreign friends. Others want intervention on their own behalf to make them supreme over their rivals, a form of intervention which the reputable foreign Governments could not possibly contemplate.

A good many others are, however, sincere when they say that intervention and foreign control would be a good thing for China; but this does not mean that they want intervention, that they would welcome it or even submit to it. A great many of us who live rather too well and get insufficient exercise know that our general health would be immeasurably improved if we were gaoled and kept at hard manual labour, on a simple diet, under a merciless keeper for a year; or if we were carried off on a sailing ship for a year's whaling under the care of a heavy-fisted boatswain. But this does not mean that we should enter upon either of these wholesome ventures voluntarily, or even meekly, that we should not resist or evade hard work and discipline if an opportunity offered, or that we should not resent both from beginning to end and for a long time afterwards.

WHAT THE TUCHUN MEANT.

This is precisely the position of the majority of Chinese who believe that intervention would benefit their country. A powerful Tuchun who is doing very well for himself and is sparing no effort to maintain the deplorable status quo told the writer six months ago that China's position was absolutely hopeless. He said worse things of his colleagues and his own people than the writer would have the temerity to say if he believed them and closed by asserting that the Powers alone could restore order and that intervention was absolutely unavoidable.

In view of the fact that this same great man has since protested publicly against the suggested foreign intervention on the railways, the writer might have been considerably puzzled by these remarks if he had let the subject drop there; but a very little inquiry elicited the opinion that the Powers could confer a great blessing upon China by obliterating the Tuchun's enemies, putting the party to which he was an adherent in power and keeping it there. To understand a Chinese remark as a Chinese understands it, one must not only know the English equivalents of the Chinese phrases, but also learn to guess at what is left unsaid. Chinese remarks about the merits of foreign rule are particularly subject to this rule.

NO PRECEDENT IN HISTORY.

The historical argument looks strong, but really is not pertinent. China has been repeatedly conquered and governed over long periods by aliens. After the collapse of the Tang dynasty North China, the home of the original Chinese and the cradle of Chinese culture, was governed by alien conquerors for about 750 out of 1,000 years. During this same period South China accepted alien rule for a total of about 200 years. Ch'in Shih Huang, the builder of the Great Wall, who did China the service of wiping out feudalism and giving her unity, was the chief of a Kansu tribe as alien racially to the ancient Chinese as the modern Mongols are to the modern Chinese, but already converted to some respect for Chinese culture. Many more examples of this sort could be cited if they constituted a precedent for foreign control in China from the Chinese historical point of view.

As it happens they constitute no precedent. The barbarians who so often conquered and ruled portions or the whole of China were not only China's cultural inferiors but were conscious of it and admitted it. The only superiority they claimed was greater vitality and a greater inclination to fight. This the Chinese were ready enough to grant them because they thought them barbarous assets at best. China's invaders in all past ages were not only led to conform to all Chinese traditions and standards, but hastened to conform in most instances and in many cases put every inducement before their followers to become Chinese and be assimilated as quickly as possible. The Manchus conformed to a great degree, becoming Chinese in speech, religion and in many fundamental customs, but they tried to keep alive a few of their own characteristic traits and manners and to this degree, and no more the Chinese disliked them. Chinese tolerance is now extended to the Manchus in direct proportion to the degree of conformity, and the time is rapidly coming when a Chihli man of Manchu descent will be no more an alien and therefore just as eligible as a ruler as a Honanese descended from the original Chinese stock. Chinese prejudice against the foreigner as an alien does not exist, but the Chinese dislike for anyone, of whatever race, who refuses to conform to Chinese ways and cannot be assimilated, is intense and will always remain so.

THE UNMIXING FOREIGNER.

The more nearly an Occidental approaches Chinese standards in manners, speech, ethical code and outlook upon the problems of life, particularly the outlook upon social relations, the less is he disliked and the more easily is his participation in Chinese affairs whether domestic or public tolerated. The Chinese have, however, had enough to do with Occidentals during the past few centuries to know for certain that almost no foreigners of the pale breed can or will go further towards conformity than a grudging attempt to be polite and amiable in the Chinese way, which attempt is usually more or less a failure.

The missionary who takes infinite pains to meet the Chinese half way is, because of the uncompromising rigidity of his codes, generally less Chinese in native appraisement than the members of any other class of foreigners. The Chinese observe that the children of foreigners born among them and raised to speak their language and understand their ways of thinking are often even less inclined to work sympathetically and tolerantly with them than their elders who were born abroad. They have observed that the children of mixed marriages who have Chinese blood in their veins and can think like a Chinese when they want to, take more pains than anyone else to be aggressively foreign. From all this they know that a government imposed upon China by Occidentals and controlled by them would be an alien Government if it lasted a thousand years and that it would therefore be a government to resist whenever possible, to foil whenever possible, to hate always and to overthrow at last. And this must be from start to finish the attitude of the whole Chinese nation toward intervention.

THE FOREIGNER BLAMED.

It is not only for this very fundamental reason that the Chinese are unlikely to invite intervention, but for many others as well. A great number of the Chinese who are equipped to study and think about existing conditions hold the foreigners in part responsible for China's present hopelessness and therefore feel intensely that foreign influence is something that China must have less of instead of more, if she is to get on her feet again. This we may think ill-founded and unfair, but there can no doubt that the idea exists in many minds. A prominent political leader, who has done more than his share to trundle the country towards oblivion, remarked to the writer a few days ago that China was now in a worse state than she was during the Wu Tai, her darkest era, a thousand years ago and that the outlook was utterly devoid of hope. The writer objected that China had pulled herself out of the Wu Tai period somehow and out of many other difficulties and might still be counted upon to straighten out the present mess in time.

"Ah! But there were no foreigners in China a thousand years ago to complicate matters," said he quickly. "And there were no foreign relations in the modern sense to hamper the settlement of our own affairs in our own way. No, it's hopeless now."

Modifications of this idea are in the back of almost every Chinese mind. The conservatives hold us responsible for introducing the new ideas which have thrown the whole well balanced and smooth-running Chinese machine out of gear. The young radicals believe that we are the allies of the conservative and reactionary forces in China who prevent the application of new ideas and essential reforms and that we are deliberately barring China from becoming a modern Power among the Powers.

THE OFFICIALS ANTI-FOREIGN.

The big official caste in China which does not want peace leading to an efficient Chinese Government which would put a check upon officialdom and its irregular but congenial and profitable career, certainly do not want a strong foreign régime which would impose still more stringent checks and it is absurd therefore to expect them to ask for intervention of the sort which foreigners contemplate when they discuss the subject. Not only are all officialdom prepared to resist further foreign control, but they are now fully entered upon a campaign for breaking down such alien control over their affairs in this campaign they have the full support of all the Chinese people as we are forced to observe every day. Foreign administered concessions maintain China's domestic credit, the last shred of her foreign credit, and keep her Government out or bankruptcy, but China is so far from being grateful for such services that even those who profit from them directly never fail to interfere with them whenever possible and the Chinese people never fail to cheer efforts at interference. Dr. Sun's latest manoeuvre against the Customs at Canton threatened to deprive Peking of a good slice of revenue and to wreck China's domestic credit upon which the Government is often wholly dependent, but there was not an official in Peking who did not admire Dr. Sun's courage in challenging the foreigner and did not resent the despatch of foreign gunboats to interfere with his schemes. Even the Wai Chiao pu, which now has to rely upon the Customs collectorate to keep its Ministers abroad out of beggary, felt called upon to inquire officially why Dr. Sun had been checked. The Peking schools are now begging for support from the same foreign-administered revenue service so that when teachers and students have eaten heartily and are sure of more meals to come they can more heartily curse the foreigner and advocate his elimination from Chinese affairs.

A HOPELESS INCONSISTENCY.

The last refuges of Chinese commerce from Chinese chaos, banditry, Chinese military positions and Chinese official rapacity are the ports and concessions under foreign jurisdiction. They are the richest and happiest communities in China, not so much because connected with the foreigner brings prosperity as because they are the only spots in China where native industry, thrift and business acumen are given a fair chance to be decently rewarded. Yet the treaty port Chinese and their offspring, who have made their home in the ports and who would never dream of investing their money where unless in partnership with officials who could protect them, side ventures, are inevitably

That time of year thou may'st in me behold
When worn out clothes and few at that do hang
Upon these limbs which shake against the cold,
And ruined hats where once the gay birds sang.

On me thou seest the twilight of such style
As once was modish, sent me from the West,
But by and by I'll discard with a smile,
The garbage man will take away the rest.

On me thou seest last October's pride
That now indeed doth look a perfect guy
And speedily it must be cast aside
Alas that e'en the best of styles must die!

For clothes which I must buy erelong.

"THE INGENUE"

A Talk With a Charming Young Actress

By Elizabeth Pepys.

"Tell us about yourself," we said to Miss Tina Gerald, the petite actress who with T. J. Fenwick is appearing at the Lyceum in a repertoire of one-act plays written and produced by Mr. Fenwick himself.

"But I'm afraid there's not much to tell—yet," answered Miss Gerald modestly. "My achievements are mostly ahead of me—at least I hope so," and the interviewer realized that a more appropriate question would have been "Are you through school yet, and how does a young person like you happen to be embarked on so ambitious an undertaking as this?"

"I've always been interested in the stage, or at least in the power of the spoken word to sway and influence an audience," went on this appealing, brown-eyed young person. "When I was a child in my convent school I used to love to recite and when I was 11 I got the first prize in elocution when 300 girls were competing. That decided me to try for the stage, and I never gave up the idea. Of course my parents didn't like to have their child go on the stage, but they saw that my whole heart was in it and consented."

In England I worked desperately hard to get any rôle in any play where I could secure an engagement for I wanted experience on the stage. I played the ingénue fortunate enough to get some good parts as Stella in "Brown Sugar," as Gypsy in "Peg o' My Ned" and Sydney in "The Bill of Divorcement." Yes, I'm usually the ingenue though in "The Intruders" I appear as a woman who has been married for 17 years. My stage experience covers only about three years.

"How did I get here? With the Bandman Company and when my contract with them was up I joined the Warwick Comedy Company with whom Mr. Fenwick was playing. I enjoy acting in these short plays more than anything else I've done, but it is far more difficult. You see when there are only two actors to carry the whole evening any defect is magnified. You cannot depend upon a supporting cast, you don't have the encouragement of the company carrying on, and you can't hide behind any one else. There you are, just the two of you. You can't deceive the audience. Either you're good or you're bad. And another thing—in a play which is repeated night after night you are the one person of your stage personality for a stretch of time, but in these plays one has to be four or more people in rapid succession, and when you feel each part deeply it's considerable of a wrench to go on to the next rôle."

"Yes, we arrange our own stage settings, hunting up the appropriate sets in each place we play in. You have no idea how difficult it is sometimes to find furniture which will express the psychology of the play, and we try to have the smallest detail significant. Take it seriously? Rather. No amount of time or trouble is wasted if one gets the right effect thereby, for the stage is a marvellous agency for education.

"The cinema? I've never done anything for the screen, but I am meaning to do something in that line soon. I am a very athletic person and keen on riding, tennis and sports and the managers tell me those are useful sidelines for film work. My arrangements are uncertain. We shall return to Hongkong for an engagement but our precise itinerary home is not fixed."

SPORTS SUITS

Comfortable Togs for Country Excursions

The season of China New Year and House-parties is upon us as we write. The open season for houseboats and week-end trips is imminent. Wherefore if one's sports clothes have lapsed, as it were, or been lost or stolen, now, now is the precise moment to assemble others. True the Chinese tailor may have to be driven to his task, but with the hint of no clothes, no cumshas, much may be accomplished. Another incentive to new sports clothes is the trip southward, to Hongkong or Manila, or why not to Java while one is about it?

WIDE CHOICE OF FABRICS.

Never was there so much latitude allowed the sport costume. This may be another instance of the deplorable letting down of the conventions which bring tears to the eyes of our grandmothers and unhallowed twinkles to the smiling eyes of the Younger Set but it is to say the least convenient to bend the conventions to your mood and depart from a rigid mode if it does not fit your particular style. Of course tweed is the first thing which suggests itself to the outdoor soul, and kasha, jersey and knitted suits come next. But, be it said beneath the breath, duvetine is also made up into some extremely smart suits which look as appropriate as those in harsher fabrics.

Bark brown, leaf and sand—what more fitting colours could be chosen? The only opposition is grey, and indeed a compromise is often reached and the two colours are worn together. A hat trimmed with both brown and grey announces at once that there is to be no distinction made twixt these two most popular shades. In this way its wearer is able to wear brown or grey shoes and stockings as she wishes—no, we do not mean that one brown and one grey shoe are to be worn simultaneously. If these shades seem too dull to you, remember there is always the gay scarf to brighten the corner where you are.

CAPES FOR THE COUNTRY.

The plaidie is with us this season and many a detachable plaid cape accompanies a suit—either plain or plaided. Since town is withdrawing its favour from the cape we may expect to see more and more in the country. And there are some new Rodier fabrics, as yet unknown to Shanghai, which are said to be very popular abroad—lame chinee, for instance, which is reported as a soft material combining two-toned wools and sometimes made with a brilliant border. Leather is always good, both as a material and as a trimming and furs may be used for adornment, if only the less formal are chosen, badger for choice.

There is as much choice in the style of the sports costume as there is in materials. One of Chanel's models is a high-necked Russian blouse worn with a straight skirt which parts to show pantalettes, which have are quite the masculine trouser effect, reaching almost to the hem of the skirt. There will always be the typical Norfolk and short, plain skirt; but pleated skirts, coatees, sweaters and loose outside wraps are also in the picture. A suede jacket with helmet to match looks well with a plaided or pleated skirt. And of course there are always the comfortable knickerbocker suits. A plain cloche as small as possible, wool, cashmere or lisle stockings, smartly figured and heavy doc-skin gloves complete the outfit.

THE SINE QUA NON

What Would Winter be Without It?

There is one thing on which we all agree out here in China. Foreigners and Chinese we unite upon this one object. There is no bar of nationality set upon it, no clash of race or colour. Its value is, like the motion to adjourn, undebatcable. Men and women, old and young sing its praises in unison. While its usefulness is seasonal, still it is never out of fashion and absolutely no family should be without it.

The chill of many an occasion has disappeared beneath its genial influence. No. The bright little boy in the corner has guessed wrong, it is not a cocktail. Its domain is even broader. Many a painful experience has been eased by its soothing warmth. No again. It is not tooth ache drops, chloroform or the waters of Lethe But, yes, it is the Sing-Song Girl's warmest friend, it is the comforter of our nights and the inestimable friend of the nursery. It is, in short, Our Hot Water Bottle.

WOMEN AND MEN

her that you have taken. For my ears crave incessantly for the soft laughter of her voice so that by day I have no rest. And at night I am consumed as if by fire with the desire of her warm caresses. By day the light of the sun is a burden if I have not her companionship in the shade of the desert and at night the light of the moon is blighted if she is not with me when I walk by the broad and misty expanses of the river."

Then Ghama gave Woman back to Man. And within three days Man came back again to Ghama and said:

"Oh Great God Ghama take away now again this creature with which thou hast cursed me. For she is possessed of all those evils which before I reported to you and in a ten times worse degree. So that in truth I cannot support my life with her."

"Neither canst thou live without her," said Ghama.

Then said Man:

"Oh Ghama, what sort of a creature is this thou hast created since I cannot live either with her or without her."

"That I cannot tell you," Ghama answered.

THE IDEALIST HUSBAND

He has above all things imagination, the essential of discernment and sympathy. Men are tender-minded or tough-minded. The idealist husband belongs to the first order. His chief defect from the practically minded woman's standpoint is his deficient interest in the dull but important affairs of everyday life.

He will forget to post his wife's letters and to leave messages with the grocer. Idealists are apt to be elated one day and depressed the next. For that reason the idealist partner may be regarded by his wife as "Undependable."

IMAGINATIVE SYMPATHY.

But in one very important sense he is dependable. His partner knows that he tries to understand the woman's point of view. Seeking instinctively the highest, the finest, and the most admirable virtues in men and women, the idealist husband is often disappointed with reality, though he may have the capacity for discovering noble qualities in despised or misunderstood persons. This power of imaginative sympathy causes the idealist to magnify the merits of a quite commonplace or selfish wife.

The idealist husband provides his mate with emotional experiences that the more stable-minded man cannot yield. It is the law of nature that women are more emotional than men. I am not forgetting the satisfaction of a becoming and well-fitting gown and the solace of a charming room. But these things alone do not appease our heart needs.

THE DREAMER.

The idealist spouse is in many instances somewhat indifferent to material matters. He is a dreamer, and sometimes a creator, and such men are frequently incapable of competing with practical brains in the winning of money.

But he has another talisman of happiness. He can invest the humblest home with the glamour of romance. He can find in his wife the physical charms the superlative character traits and the graces that she fails to discern in herself.

Emotional starvation is the bane of many wives. It is not only the fate of the spinster. Life, married or single, tends too frequently for women to become humdrum and commonplace. Fervour, admiration, sympathy, and understanding are more than jewels. They are priceless and comparatively rare, and they are only attained through idealism.

THE NOVEL TOUCH

How to Transform Familiar Gowns by Different Trimmings

Just about this time of year, when one hopes that one's wardrobe is arranged for the time being, before the premonitions of spring send one's cooling interest in clothes up to fever pitch again, just now we say, comes along a flock of new ideas which demand trying out no matter what the season may be. There is, for example Chanel's use of ostrich feathers to trim an otherwise unadorned frock and it is possible by substituting this little caprice to make one's frock look different enough to deceive one's dearest friend. One gown which affects this style has a wide band which starts from the left hip and slants across the front of the skirt, outlining the outside layer of this three-tiered chiffon evening gown. The cape which falls over one shoulder is edged with ostrich.

Other devices for freshening a frock use ribbon largely. A moire or metal ribbon may start in at the shoulder strap of a square-cut evening gown and fall in graceful lines below the skirt, its draperies being securely caught at the low waistline by a jewelled pin or buckle. The effect is much that of a side train. Again, a series of ruffles of satin ribbon edged with narrow gold or silver braid will give an entirely different air to a straight, narrow-skirted frock. The idea may be repeated in the girdle. A long strip of ribbon may cross the low cut neck of a dancing frock, and crossing at the shoulder fall in uneven lengths at front and back. If the girdle is made of the same ribbon bracded an additional point is scored. The camellia is being used everywhere and perched on the shoulder of a dark gown it looks particularly striking.

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

[illegible] This has happened to the reprint which John Murray recently issued of Captain Scott's "Last Expedition." Now he is making it the first volume of a library to be called "The Modern English Series." The distinctive thing about the works to be included in it, is that they will be abridged, alike in the interest of their cost and in the interest of the general reader. "Scott's Last Expedition" will be followed by Bullen's "Cruise of the Cachalot" and "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," a work of imagination which has gone through many editions since it was written.

Sir Charles Oman has prepared a new edition of the "History of the Art of War in the Middle Ages," which gives a picture of Europe from the fall of the Roman Empire to the time when gunpowder was in general use. Messrs. Methuen will issue the volume shortly.

Dr. Clifford was often asked to write his memoirs, but he refrained from doing so, and perhaps that act of modesty was characteristic of his whole life. His idea was that a man's work was his best record, but he recognized that if it was to be gathered into any sort of picture, there must be a biography. Dr. Clifford's is to be written by Sir James Marchant, whom we already know as the biographer of several eminent divines. None of them offered better material for a human and winsome book than the old pastor of Westbourne Chapel. Nonconformists, especially, will have a hearty welcome for it from Cassell, in the course of the year.

The Queen has been pleased to accept an autographed copy of Miss Mollie Panter Downes' novel, "The Shoreless Sea." (reviewed in this issue). Miss Panter-Downes, who is a niece of Sir Francis Fuller, is only 16 years of age. Her first novel is meeting with appreciation, and she is busily engaged on the next.

Music, having vital significance as an art, must meet some want in human nature. That is the idea behind a book, "Music and Mind," by Dr. Yorke Trotter, which Methuen is publishing. It explains the meaning and effect of music, from the standpoint of psychology. It is in three parts, and the first of these is concerned with the relation of music to the mind. Next, the material of music is discussed, and, finally, Dr. Yorke Trotter shows how education in music should be conducted. He is already known as the author of a book on "The Making of Musicians."

Every now and then the modest war diary of some brave English soldier crawls into print, and one is due from the house of Murray. It is the diary of Colonel Hamilton, the Master of Belhaven, as the Scottish courtesy title goes. He served in France from the time war broke out until he was killed during the defence of Avre, near Amiens, in 1918, while commanding a brigade of artillery. The Master of Belhaven was first, foremost and always a soldier, and his diary is characterized by a soldier's brevity and point. He kept it under great difficulties and he also made maps for it.

Years ago, when an election happened, London publishers hastened to get out books or pamphlets bearing upon the political questions under discussion. It is a curious fact that, at the recent election, there was scarcely any literature of the sort from the book houses, though lots of it appeared from elsewhere. Noting this change, a leading London publisher said, "The pamphlet is dead, and Gladstone was the last great writer of it."

DUTCH COURAGE

"DUTCH COURAGE." By Jack London Messrs. Mills and Boon, publishers, London.

Jack London books are, as a rule, largely bought up, there being a very decided cadre of enthusiasts who swear by this writer quite as much as a wide circle of Americans swear at the Eighteenth Amendment. "Dutch Courage," however, to the non-enthusiast is not likely to be classed with such novels as "Burning Daylight" and others which saw the author at his best. This book now under review is a series of short stories which serve to illustrate yet once more the truism that the highly successful writer of the 60,000 word novel is not always equally the master of the 5,000. But the book will surely find a resting place in the Libraries of the thousands of the reading public who abide by one writer.

A NEW PHILOSOPHY FOR CHINA

Some Problems of Present Day Education

"CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AND THE NATIONAL CONSCIOUSNESS IN CHINA." By James B. Webster. Ph. D. pp. XI and 323. $2.50 gold. Pub. by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

Between the yellow covers of this useful book Dr. Webster thinks yellow in the matter of Christian Education in China, and his discussion will prove very stimulating to missionaries and their friends. What part should education play in the missionary enterprise? That is a question that is searching the missionary field and is reacting upon the missionary base, raising important issues in connexion with the Christian faith.

It is the success of the Schools and Colleges in one sense, it is their failure in another sense, that combine to make this one of the most urgent questions of the day. If the heart of China is to be won and held for a new faith, must not the Chinese mind be possessed with a new philosophy of life, or can its old and traditional outlook be adapted for a setting of the Gospel? Shall the teaching be so directed as to make the Church more efficient in the land, or in order to prepare the young manhood of China for the advent of Western Industrialism?

As might be gathered from the title, this book accepts the second alternative to both these questions, and makes out a very good case, although it proceeds in parts in a rather languid style. "A study of various reports, papers and conferences on educational work, shows that both view points have been within the range of vision of many missionaries, but the same study leaves one with the feeling that the verbal, symbolic interpretation of Christianity has been emphasized more than the vital, experimental" (p. 42). As Dr. Webster truly adds, "It is easier to select and teach by rote certain classics that we have inherited from our past, than it is to interpret the present and future needs of China." (p. 51).

In chapter 4 the classical ideal of education is examined and shown to be based on the egoistic instinct. It depends too much on authority and tradition and does not fit the requirements of an industrial and democratic age. Why should we force it upon China?

Chapter 5 describes the alternative "social ideal" in education which originated in the teaching of Jesus rather than in the philosophy of Greece. It runs to activities rather than to niceties; it is [illegible] than symbolic;" it works by may rather than by must (if I can put the distinction in a word); its aim is [illegible] and [illegible] its spirit [illegible] and therefore primarily religious" (p. 60), discarding also as [illegible] for its [illegible]

Dr. Webster was on the staff of Shanghai College [illegible] his preface from far away in New Jersey, which may account for his immense optimism in the new China. And certainly his pages are a refreshing change from the columns of the press with their reflexion of national impotence. An educationist, however, must be a believer, and like Susan Nipper, "not a giver up," because he is in touch with the untried possibilities of the young, and although he is aware that missionary colleges and schools cannot go very far with the 100,000,000 people of China, he keenly desires a model type of education to be set up which shall be disinterested and imaginative, based on the traditional culture of China and bent to the practical requirements of the new era. "How can we render our best service to China? Shall we encourage her to borrow her new civilization wholesale, by the short-cut of the classical system? Or shall we help her to construct it more slowly out of her own rapidly changing social, economic, moral and religious conditions" (p. 127).

The second half of the book gathers together in eight chapters the present factors in the mental life of China, biological, psychological economic, cultural and so on—an interesting survey, based largely on the studies of Kirkpatrick, Monroe, Bashford and others. It is clearly a book of real importance on which the attention of many thinkers is sure to be focussed for the advantage of China. There is a useful biography at the end.

WOMAN NEW OR WOMAN OLD?

"WOMAN—A VINDICATION." By Anthony M. Ludovici. Alfred A. Knopf. New York. And Chinese-American Publishing Co.

It is hardly surprising to be told that this book has "caused a sensation" at Home. It would anywhere. In an age which pays loud lip-service (if nothing more) to the theory of woman's "higher mission" in life, to the nobility, if not desirability, of her remaining independent of man, of proclaiming her right to self-expression and self-determination and of entering into competition with man in every possible pursuit, the author defiantly proclaims that there is no higher mission in life for woman than wifehood and motherhood and that any assertion of the contrary is an outrage on the whole course of nature and, in the case of a normally healthy woman, an utter self-delusion. The whole purpose of life, he says, is to produce more life. There are unfortunately an increasing number of people who say "nay" to this axiom. They are the "negative" men and women and in Mulvaney's phrase, are "a curse to themselves and a nuisance to their betters." The others, those who say "yea" to the life commandment are the "positives," and, however much a positive girl may declare that she does not want a husband and children, her whole being gives her (unconsciously) the lie, and if denied its craving will wreak dire vengeance on her. For Nature has constructed her in every respect, mentally and physically, to carry on the life stream and if she is false to that design, she will suffer for it. The bitter and shrewish spinster is, though disliked, in reality an object of pity: she was the true, the positive woman, baulked of her proper function and now turned sour accordingly. The sweet and popular spinster is one of the "negative" women, a renegade from Nature's camp and in no way worthy of respect.

From this principle, the author, obviously, is able to launch out in a good many directions. It involves, of course, a contrast between the nature of man and the nature of woman and much about the marriage state. The basis of his teaching here is that, while woman's interest in man begins to decline as soon as he has assisted her successfully in the great purpose of her life, he, for his part, is naturally a polygamous animal who must be permitted to act accordingly. Astute readers will perceive at once that this teaching necessitates the rewriting of the marriage service, if not the reconstruction of society. Mr. Ludovici's views of divorce, if we understand them aright, are equally startling. Putting them as delicately as possible, they would appear to come to this: if the male co-respondent imagines that his own fatal gift of beauty has conquered the erring wife, he is a conceited prig and a traitor to the husband; but if he recognizes that the said erring wife merely turns to him—her husband, say, having been in Kamchatka or Timoucteo for the past three years with little immediate prospect of return—under the irresistible urge of life commanding her to produce more life, and that he himself is merely a means of enabling her to fulfil the purposes of Nature, then he is a virtuous hero who deserves a putty medal. We are not absolutely sure that this is the author's real meaning, but it appears to follow as the necessary corollary of the rest of his dogmas.

There is much in the book with which one may wholeheartedly agree. But there is also much which strikes one as fantastic and unreal. To ignore the physical side of life is unquestionably a mistake. But one cannot help thinking that the author's hatred of the mischievous twaddle about female rights, the prating of "the barren women who talk," "the screams of the moral-minded colonels," has led him farther in the opposite direction than he should, or perhaps really intended to go. The book is written with great earnestness, a complete lack of anything like reticence and some irritatingly slipshod grammar—notably the now universal fault of letting the number of the verb be attracted to that of the substantive nearest to it, instead of agreeing, as it should do, with the subject of the sentence.

SEAPORTS OF THE FAR EAST

A Notable Book for Business Men

We have received a copy of "Seaports of the Far East: historical, descriptive, commercial and industrial," a volume compiled by Mr. Allister Macmillan, F.R.G.S., and published by Messrs. W.H. and L. Collingridge, of Aldersgate Street, London. The production is one of over 500 pages, handsomely bound and printed, copiously illustrated, and is in every respect a model of its kind. The mass of descriptive and general information which the book contains represents quite a formidable amount of labour on the part of the editor, and so far as we have put the work to a test, the work has been adequately and efficiently done, to such an extent that with this volume at command, a business man of the Far East will find himself with a complete view, in perspective and detail, of commercial activities from Burma to Shanghai. There are separate sections for Burma, Siam, the Malay Peninsula, Penang, Singapore, Hongkong and Shanghai, each being prefaced by historical and descriptive matter of considerable interest and followed by detailed accounts of the commerce of the country and accounts of the leading firms and their special business activities.

These are all excellently done, and we have to congratulate Mr. Macmillan upon the admirable way in which the work has been planned and carried through. Subscribers to the volume should be very well satisfied. It presents a view of the Far Eastern commercial world which should be of great value to the alert business man.

The Shanghai section of the volume opens with a well written summary of local history and the development of the port, and has some exceedingly interesting notes on business progress and conditions. Discussing the question of German progress here since the war, the writer expresses the opinion that it is doubtful whether business men of any other nationality are so well informed as to Chinese requirements, methods of transit, and business in general as are the Germans. Dealing with American trade, the author notes that despite the great strides made it has not so far come up to expectations.

CHINESE BANK DEVELOPMENT.

One of the most striking features of the recent development of Shanghai is the extraordinary increase in the number of Chinese banks, and to this the writer has some interesting remarks to make. Of the reasons for the progress made by Chinese banks, he says is that successful efforts have been made to attract deposits from agriculturists and others in the interior. The Chinese are being educated by means of pamphlets, canvassers and "haranguers" as to the security and advantages of depositing their money with the Chinese banks instead of burying it in the ground and leaving it there until needed, or leaving it in the care of pawnshops and big honge.

Other features of commerce and finance are capably dealt with, and accounts are given of most of the leading firms in Shanghai, this section providing a large fund of interesting information. As a business enterprise, for business men the book can be well recommended.

THE TOWN OF GOLF AND LEARNING

"OLD ST. ANDREWS." By Eric S. Robertson. Dent. 7s. 6d.

This is that "St. Andrews by the Northern Sea" that Andrew Lang hymned so prettily. It has had a long and curious history, being one of those coast towns that were more populous in the Middle Ages than they are to-day. At the present time, St. Andrews is chiefly famed for its excellent university and its golf. Its history goes back to the Picts, who probably had a stronghold there, and it was also the site of a Culdee monastery. It was a bishopric before the Norman Conquest of England, and was an Archbishopric before the end of the 15th century. The university was founded early in that century.

Dr. Robertson deals with the early history of the town, and only touches lightly on its later phases. He gives a chapter on Johnson's visit, and then summarises all that has happened since in one short concluding chapter. As much of the very early history is speculative, Dr. Robertson has to fill in the picture with what might be called "perhaps and probably" strokes, but he contrives to make a very pleasant and instructive narrative out of it. The volume is illustrated with some unpretentious pencil drawings by the author.

PUNCH

"THE TRAGEDY OF MR. PUNCH." By Russell Thorndike and R. Arkell (Duckworth. 15s.)

This is a feast of a book. The play itself is worthy of the great name it bears; but in this edition there are also nine coloured illustrations by Mr. Arthur Watts, and an introductory essay by Mr. Max Beerbohm. The essay is all that we might expect from Max writing on Punch, with the exception of the opening sentences. Max asks where "Punch" is:—

> He was born in the land of my adoption, Italy; but I never came across him there. He is known to have travelled in France during the days of the Grand Monarque; but there is never a trace of him in France now. And even in England, which was so very much the land of his adoption, he is seen no more, and survives only as a name, the name of a weekly conducted periodical.

We fear Max is right about England; and about Italy we must take his word, though we might have mentioned Punch's multitudinous family of marionettes—but France! Unless something disastrous has happened since last Christmas, Max could still find the little Guignol set in the Champs Elysées, near the swings and the little piles of sand. Or can it be that it is the ghost of Punch we have heard squeaking and seen mopping and swaggering in that familiar spot?

For the rest Max's essay is delightful and characteristic tribute to the truculent hero our boyhood, a hero whose behaviou was doubtless a very disastrous example, but who was, one of his player-servants told Mr. Beerbohm in 1915, always good fun."

THE CHINESE TRADE MARKS LAW

Conditions Under Which Diplomatic Body are Prepared to Recognize It: Mackay Treaty a Dead Letter

Peking, Feb. 1.

The Diplomatic Body sent a note to the Chinese Government on Wednesday afternoon containing three "considerations and one essential condition" on which the Powers are prepared to recognize the Chinese Trademarks law:—

Firstly, objecting to Article Ten of the Chinese Law giving the Trademarks Bureau the right to apply for change of the firm's representative applying for registration, which the notes characterizes as arbitrary and useless and should be abolished;

Secondly, suggests foreign expert assistance in the Bureau so as to facilitate dealing with complicated questions; and,

Thirdly, asking for assurance that the Trademarks Gazette will publish fully and expeditiously all registrations and details connected with them, adding that the value of this will be greatly enhanced if accompanied by an English translation.

The fourth article of the Note contains three essential conditions:—

Firstly, requests extension to six months for registration from the date on which the law is formally recognized by the Powers;

Secondly, asks a guarantee of priority in accordance with the Treaties of trademarks provisionally registered with the Customs; and,

Thirdly, that facilities for registration should be afforded to Shanghai and Tientsin in accordance with the Treaties as well as Peking where the Trademarks Bureau will be established.

This Note is receiving the attention of the Government and if the latter accepts it, the Diplomatic Body is empowered to recognize the Chinese law.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING DAY BY DAY

Vice-Ministry of Education: Allocation of Money for Unpaid Salaries

Peking, Jan. 29.

Premier Sun Pao-chi presided over the meeting of the Cabinet this morning which lasted from 10 to 12 o'clock. All the Cabinet Ministers were present. It is understood that the resignation of Mr. Hu Ou-kung, Vice-Minister of Education, was accepted, and that Mr. Lo Hung-nien will be appointed to the post

The payment of wages and salaries was also discussed, and it is understood that arrangements were made for certain allocations in respect of the military, police and educational expenses.

Marshal Chi Hsieh-yuan, Inspecting General of Kiangsu, Chêkiang and Kiangsi, has telegraphed to the Cabinet requesting that the official seal of his office be prepared by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and despatched as quickly as possible for his official use.

A telephone message reached Peking last night to the effect that Marshal Tuan Chi-jui was on the point of leaving Tientsin for Mukden. This intelligence proved very disconcerting, and the authorities are making efforts to dissuade Marshal Tuan from attempting the journey. A meeting between Gen. Chang Tso-lin and Marshal Tuan at this time is regarded as fraught with grave possibilities.

Peking, Jan. 29.

Gen. Chang Tso-lin has sent General Chang Chiu-ching to Peking to express to President Tsao Kun and Marshal Feng Yu-hsiang thanks for the presents sent by them on the occasion of the wedding of General Chang Tso-lin's second son.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Demand on Peking from Tuchun, Navy and Members of Parliament

Peking, Jan. 30.

Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan, Inspector-General of Hunan and Hupeh, has asked for the Government's permission to draw $150,000 of the revenues of the southern section of the Peking-Hankow Railway to cover expenses connected with the establishment of his office as Inspector-General.

Admiral Tu Hsi-kuai, Commander of the naval squadron at Nanking, has sent word to the Government that he must resign unless he receives funds to pay the men under his command. This action is looked upon as the outcome of the recent attempted mutiny, which Admiral Tu quelled by paying the men with his own money. Admiral Tu has been instructed to carry on and informed that funds will be sent to him.

Admiral Wen Shou-teh, Commander of the squadron at Tsingtao, has gone to Loyang to interview Marshal Wu Pei-fu, with the object of arranging for regular payments of the expenses of ships and men under his command.

Members of the House of Representatives yesterday received 55 per cent. of their salaries. Senators will be paid a similar proportion to-morrow, while the salaries of members of the Educational, Police and Military Departments are to be paid on Monday next.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Marshal Wu's Need of Funds: Diplomatic Appointments: The Currency Bureau

Peking, Feb. 1.

Mr. Tchou Tse-chun will leave Peking this evening for Szechuan to assist in securing the release of the two officers of the Yiyang Maru.

General Pei Chien-wu, chief of staff to Marshal Wu Pei-fu, arrived here yesterday in order to interview the President and Premier with reference to financial affairs. Marshal Wu needs funds very badly before the lunar new year.

Admiral Wen Shih-teh, the commander-in-chief of the Tsingtao Squadron, is expected here to-morrow from Loyang, whither he had proceeded in the hope of raising funds for the payment of the naval force now at Tsingtao. His mission was not productive of results.

The following appointments are announced by the Waichiaopu: Mr. Lo Huai to be third secretary of Legation at Brussels in succession to Mr. Chen Chiu, brother of Mr. Chen Lu: Mr. Yung Sen-pao, to be attaché to the Legation in Brussels; and Mr. Hsu Tung-hsi to be third secretary of Legation at Rome in succession to Mr. Chu Pao-lun.

Mr. Lin Pu-suai, Vice-Director of the Currency Bureau, has submitted a statement to the President reporting that the affairs of the Currency Bureau have been wound up and all documents handed over to the Ministry of Finance.

Marshal Chang Shou-tseng, former Premier, called upon the President at ten o'clock this morning and expressed thanks for his elevation to the rank of Shou-wei Shang Chiang-chun. Official circles doubt that any suitable post can be found for Marshal Chang at this time, but it is thought that he may render personal service to Premier Sun Pao-chi in working out plans for unification.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Feb. 2.

The authorities concerned, who have been striving to raise funds required for the Chinese New Year, have succeeded in obtaining $4,000,000. At to-day's Cabinet meeting it was decided to pay the military, police and the Department of Education 70 per cent. of the money due to them, respectively, to Parliament 55 per cent. and to each of the other Government offices 40 per cent.—Eastern News Agency.

A SINO-GERMAN AGREEMENT

INDEMNITY BY GERMANY LESS CHINA DUES

The "North-China Daily News" receives the following information from a source, which we have usually found authentic, concerning the terms of an agreement said to have been arrived at between the Chinese Government and Germany, the latter's representatives being its Minister in Peking and one Herr Feicke (?), and relating to the indemnity payable by Germany to China for the losses sustained by China and her expenses in connexion with the Great War. The four most important terms are:—

(1) Germany will pay to China $100,402,000, Chinese currency, in payment of sums expended by and losses sustained by China in connexion with the Great War.

(2) All amounts owing by the Chinese Government, prior to the Great War (totalling $31,000,000) to the four German firms, Messrs. Carlowitz, H. Diederichsen & Co., Arnhold, Karberg & Co., and the Deutsch-Asiatiche Bank, shall be deducted.

(3) The sum of $15,000,000, due by China to the Deutsch-Asiatische Bank, shall also be the first-named sum.

(4) The sum of $8,000,000, the value of lands and properties seized from German subjects by the Chinese Government during the time Gen. Chin Yun-peng was Premier, shall also be deducted from the first-named sum.

Deducting the sums mentioned in articles 2, 3 and 4, the amount remaining will be approximately $45,000,000, of which the German Government will pay $13,000,000 in cash now deposited in London, and the remainder in Tientsin-Pukow Railway (northern section), Hu-Kuang (Hunan-Kuangtung) Railway and Reorganization bonds of the Chinese Government.

THE RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

Feb. 4.

That the great majority of the British people will endorse Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's action in recognizing the Soviet Government of Russia is, we believe, undoubted. Among manufacturers the desire for a rapprochement with Russia has long been visible and in spite of much discouragement, some of them have been doing their utmost to pave the way thereto. Among others, in the great mass of public opinion, there is an inevitable feeling that the crimes of a nation, or of any section of it, cannot be remembered for ever. The individual offender against society can be caught and punished. The internationally offending Government cannot. The world's displeasure is properly evinced for a period by ostracism, as it was, for example, at the beginning of the present century in the case of Serbia, after the murder of King Alexander and Queen Draga. But that period is distinctly limited. The human family cannot indefinitely keep one of its members beyond the pale. There comes a time when it has to admit that the misdeeds of that member must be left to the adjudication of a higher court. Bolshevism certainly remains as repugnant to British social and political instincts as ever. But on this point, two things are to be remembered. First, that recognition of the Soviet as the de jure Government of Russia implies no approbation of its creed. Secondly, that that creed has become so much modified and watered down that it is hardly to be regarded as the Bolshevism which evoked universal execration three years ago. Great Britain's position would be awkward if a successful counter-revolution restored Tsarism. But of that there appears little chance. All the indications are that the present Government in Russia will continue to change and evolve, but that any violent [illegible] its position is so unlikely to be worth [illegible]

The British Note is straightforward, clear and to the point. The essential part of the restoration of real friendliness and of the credit for Russia, without which recognition is for her an empty shell, is that Soviet agents should stop trying to stir up revolution in the British Empire. In its emphasis on this point the Note leaves nothing to be desired. M. Zinovieff's speech to the Soviet Congress at Moscow, reported in another telegram today, does not make a very good impression at this moment. But the Soviet Government is obviously divided since Lenin's death—a fact which, at once discounts the utterances of any of its older members and makes a new cast the easier where there is something to be gained by it. Furthermore, at the time when M. Zinovieff was speaking, British recognition, which there is no question but that the Soviet most ardently desire, had not actually been accorded. There is a great difference between a trade agreement which stipulates that there shall be no propaganda, and the same stipulation after the plenary honour of recognition has been conferred. As regards treaties, debts and claims, the three are so closely connected that the discussion can hardly settle one point without settling all three. Britain holds that Russia ought to acknowledge her war among other debts and there is abundant precedent for this attitude. It is obviously absurd to expect Russia to pay now; it would be enough that she should admit the liability against the day when she can pay. There is also the question of the property of British subjects in Russia confiscated by the Bolshevists: this calls for and admits of more prompt reparation. During the negotiations for the Krassin trade agreement and at the Genoa Conference, the Soviet put forward large claims on account of all the damage done by White invasions of Russia, alleged to have been financed by the Allies. Some such claims will probably reappear now, though it would be absurd and unreasonable to attempt to make Britain responsible for all these claims, nor could such a manœuvre be tolerated for a moment. But here again, as in the matter of propaganda, the best guarantee of reasonableness on the Soviet's part is that recognition has been accorded. Nothing can alter the moral value of that, and it only depends on Moscow herself to make it of practical usefulness.

Taking it all in all, we believe that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's first move in foreign affairs will be approved by opponents and friends alike, as being wise and statesmanlike. We do not forget that two years ago it was laid down, at a conference of Soviets in Moscow, that at all costs trade agreements and recognition must be obtained, in order to revitalize Russia with a view to resuming the attack on capitalism in all countries. And certainly suspicion of Bolshevism dies hard. But two years ago is two years ago. While Bolshevism itself has changed, many Russians of the old régime support the de facto government, not out of love for it, but for their country's sake. There also appears no doubt that Russians of all classes ardently desired recognition by Great Britain, and the prestige which the latter acquires in being the very first of the Great Powers to take this step is heightened by the circumstances in which it is taken. For if the Labour Government, on coming into power, had been greeted with wringing of hands and falling of values, its action would have been judged abroad as those of a single faction, not representative of the nation. But it has been received with approbation, sterling improves, the Stock Exchange smiles. The Labour Government becomes as much national as that of any other party and the recognition of Russia an expression of national goodwill. It is sincerely to be hoped that the Soviet will so regard and appreciate it.

THE NATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION OF CHINA

Feb. 5.

In a few days the National Medical Association of China will hold in Nanking its fifth biennial conference for the reading and discussion of scientific papers and for social meetings. The Association is exclusively Chinese, consisting of about five hundred members who have received a scientific medical education and follow, more or less closely, the same ethical standards as the profession in the West. Judging by the medical requirements of the Chinese people the Association is very small. If scientifically trained practitioners of medicine here were in the same proportion to the general population as in England, there would be a membership of two hundred thousand. Still, a very fair beginning has been made. The growth of the Association within ten years has been satisfactory, and the spirit of unity has been strengthened by its conferences. We may now rest assured that a nucleus has been formed of a native medical profession that will eventually be equal in standing to the profession in Western countries and be fully adequate to meet all the medical needs of the vast Chinese population.

The growth and standing of the Chinese medical profession should be a matter of deep concern to all who are interested in China, even if the interest is confined almost wholly to business affairs. With the opening and development of mines, factories, mills and other industries and enterprises the number of foreigners will steadily increase and many will be scattered all over the country. In time of sickness possibly few will be out of the range of medical missionaries or other Western physicians; but prevention is better than cure, and whether health can be preserved in ordinary circumstances by foreigners will depend to a very great extent on the prevalence of infectious diseases among the Chinese by whom they are surrounded, and this in turn will depend on the efficiency or otherwise of the medical and public health service of the native practitioners. Even in Shanghai, with its very efficient Health Department and with Isolation Hospitals to which patients with infectious diseases can be promptly removed, the amount of serious sickness amongst the families of foreigners would be very much less if the Chinese doctors in the Settlement were more numerous and well trained. Deadly disease creeps into homes by means of servants and others who carry infection from cases of infectious disease which perhaps have not been reported to the Health Department owing to the ignorance or gross carelessness of the native doctors. This notification is all the more necessary as there are some diseases, such as scarlet fever and diphtheria, which are comparatively new to the Chinese and therefore very virulent. Furthermore, there are epidemic diseases which can only be checked in their spread by quarantine measures based on scientific knowledge. For instance, pneumonic plague is always smouldering to some extent in eastern Russia, Mongolia and Manchuria, ready to cause a vast conflagation when circumstances are more than usually unfavourable. If it were once to break through the barrier of the Manchurian Plague Prevention Service, which has rendered such splendid service under the able leadership of Dr. Wu Lien-teh who received his medical training in England, it might sweep over a large part of China and cause the loss of millions of lives, including perhaps the lives of not a few foreigners. The Peking Government is crippling or closing various departments of the government service, perhaps without great loss; but if the Plague Prevention Service is crippled it may result in awful disaster. Lastly, quarantine itself, though it may be necessary and beneficial, works injury to trade and commerce. As Dr. Noel Davis observed in his report to the Municipal Council, "Commerce is maintained between nations by a network of communications on land and sea which depends for its integrity on freedom from war, pestilence and famine." From almost every point of view a strong, well-trained Chinese medical profession is most necessary for the physical well-being of all who live in China, whether natives or foreigners.

But these properly qualified Chinese physicians, owing to the ignorance and superstition of their people, have "a very hard row to hoe." When it is believed that all forms of sickness, epidemics particularly, are caused by ghosts and demons who can be placated only by gifts to the priests and by charms and incantations, of what avail is scientific medicine? According to common Chinese notions, anyone who has the luck is able to perform cures. An authentic story is told of an old man who came to a foreign hospital with a leg so badly injured that amputation above the knee was necessary. After the wound had healed, out of sheer charity he was provided with a plain, unbendable wooden leg. Being of an inquiring turn of mind he asked if his artificial leg could not be made to bend at the knee. His wish was gratified; with an old door hinge the joint was made. The patient returned home greatly delighted. The report of his wonderful leg spread far and wide. He had to tell the story so often that finally he announced himself as a foreign-trained doctor and soon acquired a large practice. Professionally, he had not a leg to stand on, but the wooden one was very useful and he demonstrated by shrewd "leg-pulling" that his head was not of the same material as his new leg. In Shanghai there are Chinese doctors whose only qualification is the brief period spent as nurse, coolie or patient in a foreign hospital: there are others who have one or two prescriptions which, like all proprietary medicines, occasionally do good or are imagined to do good; others who style themselves doctors are quacks and charlatans of the worst kind, ever ready to take from the most unfortunate patient his last penny. In simple justice to the Chinese physicians who are well trained and anxious to conform to high ethical standards, it is hoped that at the next Annual Meeting of Ratepayers measures will be passed regulating the practice of medicine in the International Settlement, in accordance with the recent report of the committee appointed by the Municipal Council to investigate and report as to what action should be taken to regulate or restrict the sale of poisons.

THE CYCLE OF THE RAT

Feb. 8.

It is natural that foreigners resident in China should be influenced by Chinese superstitions and especially, as the past year has been very bad, by that which bids us believe that with the new cycle there is to be altogether a new turn in events. In matters of superstition, very few of us can afford to throw stones at other people. But on lines of practical common sense, where millions of people agree in a single idea, as in this matter of the better fortune to be expected from the Cycle of the Rat, in some inexplicable but none the less perfectly familiar way, their convictions do have an effect on events. It is the doctrine of Coueism applied to politics. Furthermore, certain notable occasions can be recalled in the recent past, when public opinion has proved itself too strong for the tyrants. Barely fourteen months ago the Chinese business classes absolutely rebelled against the announced increase of postal and telegraphic charges and Peking was forced to cancel them. Last summer the gentry and merchants of Kingsu and Chêkiang coerced their respective Tuchuns into signing a peace agreement—not merely an assertion that neither would fight if not attacked, but a definite assurance of cooperation in defence of peace. And this, quite recently, has been reiterated, again under pressure of public opinion. Finally we have the tobacco shops rebelling against the cigarette tax, with apparently good prospects of success. These assertions of public opinion are of the utmost importance. For every success emboldens the demonstrators to a new trial of strength and increases their chances of winning.

But the process is necessarily slow and many minds are casting about for some speedier solution of China's trouble. The question is then, whence is help to come? The notion of forcible intervention and a debt commission to be established by the Powers, which was once considered inevitable, has gone out of favour, although it might by no means impossibly be revived if, while the circumstances of Europe mended, those of China did not. Alternatively one of our Chinese readers, whose letters on China and her treaties with the Powers reveal careful thinking, even though one may not always agree with them, presses for what might be called a compromise form of intervention. He suggests today that an appeal should be made to the leading Powers interested in China to come and assist in putting her affairs straight, not in defiance of the Chinese but in cooperation with them. The difficulty is to

FAILING TO WIND UP FOR NEW YEAR SETTLEMENT IN PEKING

Finance Minister Wang Hopes Nothing for Tuchuns and Little for Anyone Else

How Domestic Credit Has Gradually Been Frittered Away

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 31.

Before any of the traditional Chinese settlement days—the Dragon Boat Festival, the Autumn Festival and the Chinese New Year—dawn, much speculation as to whether the Government will "get through" or not. The inquiries upon this subject [illegible] can be no categorical reply to pay, because it all depends upon what one means by "getting through," or "passing over" as the Chinese usually translate their own expression. There was a time within the memory of all adult Chinese when the New Year settlement was a complete settlement of all outstanding debts which have fallen due in Government circles as well as in business circles. In this sense Peking cer- [illegible] holidays for five years or more. All settlements have been partial. [illegible] and other bills locally due on [illegible] provincial potentates with part payment of their exorbitant military claims. Then the time came when a settlement meant part payment of accumulated back pay in Peking and a lesser dole to the provincial chiefs. More recently still it has meant for local employees, police, metropolitan troops and the like, a month's back pay or a fraction of a month's back pay, with anything from two or three to 40 months' pay carried forward on the books as a debit.

To the Chinese mind a New Year settlement now means the tactful distribution of enough ready money to all Government employees to enable them to get an extended credit from shopkeepers, domestic employees and the like.

NO OUTSIDER NEED APPLY.

The New Year settlement which Mr. Wang K'o-ming is approaching with what would once have seemed like a pitiably small sum, would have been considered a [illegible] failure a few years ago. It will probably be a success in the sense that enough ready money will be distributed to revive everyone's credit for a little while longer and therefore to keep everyone quiet. Estimates of what Mr. Wang has to spend vary so widely that it is futile to quote them, but at a conservative guess, echoed by the Chinese press, he will have something like $[illegible] from the Salt and other revenues and perhaps $1,000,000 from the native banks in small short-term loans. If the [illegible] employees, the police and the soldiers are to have six months' pay, covering [illegible] there will be absolutely nothing left [illegible] outside of Peking, and there is not the good reason to believe that no [illegible] debts will be paid.

This is very disappointing to many, especially to [illegible]. It is hinted in some quarters that Mr. Wang's failure to [illegible] more funds so that the President's military dependents could be subsidized to some extent was deliberate and that both he and the President wanted to "fail" so that the provincial chiefs, who have already taken unto themselves the land tax, the likin revenues, the so-called native customs outside the Treaty Ports, the wine and tobacco taxes, the bulk of the railway revenues (in some cases gross receipts) and a generous share of the salt revenues, all the traditional sources of Peking's revenue and the proceeds of hundreds of new petty taxes and impositions, ushered in under the Manchus, will get out of the habit of looking to Peking for further endowment. It is supposed in some quarters that a loan is planned to make the settlement relatively a festive one so that the provincial authorities will understand that if they want a Government they will have to support it.

DOMESTIC CREDIT GONE.

Although the time is coming soon enough when the provinces will have to realize this, there is no good reason for believing that either the President or the Minister of Finance would not have collected more money had it been available and would not have been prepared to subsidize the Tuchuns, the Super-Tuchuns and the Navy with whatever was left after a fractional settlement had been made in Peking. The real truth of the situation is that domestic credit is nearly as dead as foreign credit and that the Chinese bankers have adopted the position, in dealing with a Government which deals consistently with its creditors in bad faith, that nothing constitutes a security if they cannot foreclose upon it when the Government defaults. From this point of view Peking has nothing left but its physical assets—its palaces, walls, towers, libraries and museums—and these would not be security if a defaulting administration refused to let them be taken away and still had a police force that would take orders.

The hypothecation of the salt surplus has come to be a farce. Salt surplus on the books ceased to exist long ago because every cent of revenue from this source which the Government accepts ought now to be going to the service of the countless loans nominally "secured" upon surplus. The monthly releases only go into the treasury now because the administration coolly defaults on each and every loan issued on this security with the exception of the Japanese portion of the 96-million issue upon which the Yokohama Specie Bank happens, as a "Salt Bank," to be able to foreclose monthly. To any Chinese banker a note or bond issued on Salt surplus is nothing but a promissory note from a Government which has broken every similar promise in the past. The wine and tobacco revenues are subject to the same [illegible]. The railways are worthless now as security for [illegible] loans. The Government gets no credit for the service of the consolidated domestic loans because it is too generally known that the investors owe nothing to the good faith to the Government and everything to the control of the surplus by Sir Francis Aglen.

THE OCTROI AND THE I.-G.

The very last revenue service remaining to Peking and available to Mr. Wang K'o-ming as security in the old sense, was the city octroi, a gate tax upon merchandise, and recent negotiations between the Ministry of Finance and the bankers have established the fact that this is not a security in the new sense—it is not a pledged article which the bankers can confiscate as a pawnbroker does a watch. In refusing to lend on this nominal security, the bankers have simply made a public appraisement of the worth of Peking's promise to pay.

As it has been very generally reported, the original proposal was to issue treasury notes to the total face value of $12,000,000. It was hoped for a brief space that both the banks and the investing public might be coaxed into taking up these notes at a fair price if it were advertised that Sir Francis Aglen would administer the loan service. Chinese officials always open manœuvres of this sort by hoping that the person they wish to deceive is stupider than the average. It was obviously hoped that Sir Francis Aglen would not know that the Peking primary schools, the police, the President's office, several internal loans and Marshal Feng Yü-hsiang all have recognized claims upon the octroi receipts which the latter do not meet in full. It was hoped that he would not realize that after the use of his name had sold the $12,000,000 worth of notes, he would have absolutely nothing from the octroi for loan service unless he put in his own staff and were given as complete authority over it as he has over the Customs, in which event he would have to refuse all the older dependents upon this revenue the majority of their customary subsidies and thereby make himself exceedingly unpopular with a number of very high functionaries.

Before going very deeply into the octroi proposal the bankers took pains to find out what Sir Francis Aglen thought about it and learned immediately that the Inspector-General of Customs was fully aware of the worth of the security. The matter was not [illegible] by the banks [illegible] ments and if there had been any chance of underwriting the loan, putting it on the market at a fair price and keeping it at a reasonable quotation, they would have obliged the Government. They therefore sounded out the market through their branches and learned that an 8 per cent. loan with the octroi as security could not possibly be sold at a higher quotation than 70 and that foreign investors would not be likely to accept the notes at 50. One or two foreign bankers when consulted said that they might personally do a little private gambling in the notes when they had dropped to 20. At this juncture inquiries ceased and the Ministry of Finance was flatly refused a loan.

A POLITICAL OMEN.

This refusal, since it reflects a new and thoroughly businesslike attitude towards Peking's credit and the worth of Peking's remaining securities, is politically very significant. It means that with any appreciable loss of Salt revenue the surplus which has ceased to exist on the books will actually disappear and that if the provinces do not curtail their military enterprises and support Peking, the Central Government will simply sputter out like a dry lamp.

ACCORDING to the new Constitution of the Republic, the President has no right to bestow meritorious ranks on officials, therefore on New Year's day no mandate for such purpose was issued.

CHIAHO and Wenhu decorations will no longer "come up with the rations," or rather there will not be such a plentitude of them in future. Under the new constitution, the President is deprived of awarding them. He is, however, according to a Hankow paper, contemplating the bestowal of Lion swords on civil officials instead.

DR. Sun Yat-sen, president of the Kuomintang (Nationalist) party, at the All-China Kuomintang Convention at Canton last week expressed his condolence over the death of Mr. Lenin, saying that Canton had lost one of its best friends. Dr. Sun considered Mr. Lenin the ablest revolutionist, whose able work in Russia could be wisely copied by the Kuomintang members.

NAVAL OFFICERS [illegible] AT NANKING

Peking, Feb.

It is learned that, as the result of a naval court-martial at Nanking to investigate the attempt to seize the gunboats, Chutai and Kiangli, on January 26, three officers were summarily executed on January 27. Seventeen [illegible] are still detained.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SHORT LIVED SCARE AT AMOY

Peking, Feb. 7.

Telegrams from Amoy report that a tense situation has developed there resulting from the kidnaping of seven Formosans by General Chwang Chih-ping's troops while searching for arms. Fearing an attack from the mainland, the American Consul-General on Sunday wired to Hongkong for a destroyer, which arrived on Tuesday. The destroyer returned to Hongkong on the following day as the situation had become calm. It is understood that a Japanese naval force is shortly proceeding to Amoy.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TUCHUN Hsiao Yao-nan presided at a meeting of the Hankow Chamber of Commerce on Wednesday last, to discuss the possibility of building a Memorial Hospital for the late F. [illegible] Malotto. Leading merchants were asked to subscribe towards the contruction.

MARSHAL Chang Tso-lin has requested the Foreign Office to lodge protests with the Soviet Mission in Peking over the presence of three [illegible] Russian troops in the Suiyuan near Wohp[illegible] Tahsiangtun. The reports say that these regiments include machine gun corps, cavalry and infantry as well as several armoured wagons.

THE Waichiaopu has asked the German Minister to remind the German Consul at Canton that a trade agreement between Germany and Canton will not be recognized by the Central Government as valid, writes the Peking correspondent of the "Peking & Tientsin Times." A Peking intelligence officer in Canton called the attention to reported negotiations between Dr. Sun Yat-sen and Germany's Consular representative in Canton.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

ANOTHER RACE COURSE AT CHUNGKING

Sporting Venture in the Far West: A Great Success: How It Brings Chinese and Foreigners Together in Pursuit of Sport

From a Chungking Correspondent

The very interesting article in your issue of January 12 describing the genesis and growth of the Honan Race Club prompts me to draw attention to a similar enterprise which the foreign residents of far off Chungking have recently initiated with corres-

Szechuan is famous for its ponies, a fact which seems to be generally unknown to the outside world. Most residents in Chungking keep a pony or two each to ... them up and down the hills ... over the everlasting steps ... are such a feature of the ... geography of the place. That our local ponies are capable of climbing up and down the most intricate and impossible flights of steps is a commonplace of our daily life. It always remained to be demonstrated that our ponies could be trained to fast racing as easily as from first three meetings held last year The difficulty was to find some ... plane on whilh to race them. In Chungking there is hardly 50 yards of flat going to be found anywhere. The only level stretches to be found near the city are the shingle banks which lie exposed in the bed of the Yangtze during autumn, winter and spring. But shingle and small boulders are impossible to race on even to the cat-like ponies of Szechuan. We have gazed upon the shingle banks for years and often idly speculated on the project of removing the pebbles and boulders and laying down a track of sand, ashes and lime, but where was the money to come from? However, in November last the rising tide of local energy, fed by a controversy over the respective speeds of well known ponies, burst its old banks. We actually raised a guarantee fund and constructed a half mile ...

To the unbounded delight of all, the track proved a great success and the ponies took to the rails like ducks to water. The first three meeting held last year yielded funds sufficient to wipe off the total cost of the course and to provide a credit balance of close upon four figures.

GEN. YANG SEN AS JOCKEY.

Needless to say this handsome result has been made possible by the interest taken in our venture by our Chinese friends. We have found, as was found by the Honan Race Club, that there is no finer common meeting ground for Chinese and foreigners than a race course.

For instance, soon after the Chungking Race Club came into active existence, the city was captured for the second time last year by our old friend Yang Sen, a busy man whom we did not see a great deal of in the ordinary way. No sooner had he returned and been informed of our Race Club than he signified his wish to attend our next meeting and to enter his own ponies and, what is more, his intention to ride them himself. Our next meeting was held on Boxing Day and the General's bodyguard duly arrived early on the course, but at the last moment Gen. Yang himself, to the great disappointment of all, was prevented from attending by the inopportune arrival of another General. His bodyguard, however, made themselves very useful by patrolling the roads and lending an official air to our meeting which duly impressed the large crowd of Chinese in attendance.

One Chinese gentleman jockey rode, however, he is the commander of a well known foreign firm. He had the misfortune to have a very spectacular cropper in the second race to the intense joy of the native populace and the chance of his repeating the performance will be sufficient ... to ensure an enormous crowd at our next meeting on February 9.

The pleasantest feature of the Chungking Race Club has been the remarkably good racing witnessed at every meeting and the large fields which turn out. Nearly every foreign resident has become an enthusiastic jockey. The British and American sailors have clubbed together and formed stables of their own. H. M. S. Teal has discovered a star jockey in Stoker P. O. Northcote; in fact the Teal's stable heads the list of winners and is said to have paid for itself already. Northcote scored a very popular victory in the Champions race on December 26. This all makes for the health and happiness of foreign residents ashore and afloat. In time we shall no doubt have more Chinese jockeys riding; meanwhile we are seeing more of our Chinese friends socially and they are equally benefiting with us in an added interest in life. An economic factor has already made itself very apparent as a result of the Race Club's success, ponies which one used to be able to buy for some 60 dollars are now worth two hundred.

Our genial Commissioner of Customs, Mr. Andrew, has discharged his onerous duties as judge to the entire satisfaction of the sporting community. His imperturbable impartiality was well illustrated on Boxing Day when he unhesitatingly disqualified the Chairman of Stewards who was first past the post on "Wednesday Night" in the fourth race, but against whom a protest was lodged by the rider of "Tommy Lad." In the following race, the Champions, our Chairman was again the victim of circumstances. His own ponies not having qualified, he was riding our German shopkeeper's pony "Hans," a dark horse, little known on the course. In the home straight Hans was leading the field by a length or two when in some unaccountable fashion a lump of earth went into his rider's mouth and he involuntarily swerved aside into the tiger country and was not even placed.

THE BABBLE OF BABYLON.

A record of the Chungking Race Club has been duly preserved in our local journal the "Babble of Babylon" and the following extract may be of interest to those of your readers who know something of our remote port:—

"And in Babylon which is by the Great River dwelt a remnant of the Israelities in exile and all that they did do and all that they did say and even many things they did neither do nor say, are they not written in the Babble of Babylon?

"Now there was a young man of Lung Men, who awoke one day and said are not the dromedaries of Midian faster than all the camels of Babylon and the Babylonians gat upon their hind legs and being well acquainted with the speech of Israelitish sailors said that be damned for a yarn and the controversy waxing fast and furious they went unto Greybeard the Father of Four, who when he had listened unto them, remembering the days of Goliath, said, what is a dromedary or two between friends? Nevertheless this matter shall be settled upon a course, but ye must wager the one against the other in accordance with the ancient tradition of the Israelites and for every hundred shekels that ye wager I will take 20 for the common stock. And a certain man murmured saying "are not ten enough" but they told him 10 were not worth while, so 20 were agreed upon and the man who had at first murmured nevertheless brought a wager of 450 shekels in silver to the course for he was an good sport.

"Now when the course was ready, Greybeard renewed his youth and bought him a camel which he called Wednesday Night and when they asked him wherefore callest thou thine camel Wednesday Night he answered them saying, I see little to choose betwixt the camels of Babylon and the dromedaries of Midian and are not all nights much the same in Central Asia? However if so be he prove a little faster than the rest maybe I will call him Saturday Night. And Greybeard mounted his camel and sped swiftly upon the course, overtaking his adversaries, and came first to the post where Andrew stood to judge the matter. But an Israelitish sailor protested saying hath not Greybeard belayed the binnacle and trimmed the ship's periwig? and when Andrew asked of him dost thou deny it? Greybeard, being little acquainted with navigation either ashore or afloat, said Maybe it is so and he was disqualified. Then Greybeard waxed bitter and cried have ye no camels which belay not the binnacle nor trim the periwig and they answered him saying yea verily, here is a camel of the Philistines called Hans whose periwig hath never been trimmed and is like unto Samson before he was shorn. So Greybeard mounted again and sped upon the course and overtook his adversaries and was winning hands down when a lump of mud struck him in the gullet so that he swerved aside into the wilderness and the dromedaries of Midian and the riders thereof passed by him and he was left with nothing but the hump. For sweet it is to shake the dust of Babylon from off the feet, but take heed that ye swallow it not!"

FOREIGNER ASSAULTED ON MUKDEN RLWY.

Mr. Bessel Mauled by Soldiers While Performing His Duties

Tientsin, Feb. 1.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. K. E. Bessell, a traffic inspector of the Peking-Mukden Line, was assaulted at Fengtai Station by a party of Chinese soldiers.

It appears that there was some delay in Train No. 5 leaving the station for Tientsin and Mr. Bessell, who happened to be on board, went to investigate the cause. Finding a party of Chinese soldiers under an officer endeavouring to attach a box-car to the train, he pointed out that this was not permitted without the written permission of the Chiaotungpu. Mr. Bessell instructed the guard to despatch the train, but the soldiers snatched the latter's flag and Mr. Bessell found himself looking down the barrel of the officer's revolver.

As the Chinese police were unwilling to interfere there was nothing to do but allow the box-car to be attached and the train moved up a short distance to allow room for the box-car and the coupling engine. The soldiers, thinking that the train was leaving, rounded on Mr. Bessell, knocked him down, kicked and otherwise assaulted him though he was not seriously injured.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Strong Measures by Peking to Bring Guilty to Justice

Peking, Feb. 2.

The Chinese General Manager of the Peking-Mukden Railway, who came to Peking yesterday, immediately called on Dr. Wu Yu-lin, the Minister of Communications, reporting the details of the assault on Mr. Bessel by Chinese soldiers at Fengtai Station. The Minister subsequently visited President Tsao Kun, who agreed that the offenders must be punished.

This morning a high military official, a representative of the Ministry of Communications and the General Manager of the Railway left for Tientsin with instructions to arrest the officer and men who assaulted Mr. Bessel and to bring them to trial as soon as possible. Meanwhile the British Legation has made a formal protest.

Fifty men of the Loyal North Lancashire Regiment were sent to Fengtai yesterday evening where they will remain as a guard.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SHANTUNG RAILWAYS

Anniversary Celebration of Restoration to China

From a Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Jan. 30.

Yesterday being the first anniversary of the return of the Kiaochow-Tsinan Railway to China by Japan, the occasion was marked by a celebration at the Railway Administration's headquarters here which commenced at 11 in the morning. There were present many officials, business men and journalists who had previously been invited to attend.

Congratulatory addresses were delivered by various officials, those connected with the railway promising to use their utmost efforts to make it a complete success, while those not connected with it urged the officials of the railway to use greater efforts in the future, so as to ensure prompt refund of the capital due to Japan at the time of maturity.

Two members of the Shantung Provincial Assembly who had come from Tsinan and who were not expected to speak, paid no attention to the schedule of speeches as read by the master of ceremonies, and proceeded to deliver their views for the edification of the gathering, but their remarks were not out of place and received the applause of their hearers. There was some nervousness at first that these speakers would make indiscreet remarks but they did nothing of the kind, urging that the funds of the railway be kept for the railway's expansion, that greater courtesies should be shown towards the patrons of the line and that fares and freight rates should be maintained at a reasonable level.

Among the foreign officials present were Mr. A. G. Major, the British Consul, Mr. Y. Mori, the Japanese Consul-General, and Mr. H. Newbill, the United States Vice-Consul.

In the evening, a dinner was given at the Grand Hotel to which the Director and the Associate Director of the Kiaochow-Tsinan Railway invited a large number of officials, business men and journalists.

The delegate sent down by the Communications Department to attend the celebration made a brief address, thanking the guests for their attendance. Mr. Mori, the Japanese Consul-General, replying in Japanese, hoped that by the untiring efforts of the Railway Administration, the Kiao-Tsi line will continue to prosper and be the means of increasing the trade of the province.

Among the foreigners present at the dinner were Mr. Y. Mori, Mr. A. G. Major, Mr. H. Newbill, the American Vice-Consul, Mr. Richardson, the Commissioner of Customs, Messrs. Coleman, Stansfield, Koch, Yapp, Middlebrook, Henzler, Scars, Siedel, and Weischer.

Private Subscribers Shy of the Projected Company

Peking, Feb. 1.

Dr. C. T. Wang, the chief of the board of directors of the Tsingtao-Tsinanfu Railway, has petitioned the President praying for extension of the period in which the shareholders will subscribe the capital to a private company to be formed to take over the management of the Railway.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NANKING MINT

The Process of Coining

When bullion comes to the Nanking Mint from banks, says the Chinese Economic Bulletin, it goes into a strongly guarded storing house. Here there are to be found bullion in both ingots and bars, as well as copper, which is used in making an alloy. The bullion is standardized in the assaying room as possessing 98.5 per cent. pure silver. It is there mixed with copper beads in the proportion of 980 taels of pure silver in 1,000 tales of the alloy.

Each unit is put in one crucible, and smelted in a furnace. The smelting room is equipped with 32 furnaces holding the same number of crucibles. One crucible of smelted silver, weighing slightly above 1,300 taels, is poured out into 20 bars. The bars are analyzed in the laboratory, and ...ose that do not come to the standard are re-melted. The bars of standard fineness are then sent to the rolling room to be rolled into sheets.

After being rolled a fifth time, they are cut, then heated until they are soft before they are rolled again. Rolling 12 or 13 times reduces them to the thinness necessary. These sheets are beaten into pieces like cakes and then run through a polishing machine. After this process they are heated in a furnace, and cleaned in a solution of sulphuric acid. The next step is to the weighing room, where they go on to very fine and accurate balances, of which there are five. The average difference of weights taken on three balances must not exceed 3/1,000, or the pieces are rejected and must be re-smelted. The silver pieces, when passed as to weight, are stamped, thus completing the minting. The coins are sent to the storing house in wrapped parcels of $50 each, two of which are packed together, and $5,000 is put in a wooden box, ready for transportation.

SOUTHEASTERN UNIV. AFTER THE FIRE

Phoenix-like Revival: Liberal Subscriptions by Faculty and Chief Officials

From Our Own Correspondent

Nanking, Jan. 31.

There is a prospect of a Greater Southeastern University arising out of the recent fire. The spirit of faculty, students and friends has risen to the occasion. The members of the faculty have subscribed $35,000: the 1,500 students in the collegiate departments have each subscribed $20, making $30,000. And 500 alumni have each subscribed $40 making $20,000 more, the amount raised by faculty, students and alumni amounting to $85,000. With this sum to which is added the insurance which is paid by the China Mutual, it is hoped to replace the apparatus and equipment destroyed by the fire. The teachers of the school who lost personal effects generously refuse any remuneration. Furthermore, a campaign for raising $500,000 in addition to the above has been begun. Governor-General Chi and Governor Han last year declined to receive birthday giffs for their own use according to immemorial custom, but handed over all that was given to an industrial school established in the Tartar City. They have promised this year to receive birthday gifts not for themselves but for the rebuilding of the Southeastern. This makes a fine beginning for the raising of the half million dollars, the campaign for which has now begun.

COMING CONFERENCES.

Nanking is to be a city of conventions during the China New Year holidays.

On February 4 the heads of theological institutions will meet for the discussion of common problems.

On the 5th, 6th and 7th heads and representatives of colleges and universities will meet for the discussion of general educational problems. One hundred were expected and we understand that 250 are registered.

From February 7 to 12 there will be the meeting of the China Medical Association. All the delegates, except a few foreigners who are invited, will be Chinese modern medical men. About 100 are expected.

Ginling College is, for meetings and noonday meals, to be host to the Educational Association and the Southeastern will be host to the Medical Association.

Two fires have occurred in Nanking within the past few days, one in the settlement of straw houses near the West Water Gate, which destroyed 89 homes and rendered 385 homeless, and the other in Hsiakwan which started in the Hsiakwan branch of the Commercial Press and burnt 12 buildings, including a hotel.

know what class of Chinese he means. Is it to be the officials and politicians? Or the Chinese who forced Peking to drop its postal squeeze and the Tuchuns to desist from their ruffling? And in either case, there [illegible] two classes are mutually antagonistic. For the Powers to [illegible] without reference to the other—apart from the manifest difficulty of cooperating with the people independently of their officials—would be courting suspicion and failure. The only solution would be that an invitation to the Powers to lend their help should come jointly from both classes. But to that to become possible Chinese public opinion would have had [illegible] and it might well be strong enough to do all that was needed without outside assistance.

Nevertheless the conviction is not to be resisted that through foreign assistance lies the shortest way to the restoration of organized government in China. If, however, the Powers wait to be asked for their help they [illegible] force it upon China. The only other course is to offer it, in such terms that there can be no mistaking the friendliness of the intention and in such a way that can cause no offence among provincial chieftains: in other words, the fact that China is now for all practical purposes eighteen petty kingdoms must be accepted and any offer of assistance tendered to Peking must be addressed simultaneously to every Tuchun.

THE SPRING WAR

Feb. 9.

While his position in the [illegible] work was slack and unprofitable, the Nulghai in "The Light That Failed" (generally conceded to be the late noted war correspondent Bennett Burleigh) was in the habit of predicting trouble in the Balkans next spring. To-day the journalist in China finds himself in very much the same position, and a war in the north, inevitably in the spring, becomes a powerful obsession. So that confidence may not be upset and that business may pursue its even course, [illegible] say as little about it as possible [illegible] for compromise may have full [illegible] news filtering through to Shanghai [illegible] in the north attains a special significance that it calls for mention [illegible] the position in which we find ourselves to-day, supported entirely [illegible] by a very strong Chinese element of cunning [illegible] and there is no doubt that now more than ever before, the situation of the rival armies is the province [illegible] consideration. In this case we have Tuchun out of the question for operations there are so remote physically from the seats of danger in the north that they do not enter into [illegible] military considerations. It is with Chang Tso-lin and Tsao Kun, or rather with Wu Pei-fu, the President's cabinet chooses, that we again deal.

Two years ago Chang Tso-lin was defeated by Wu Pei-fu in an engagement fought to the south of Peking and found himself compelled to retire to Shanhaikuan. It was not a fair battle, for it is generally conceded that a couple of generals commanding divisions or smaller [illegible] left the field at a critical moment in the encounter and hence his front was easily broken. It was enough, however, to settle the [illegible] for that occasion, the other events in the campaign being purely subsidiary and the subsequent course of affairs depending as much upon diplomacy as the surprise attack which later eventuated. It was, however, a lesson to the overlord of Manchuria, and he proceeded to make it plain to all, especially to those in his own [illegible] Nine of the defaulting officers were caught, court-martialled and shot at Shanhaikuan, and no need to mourn them. From time to time since then there have been rumours from Mukden that Chang Tso-lin has been about to take the field, so much so that it would have been excusable for the Chinese to coin a rhyme in the same manner as did the French of Marlborough,

Malbrouck s'en va t-en guerre,
Ne sait quand reviendra.

[illegible] but he did not have the possibilities of improving his matériel and personnel which Chang had, and so the latter has waited. News [illegible] north to Shanghai suggests that to-day he is ready, though not so completely equipped as he would like, and that he means to move this spring and with an objective before him which dwarfs all his previous aims though by no means his ambitions.

It is stated on good authority that no fewer than forty foreigners, all of technical or military qualifications, are now employed at Mukden for the training and equipment of his army. While his infantry are believed to be under training in modern tactics, his artillery has been re-organized and his field guns are numerous and efficient. According to all accounts his air service should be the best in China, his pilots being instructed all the time by a foreign adviser. The manufacture of explosives is under the control of a foreigner, and his gun power is being increased by the addition of numerous light trench mortars, which the British infantry found as useful in open as in trench warfare. In one respect, however, he is believed to have been severely disappointed. [illegible] knows their great value in an offensive. He has, however, tanks of a different make, but which hardly come up to the fighting value of those previously mentioned. It is obvious [illegible] and there is no doubt that now more than ever before, the situation of the rival armies in the provinces demands consideration. In this case we have Tuchun out of the question for operations there are so remote physically from the seats of danger in the north that they do not enter into [illegible] military considerations. NOTES AND COMMENTS

Chartered Civil Engineers

The Institution of Civil Engi[illegible] back to 1818, has succeeded in obtaining official sanction to a measure which should have beneficial consequences. The term "civil engineer" is attractive and imposing in its way, but is pregnant with misunderstandings and misdescriptions, obviously a title under which people with very slender qualifications might masquerade in safety. Realizing this, the Institution set about finding ways and means to give its members the cachet they deserved through their qualifications, and in essaying this an interesting initial difficulty was encountered. It consisted in this, that Parliament was hardly likely to assent to a Registration Act limiting the use of the term "civil engineer" to those whose qualifications come within the Institution's charter. Accordingly another way to meet the case had to be devised, and it has been done by the use of the term "Chartered Civil Engineer." The Privy Council has approved the rules governing the use of this title, so that corporate members of the Institution and none others may now describe themselves as such. The advantages accruing from this step are best understood by the analogy of accountant and chartered accountant, the word "chartered" denoting special qualifications which are not usually within the scope of the other's experience. In this way the Institution hopes that the term "Chartered Civil Accountant" will come to have an equal comparative significance in the minds of the public, but it points out that to bring this about those entitled to it must use it. If they do not, the name will be without tangible value, for unless constantly before it, as the letters C. A. are, the public will not heed the distinction which it is hoped to draw, and the loss will be equally borne by the same public and members of the Institution.

Anglo-Persian Oil

Following Mr. Snowden's declaration that the British Government will not dispose of its holding in the Anglo-Persian Oil Co., there may arise an interesting question of how American interests may have to alter their policy in respect of similar holdings by the United States. The conclusion that some people in that country may to-day find that they have been caught napping is suggested by a short article in the "Financial Review," a publication issued by a New York firm of brokers. It says:—

> During the somewhat hysterical period of the World War, Winston Churchill suddenly and sensationally, and certainly against potential probabilities of future international complications, injected the British Empire into the oil business, positively and unreservedly, by making the British Government the majority shareholder in the Anglo-Persian Oil Company.
> The excuse for this revolutionary departure was that it was vitally imperative to assure large oil supplies for the British Navy during [illegible]
> When Parliament adjourned in November it had before it an offer [illegible] which will undoubtedly be accepted.

As the London "Economist" remarks: "The adoption of a definite and aggressive oil policy by the British Government has poisoned, and will continued poison again [illegible] between the two great Anglo-Saxon nations. We have on [illegible] Washington taking the [illegible] oil view and on the other Downing Street following an Anglo Persian policy."

The most important question to [illegible] America is, 'What are [illegible] if Great Britain retires [illegible]?' Will Standard [illegible] be the dominant [illegible] Washington decide [illegible] oil and [illegible] a change [illegible] in which [illegible] Oil Rhos [illegible] too cons[illegible]

From this we gather that Mr Snowden is going to save various departments of the Washington administration a very great deal of trouble, and that those who have been banking on a new orientation of oil policy in the United States may find themselves financial losers.

A Job for a Ludendorff

Those who have read Ludendorff's memoirs of the war ought to be struck with the similarity of his position on becoming Quartermaster-General under Hindenberg to that of Dr. Sun Yat-sen in Canton to-day. Not only had Ludendorff to manœuvre armies, but equally he had to arrange with the German civil authorities for rationing of the nation and to contend against sedition within the army and among the civil population. On a lesser scale Dr. Sun Yat-sen must find himself to-day very much as Ludendorff. He is faced by a resourceful and ever active enemy in General Chen Chiung-ming and has to supply troops to hold the Sheklung front where fresh fighting appears to be imminent. Then one of his former adherents, General Shen Hung-ying, has turned upon him and is starting a movement from the Kuangsi-Hunan frontier, and to make matters worse he never quite knows how long such troops as the Yunnanese are going to side with him. Finally on his shoulders rests the never-ending task of raising money for his campaigns, and he has to deal with a civil populace restive under the strain of taxation and the alarums of war. Ludendorff always makes out that it was Germany's civil population which broke him, but a consideration of the military position when he threw in his hand negatives this view. It is unnecessary, however, to go into these details; the fact is that eventually he was broken, and from this fact we may gain an idea of the enormous pressure which must to-day be bearing upon the Chinese who is in much the same position, Dr. Sun Yat-sen.

The Extraordinary Meeting

In a centre such as Shanghai which teems with limited liability companies everybody knows what extraordinary, confirmatory or any of the other meetings laid down by Order-in-Council generally come to. Harassed secretaries are at times sorely put to it to get together a quorum for these affairs, and as a rule everybody conspires to make the business as formal as possible. A correspondent suggests that we should liven up our columns by changing our style of reporting these events and offers us the following sample:—

Hoots, Toots & Co., Ld.

REDUCTION OF CAPITAL: CONFIRMATORY MEETING.

It was like the great fight between Carpentier and Beckett—all over almost before it started. It was also unlike the great fight—there was practically no audience. The Chairman was there, two colleagues, one member of the famous Advisory Committee, and a reporter, all gathered round the electric radiator. At noon the secretary was on his legs mournfully reading the notice convening the meeting: 30 seconds later the Chairman proposed the resolution: another 15 seconds and a brother director had seconded it: still another 15 seconds and it had been carried unanimously. A second reporter who had arrived at three minutes past 12 was too late. Some meeting worth making a special journey to attend! Not worth paying the Entertainment Tax to see! But how impressed will be the Judge in the Court of Justice when he hears of the enthusiasm and unanimity with which our wonderful shareholders voted away their capital.

So sick at heart were they,
They stayed away.
Their blighted hopes had all gone west,
That nineteen bob stuck on their chest,
From precious schemes they wanted rest,
So stayed away.

Russian Recognition

When Mr. Ramsay Macdonald took up the question of the recognition of Russia in a diplomatic sense, there were reports current that he found the matter not by any means so simple as he had anticipated. At any rate he has found the way to take a very big step, but its success or otherwise will not be proved until the representatives of the two countries have come down to details. Then will have to be dealt with such difficult problems as the British oil and other properties situated within Russia and claim since the Soviet took them have been withheld from their owners. This was the burden of the Chairman's speech at a recent meeting of the Baku Consolidated Oilfields, Ld., when it was recalled that in the view of Mr. Bonar Law and Mr. Baldwin an essential condition of recognition was "restitution of property or effective compensation." The Chairman went on to say:—

> I am told—I do not know with what truth—that at the present time the Soviet itself is divided into two parties: there is one party which favours what is called "N.E.P." (the new economic policy)—a modification of the doctrine of Karl Marx, which [illegible] allow foreign capital to come [illegible] country and develop its resources [illegible] allow it proper remuneration [illegible] is "N.E.P." as I understand it. The other policy is a policy of propaganda. It is the policy of allowing Russia to become what she is fast becoming, namely, an agricultural country, and nothing else, but a country that will devote all her energies to propaganda in foreign lands until the glorious principles of the Soviet are established all over the earth. That is the alternative policy. If that is adopted it will be a long time before anyone goes back to work oil properties in Russia. I hope and believe that more sensible views will prevail. We think they will. We have been in touch at different times with representatives of the Soviet Government, who, I think, can see as well as we can that without a restoration of confidence the capital, which is the very lifeblood of Russia, will not be forthcoming.
> The difficulty will be to persuade those in effective control of the Soviet Government to adopt this view, but unless they do so the recognition of Russia will not prove to be of the value which the Soviet hopes for.

A New Tichbourne

Only last week we published details of the return to the living world of a man named Batchelor who was understood to have gone down with H. M. S. Cressy when she was torpedoed in the North Sea. He was looking worn out and almost in a state of collapse when he arrived in Croydon where his mother lived, and he was wearing three war medals, and naturally was the object of much sympathy. He claimed Mrs. Batchelor as his mother, and insisted that Mrs. Batchelor's daughter was his sister, and apparently so impressed them that they advanced £20 to him. His story was that he had tied himself to a lifebuoy when the Cressy went down and after several hours was rescued by an enemy ship which he took to be Turkish. Finally he seemed to have found himself in Turkey; his mind was a blank; and only after years did he recover his bearings. Now for the Tichbourne touch. Some days after this dramatic appearance in the land of the living Batchelor was arrested, appeared before the Magistrate under the name of George Pugh, and pleaded guilty to obtaining the £20 by false pretences. He had been several times previously convicted, once having gone to prison for five years, and the Magistrates regretted exceedingly that the maximum they could award him was six months' hard labour. It seems tolerably safe to conclude that Pugh had made a study of various aspects of criminology, and the barefaced effrontery of the Tichbourne claimant had a special fascination for him. He could not play for such big stakes as the claimant, but his particular genius enabled him to rob a widow who still mourned her sailor son

GENERAL BEI BAO-SAN

Great Road-builder of North Kiangsu and His War on Brigandage

By T. B. Grafton.

Haichow, Ku, Jan. 9.

Some weeks ago there might have been seen coming out of the low foot-hills of that part of Shantung that projects, pen-like, far southward into [illegible], a battered but faithful [illegible]. A thousand dents and [illegible] bore mute evidence to the [illegible] of Shantung roads over [illegible] the whole of her life had [illegible] spent. Strings, wire and [illegible] cowhide were sprinkled [illegible] over her anatomy.

Her driver, whose complexion after excavating beneath the successive layers of dust, sand and engine grime was undoubtedly Caucasian, clung wearily to the wheel as she corkscrewed over the deep ruts and stones in the serpentine trail. A stolid, lanky, sad-faced Shantung "boy," with arms evidently elongated from the constant strain of lifting and boosting, the cook-machinist of the outfit, dozed peacefully over jerks that made the observer wonder what kept his head from snapping entirely off.

As they reached the crest of a long rise, the driver gave an exclamation of wonder. Lao Yun came to his senses with a start and began automatically to climb out, when his master stopped him with a "What's that?." Lao Yun's wondering eyes gazed on a new creation. Stretching away from them into the far distance was a broad band which could be nothing else than a ROAD. Our travellers had reached the Kiangsu border and were in the domain of Gen. Bei Bao-san, lord and master of the four northeastern counties of this great maritime province.

Forty miles away, dimly seen through the haze, loomed the 4,400-foot head of the great Haichow Mountain and towards it the flivver's nose was turned. Her groans and grindings ceased and with a joyful purr, sweet music to the driver's tortured ears, she began to slip over the road toward Haichow. Numerous [illegible] tracks made inquiries unnecessary and straight on he drove, forgetful of everything in the joy of having a real road. The oil ran low but such was the fascination of the speed that the faint click made no impression on the driver's ears, accustomed as they were to horrid gratings and rattlings. And while he wonders how on earth he ever managed to let a connecting rod burn out on him, his praise of the road dominates every other emotion.

BRIGANDS DEMAND ATTENTION.

As noticed in these columns before, the neighbouring districts of Suchien and Tsingkiangpu reported the most peaceful autumn in many years, for the simple reason that their roving bandits moved up a hundred miles into Haichow territory, thereby giving Gen. Bei Bao-san the most uncomfortable year in his long stay at Haichow. He had dealt with many situations before and with good measure of success, partly by open warfare and partly by negotiation, but here was one that for the time defied his hardest efforts. Realizing that his presence was an essential to any success in any part of his large domain, with all of his old-time vigour he started out to make that presence a possibility on short notice.

The result has been the largest campaign of road-building that the writer has ever seen in China, and over these roads the good General is travelling at the most unexpected hours of day and night.

The first road to receive his attention was the main road leading west from Haichow, which at the end of summer was hard going even to a pedestrian. Good weather has favoured his efforts and this road is now in excellent condition for motor traffic for a distance of 50 miles. This means little enough to a man fresh from foreign roads but to us it is almost unbelievable. In addition numerous roads, all of the same type, branch off from the main line or cross it at right angles. The writer's duties carry him over these counties three or four times a year and it has been his task to hunt out possible ways of getting from place to place and every route had been tried that offered any hopes of improved travel. But now so many and long are the new roads that no one man can possibly keep up with them all unless he were to do nothing else. For in every direction from Haichow there are broad, new roads that are a delight to the weary traveller.

HOW IT IS DONE.

While the roads have been built at the initiative of Gen. Bei, the chief agent in their construction has been Mr. Yang Yu-gwoa, familiarly known as Yang Number Five, who has been an interesting and entertaining friend to the foreign community here. I have just had a long conversation with him and the ease and simplicity of the system he has employed ought by all means to be passed along to every district. It shows most forcibly what can be accomplished in the China of to-day, in spite of the general feeling that her golden age has passed into one of hopeless rust and decay.

Mr. Yang has simply sent out letters in every direction to the "Dung-sihs" in the name of the mighty general. He assigns to each of these district headmen a certain portion of road and that is all there is to it. The headmen pass the word down to the village elders and every family has to send out a man with spade or pick. So large is the population on which they have to draw that only a day or two's work is required of any individual. There are, of course, some delays and hasty work done, but the whole is surprisingly well done. The word has gone out that the General may be over any road on any day and the people responsible for the work do not care to be caught lagging.

The cost of the roads may be said thus to be strictly nothing. The only drawback is the temporary nature of much of the work. There have been no funds available for bridges and ferries and such have been considerably limited in construction. Every season except summer is normally dry and for nine months the roads will be easily passable. As most of the streams dry up in the simply been filled up with dirt. This will last until next summer's floods and leave only a small amount of repair work in the following autumn.

There is I understand a general plan for the connecting up of each hsien city with each of its nearest neighbours in this province, but in most of the districts the work has lagged. If the Civil Governor or Tuchun wants a good superintendent for this work they could find no better man than the capable and genial Mr. Yang.

A GIANT IN ALL WAYS.

Of all the officials, large and small, with whom I have been thrown in the course of 19 years, the most interesting by far is Gen. Bei Bao-san. Physically he is almost among the giants. A full six feet in height, with enormous head and shoulders, he seems to be bigger than the 242 pounds that register when he steps upon the scales. Every pound radiates energy and strength. Every observer has noted with sadness the tendency of officialdom to become fat and lazy, but 10 years in a high position has taken not a bit from Gen. Bei's restless activity. Sitting on the rear seat of a sedan he is the picture of ease, but a moment later he may appear as an excellent horseman, mounted for a long ride in the cold or rain. It is said that a few years ago in a fight against a robber stronghold he snatched a rifle from one of his men and led the attack in person.

Surprisingly quick as are his physical movements, his brain is quicker still. Terse as his callers may be in getting down to business, they will find that the General knows their minds before they have spoken, and his quickness of perception and equal rapidity of decision have kept him where he is to-day.

STATE AND SOCIABILITY.

With all his activities and responsibilities Gen. Bei is especially fond of his foreign friends. On a state occasion he can "put on dog" the equal of the most elaborate entertainers, but he prefers to drop in on us unannounced, sit and chat with our families and be for the time one of us. We have been told by masters of etiquette that such things as an official coming into a meal with children and single ladies "are not done" but on such occasions we believe the General has enjoyed himself as much as we have enjoyed the experience.

Now and then we hear of promotions that have been offered the General, but he seems to be quite content and bids fair to be our commanding official for a long time to come.

TELEPHONES ALSO.

In addition to his roads Gen. Bei has constructed a splendid telephone system extending 100 li to the west and nearly 300 li to the south and east. It is supposed to be exclusively for military uses but your correspondent has free access to it at any of its stations. When at an out-station, two days distant by special messenger and four or five by ordinary postal service this telephone service is an immense comfort in these troublous times and every time I use it I feel like saying "Long live Gen. Bei Bao-san."

FACTORIES OF WUSIH

Full List of Industries in China's Manchester: Go-ahead Manufacturers

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wusih, Ku., Feb. 1.

All large mills are closing for one month at China New Year, the silk filatures probably longer.

I have at last discovered the exact number of factories of various sorts in and about Wusih, and as the figures seem surprising, I append a list. These figures seem to prove the assertion that Wusih is entering on a great industrial future.

One of the most interesting of these factories is the Lee Hsing Mill, which is the second modernly equipped bleaching, dyeing and finishing work to be constructed in the whole of China and the only one of its kind in the interior.

This mill, situated close to the road to Wei San, is equipped with the most up-to-date English machinery and is capable of a monthly turnover of something like 600,000 yards of cloth, including white and coloured finished shirtings, drills, sateens, brocades, jeans, poplins, etc. It has now been in operation a little over a year.

Since the initial opening of this mill further additions of expensive machinery have been made in order successfully to compete with every demand of the Chinese cotton trade. As the directors have their own power looms, running in conjunction with the dyeworks, they are able to supply the market with many original and beautiful designs in cotton cloths. In spite of the trade depression of the past year the directors of this mill are very well satisfied with their success up to date, and it is hoped that this young industry will continue to grow and to hold its own with its foreign competitors.

In addition to her large number of mills Wusih also has a fine, modern power plant, just outside of the West Water Gate of the city. This plant was established about two years ago and many mills are now dependent on it for power.

CAPTURE OF CHENGTU BY NORTHERN TROOPS

Peking, Feb. 3

Gen. Tung-ho has telegraphed to the Government confirming the reported capture of Chengtu, Gen. Tung, who commanded the Northern troops which captured the city on January 27, says that a considerable amount of fighting occurred in which the Northern troops shelled and destroyed the Chengtu Arsenal, after which the resistance soon ended. Gen. Hsiung Khe-wu and Gen. Tan Mou-hsin surrendered, but Gen. Liu Tung-hsin is missing.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ADMIRAL Sir Alexander Ludovic Duff, K.C.B., K.C.V.O., was to be married shortly after Christmas to Miss Alice Marjorie Hill-Whitson, daughter of Mr. Hill-Whitson, of Sloane Court, Chelsea. Admiral Duff, who is 61 years of age, was a widower. He was Commander-in-Chief of the China Station from 1919 to 1922. During the war he was Rear-Admiral of the Fourth Battle Squadron, and was present at the Battle of Jutland. The wedding was to be at St. Columba's Church, Pont Street.

HARBIN'S GAMBLING AND OPIUM

Sensational Revelations After Successful Police Raid on Hotel Asia

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Jan. 23.

Thanks to the recent raid of the Hotel Asia, the hostel close to the railway station owned by Koreans, the police managed to get hold of all the books belonging to the most notorious gambling-dens run by the same proprietors and are now making a proper clean-up. The Asia has been immune from raid by the Chinese police, being owned by a Japanese subject, but recently thanks to the energy shown by General Wen, the chief of police, and the co-operation given by the Japanese Consul, a properly organized descent by Japanese gendarmes and Chinese police was carried out successfully in the middle of the day, the measures taken being kept so secret that the numerous agents of the Korean owner were unable to give any warning. The place was surrounded, very few of the inmates were able to escape and several pounds of opium were seized. The proprietor and his assistants being Koreans were handed over to the Japanese Consulate as well as the opium which they claimed, but the books were retained by General Wen, for the purpose of investigation, notwithstanding the protests of the Koreans. The hotel owner has since been sentenced by his Consul to a term of imprisonment for being in possesion of opium, but it is likely that before long a more serious charge against him will be made.

In the meantime General Wen has been busy having the business books translated. They show the daily takings and expenses attached to the running of the Sportsmen Club and the Golden Horn, termed restaurants, but actually gambling saloons, patronized by Russians, Koreans and Chinese of all classes. Everybody in Harbin including General Wen has been aware of their existence for the past six months, but all attempts to make a successful raid have been abortive, for the gamblers have invariably been warned beforehand. The books show that something like $140,000 have been paid out in bribes in just over six months or in other words about $700 a day, and give details as to who received the bribes, though in some instances only initials appear. So far only some six arrests have been made and they are Russian interpreters, Chinese attached to the police and to the court. These men only received small sums daily, but the books show that certain parties received as much as $200 daily.

The investigation is still proceeding and no doubt there will be some sensational arrests among the higher chief officials, it being stated that some of these officers were often to be seen in the gaming rooms trying their luck. Though the two restaurants in question are still open, hardly anyone goes to them, for gambling has entirely stopped and a policeman is stationed inside the hallway.

This does not mean that gambling is finished in Harbin, far from it. Other haunts are being opened, though for the present on a smaller scale, while even respectable though impoverished Russian householders are prevailed upon to allow the use of one of their rooms on certain days of the week. Meanwhile, thanks to the stopping of cards and lotto, the latter so popular among the fair sex, the recreation grounds and sporting meetings of the Railway, Commercial, Sportsmen and Polo clubs have practically been forced to be given up owing to the lack of funds to run them.

General Chu Ching-lan, Administrator of the Special Area, is very much against gambling, and will not listen to those who wish to show that horse gambling and gambling and that the card playing and lotto, which the average Russian is used to and cannot do without, is not necessarily playing for high stakes and that anyway he cannot be forced to give it up although he is quite willing it should be done under proper control.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT AT ANKING

Many People Drowned in an Overturned Junk

From Our Own Correspondent.

Anking, Jan. 27, 1924.

A terrible accident occurred here the night before last when at about 8.30 o'clock a min ch'uan, a big river junk, loaded with passengers, arrived from up river. The boat had nearly reached the landing-place and the men were extending their long poles to secure it to the shore, when suddenly, a big gust of wind arose, striking the unsupecting boat broadside and turning it completely over.

It is not known just how it happened, but it is thought that the people were all crowded on to the shore side of the boat thus making it possible for the sudden wind coming from the opposite side to heave the boat over.

Loaded down with the usual heavy bundles, baskets and bedding rolls, crowding each other in their eagerness to be first on shore the passengers were taken entirely unawares and were all hurled together into the deep icy water. Men, women and children went down in one writhing, struggling mass. Escape was practically impossible and the dark waters of the Yangtze closed over most of them.

The majority of the men were labourers who had been at work in Kiangsi and were just returning home for the New Year festivities. Another few minutes and all would have been safely on shore.

More than 20 bodies have been recovered but no one seems to know just how many people were on the boat. These passenger boats are always so criminally overcrowded that no one in authority would care tell how many if he knew.

CHEKIANG'S WAR SCARE

Slowly Subsiding but People Still Very Nervous

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kashing, Chc., Feb. 1.

Slowly, perhaps, the war scare is subsiding. Bankers and merchants are watchful but going on steadily. Preparations for Lunar New Year are about as usual. Hearing that troops were moving to the border, a trip to several points between Kiangsu and Chekiang showed that both sides are watching each other. Opposing forces on Grand Canal about 10 miles apart can see each other and talk without great effort. However, the real fear is of soldiers, either side; winning or losing—the people suffer. It was amusing to hear a man in close connexion with local officials ask for a room at the missionary hospital. He was told that sick people could get in for nominal rates. His answer was, "If war starts I will be sick enough to get in." Many have asked to be allowed to stay in, or near the mission compound in the event of trouble breaking out suddenly.

Dealers in lumber, brick and other materials have had a good year.

Farmers [illegible] crops with higher prices for all they can sell. War talk does not worry them. No [illegible] reported in our section, but rumours from west and south are not reassuring.

The dollar is down, small coin up on the market for New Year trade.

TOKIO'S TRAM PROBLEM

System Wrecked in the Great Earthquake Cannot Be Restored Until 1925

Complete restoration of the Tokio tram car service to its pre-earthquake condition will require at least two years, Mr. Saito, one of the directors of the Tokio Electric Bureau stated to a representative of the "Japan Advertiser" last week.

"When the system was so completely destroyed as it was by the earthquake and fire of September 1, it is impossible to restore it to its former status within a short time," Mr. Saito said. "The authorities of the Tokio Electric Bureau are doing everything in their power to alleviate the present deplorable congestion in tram car service."

Before the earthquake, according to Mr. Saito, the Bureau owned 1,907 tram cars, of which from 1,200 to 1,300 were in constant service. Eight hundred cars together with many repair shops were destroyed by the earthquake and fires.

Of the 1,134 cars left, 781 are in operation. The authorities predict that the Bureau will have 1,600 cars by the last of March, enabling them to put 1,100 in service at the beginning of April.

Before the earthquake there were 190 miles of car lines in Tokio which have been reduced to 163 miles. On these lines, cars are making trips aggregating 83,051 miles, and carrying 1,405,127 passengers daily. Mileage of the car lines on which cars are operated at present has been increasing rapidly, and practically all important lines in the business sections already have been restored. The remaining lines are not expected to be restored before the end of this year.

"The delay in the restoration of the car service is due to the lack of electrical power and also financial difficulty," declared Mr. Saito, "Many power houses were destroyed by the fire and if the people take into consideration the enormous task of constructing them and the financial difficulty confronting the Bureau, they will be convinced that it will take all of two years.

SYSTEM TO BE EXTENDED.

"It must be remembered that the power houses must be constructed on a larger scale than before because it is foolish to restore them on the former basis when the car service in Tokio is in need of vast extension. The damage suffered by the bureau is estimated at Y.30,000,000 and the proposed reconstruction of the car system will cost at least Y.40,000,000. In raising this sum, the policy of the Tokio Municipality must guard against interfering with the policy of the Central Government in raising its reconstruction fund. The restoration of the car service involves many such delicate problems.

"As an immediate measure to relieve congestion in the cars, the Bureau has introduced an autobus service, purchasing 1,000 Ford cars from America. The Bureau at first desired to purchase larger automobiles, but the Ford Company was the only firm that was able to handle such a large order for immediate delivery.

45 FORD CARS OPERATING.

About 45 Ford cars now are running between the Tokio Station and Sugamo and Tokio Station and Aoyama, but this number will be increased daily and will be about 60 by the end of this month. By the end of February, 1,000 cars will be assembled and ready for service. The entire cargo of automobile parts arrived in Yokohama from America some time ago and they will be brought to Tokio before the end of this month. On the first day of the bus service, 44 Fords were put into operation and took in Yen 1,110 from 7,449 passengers.

Word has been received in Tientsin that Major W. S. Nathan, R.E., C.M.G., who, recently went Home, has been elected to a seat on the board of directors of the Chinese Engineering and Mining Co., Ld., London.

MANCHURIAN BEANS

Problem of Drying Out the Excessive Water

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Jan. 23.

Thanks to the amount of rain during the past season, the present bean crop whose quantity is up to average contains more than the usual amount of moisture, which means that it is a very risky thing to ship to Europe owing to the necessity of these exports traversing the tropics.

As there is a demand for beans abroad exporters are now endeavouring to find a proper method for drying them before they are sent out of the country. Specially constructed drying sheds have been erected at Harbin and soaked beans collected along the railway line will be brought here for treatment. Exporters have successfully approached the railway administration for special freight tariff for these beans, which will have to be twice handled before they can be sent to Vladivostok.

It is stated that though home contracts require that beans shall have no more than 14 per cent. of water, these soaked beans have as much as 24 per cent. which not only means they are likely to sweat when warm climate is reached, but also that they will produce less oil.

Thanks to the inquiries for both beans and bean-oil from Europe where prices are high, the market in northern Manchuria for both these commodities is buoyant.

Chinese Interest in Band of Hope: Canal Widening: New Electric Plant

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wusih, Ku., Feb. 1.

A number of the most prominent of the gentry, men and women, have decided to open a local branch of the Door of Hope. They have asked two of the resident missionaries to co-operate with them, and two very good meetings have been held, and half of the necessary money subscribed. It is confidently hoped that the institution will open in the very near future.

Five large cargo boats have been wrecked on the Grand Canal, south of the city, within the last month. The Chinese say that the present very low water has resulted in the boats running against some obstacle in the bed of the canal, which obstacle has proved to be an old incense burner, imbedded there for untold years. The canal is to be dredged, deepened and widened at this place for a distance of a few hundred yards at a cost of $35,000.

A new electric light plant has leased the present plant on a five-year contract at $65,000 a year, and will give a 24-hour service beginning about March 1. This will be an immense improvement on the present system of lights from dusk until 1 a.m.

Gen. It is reported that the above request has been complied with.—Eastern News Agency.

TWO POPULAR CHINESE OF NANKING

Silver Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Wen: Their Tribute to Christianity

From Our Own Correspondent.

Nanking, Jan. 31, 1924.

The celebration of the silver anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Wen has been a unique event in the annals of Chinese social life in Nanking. Mr. Wen is known locally as the popular and efficient Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and Superintendent of Customs, and widely known in China and abroad because of his work in the release of the captives in the Lincheng affair, his connexion with the Washington Conference and other public services. The celebrations began with a religious service in the Hubugiai Presbyterian Church, of which Mr Wen is an elder, on Sunday afternoon. After the preliminary services and an address on "The Christian Home," Mr. Wen with Mrs. Wen beside him stood before the audience, his older children occupying a front seat, and gave an interesting and remarkable testimony to what Christianity had done for his home. He described how that, according to old Chinese custom, he was married by his father without his will or consent, and to an unlettered country lass. As he began to study and travel and his vision enlarged he found her increasingly uncongenial, and time and again thought of resorting to the expedient of giving her the second place and taking another wife. But after his conversion, which he described, he saw things in a new light. He realized the possibilities of a home sweetened by Christianity and of the wife of his youth. She responded nobly and he brought his address to a climax by saying with pride, "Here now is my bride." And one who looked upon the stately, aristocratic, gentle lady, Madame Wen, would never take her to be the erstwhile country lass, whom he described.

Mr. Wen went on to say that the disparity between man and wife in education and outlook of marriages made under the old régime is one of the problems of changing China, especially when the husband is educated in college or university, or goes abroad, and the wife fails to follow his pace. Mr. Wen showed by his own experience where the solution lies. This human touch in that Sabbath afternoon service was of far deeper interest than the more flowery and formal celebrations which followed on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons.

On Tuesday afternoon a reception was given to foreign friends at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wen at the Bureau of Foreign affairs, and on Wednesday afternoon to representative Chinese. These occasions were made festive by decorations, music, and the remarkable display of silver which manifested the high esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Wen are held. During the Tuesday afternoon celebration there was a commotion which proved to be the arrival of the gifts of the President of China, which were two silver vases and two loving cups. Governor-General Chi Shieh-Yuan, Governor Han, the Premier of China, and other officials, the British, American, and Japanese Consuls, and Chinese and foreign friends too numerous to mention, sent gifts. Mr. L. Friedman and others from among the Lincheng captives, also sent remembrances. There were two tall silver tea-sets, vases, loving cups, scrolls and other silver tokens without number. And best of all the celebration was not the glorification of an individual but of an exemplary and happy home. It is such homes that are the hope of this or any other country.

Lord Morley's death creates a vacancy in the membership of the Order of Merit. The "Illustrated Review" suggests that the honour should be given [illegible] Lord Milner, Mr. Kipling, Lord Grey, Sir Sidney Colvin, Cardinal Gasquet, Lord Bryce, Sir James Frazer, Mr. A. F. Hewman, or Lord Rosebery.

NEW MEMORIAL HOSPITAL AT WUCHOW

Dedication of New Chapel: Short History of a Great Institution: Opening up Remote China to Blessings of Western Medicine

From Our Own Correspondent.

Lungchow, Si.

Two days were devoted to the dedication of the new Chapel of the Stout Memorial Hospital, viz., Saturday and Sunday, December 22 and 23 respectively. The Saturday service was given in Chinese, the Sunday service in English. Dr. Leavell, who is in charge of the hospital, presided on both occasions. Others present, who also officiated at the services, were the Revs. C. A. Gaff, R. A. Jaffray, H. E. Lang, W. H. Tipton and Rex Ray.

The work of the Stout Memorial Hospital was begun in Wuchow by the opening of a dispensary in the chapel of the Southern Baptist Mission. In 1899 Mr. Frank Chambers of New York gave the Foreign Mission Board $2,500 with which to open the Hospital.

The first hospital was built on land purchased on the river bank outside the city and was dedicated to the memory of Rev. John Stout.

The founding of this Hospital has been thoroughly justified by the success and the growth of the work. Wuchow is the gateway into the province of Kuangsi with its population of over eight million people. All commerce from Hongkong and Canton going to inland Kuangsi, and to certain parts of Yunnan and Kueichow must pass through Wuchow. Numerous steamers ply between Wuchow and down river ports as well as Hongkong and Canton. Over a score of river launches carry cargo and passengers to the inland cities situated on the West and Fu Rivers.

The Hospital was opened by Dr. T. McCloy, formerly of the Baptist Mission, and after his departure was ably carried on by Dr. J. C. Meadows and Dr. Wong, a Chinese physician of wonderful Christian character. Both Dr. Meadows and Dr. Wong after giving a number of years of faithful and loving service to their fellow men passed away to their final rest. Dr. Meadows died in Chicago while in furlough, in 1911, and Dr. Wong while visiting America in 1914.

Dr. and Mrs. Hayes were transferred to Wuchow Hospital in 1907 and although compelled to work under trying circumstances were able to carry the work forward. In 1915 Dr. and Mrs. Leavell arrived in Wuchow to take up the work in the Hospital, and in 1917 when Dr. Hayes and his wife returned to the United States on furlough the charge of the hospital fell into the hands of Dr. Leavell. The work of the Hospital confined to increase and this with the trouble caused every summer by the flooding of the West and the Fu Rivers made it imperative that new and larger quarters should be secured if the work was to continue to grow.

VISION OF NEW HOSPITAL.

Dr. Wong and Rev. W. H. Tipton had succeeded in securing the title deed to a larger tract of land for the erection of a hospital. Although the land was secured, the vision of a new hospital was far from materializing. The war in Europe caused funds to become less and retrenchment was necessary and so the hospital project, as well as many others, was held up.

A Chinese merchant in Wuchow by giving the first thousand dollars needed for the start of the work revived hope and from then on the needed funds began to flow in.

Wuchow has been the storm centre of war and strife for over three years. It has been taken and retaken a number of times by the invading and retreating armies of the two warring Kuangs and their hired armies. In spite of this fact and the other hindrance the work of hospital construction has been carried on to completion and to-day a beautiful and strong structure of steel, brick and concrete stands as a monument to the faith of those engaged in the work and planning of the hospital.

Work on the Hospital was begun on January 17, 1917, and finished in December 1, 1923. Although far from completion, advantage was taken of the presence of Dr. Love, corresponding secretary of the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board, and the Hospital was dedicated to the service of God and the administration of the sick.

Dr. and Mrs. R. E. Beddoe were transferred to the Wuchow work upon their return from furlough in 1916 and were left alone with it when Dr. Leavell and wife returned to American on furlough.

The success of the hospital may be judged by the amount of the work carried on. In 1902 the total number of treatments given was 842 as compared with 59,000 in 1922. During this time the Hospital became self-supporting and in 1922 nearly $36,000. was received by the hospital treasury.

Along with its medical staff the hospital supports several male and female evangelists for evangelical work in the Hospital. In connexion with the Hospital work a large motor boat, given by the First Baptist Church of Roanoke, Virginia, is used for medical and evangelistic work in inland Kuangsi.

FOREIGN DOCTORS NEEDED

Owing to the shortage of workers the foreign staff of the Hospital has never been large. Dr. Beddoe returned to America in 1922 and this again left Dr. Leavell as the only resident foreign doctor. Had it not been for the efficient cooperation and the assistance given by the five Chinese physicians the work would have been seriously handicapped; as it is there is a present need of four foreign doctors to supervise the various departments. Another great need is for a foreign nurse act as superintendent of the nursing department.

The Stout Memorial Hospital has meant much in the evangelization of Kuangsi and has been a blessing not only to the Chinese but also to the foreign residents of Kuangsi.

Much praise should be given to those instrumental in the opening of this work of love and to those who have given unstintingly both of their means and life in carrying it forward.

To Dr. Leavell, at present in charge of the Hospital, belongs much of the credit for the efficiency attained and the high standard maintained.

It is the hearty wish of all those who know the Hospital and its work that it may continue to administer to the needy in body and soul of all those coming to it, and that through it may flow health and happiness not only to those coming in direct contact with it but also to many thousands scattered throughout China.

COMBING OUT BEGGARS

Military's Clean Sweep: Attack on Public Gambling: A Hard Winter

From Our Own Correspondent.

Ichang, Sze., Jan. 25.

Ichang has for long had more than its share of beggars, and the authorities have at last made a move to deal with them. They are mostly Szechuan trackers, and famine people from Honan, Yesterday the military made a sweep of the city, and the unusual sight was seen of a drove of beggars being driven along like a flock of sheep. Those who could not walk were being carried on the backs of others. The Chamber of Commerce, with the aid of the military, are undertaking the job, and, it is said, intend to house, cleanse, and clothe them, and then teach them to work. The beggars were obviously most unwilling to go, and one would imagine the undertaking will not be an easy one to handle.

The officials are actively engaged in an attack on public gambling, which at this time of the year is greatly indulged in. Those caught are marched through the streets with a board strapped on their shoulders advertising their offence.

The river has fallen nearly to the zero mark, and there are still three ships on the run to Chungking. This is the first winter that ships have really had a chance to carry on for the whole winter, and it looks at least as if one is going to show that it can be done. But the navigation of the Rapids is difficult and one of the three touched rock last trip down, and has ventured on another trip with a hold temporarily patched with cement.

"FOOT-AND-MOUTH disease in England has now spread to golfers." "To golfers?" "Yes. They foot it all day and mouth about it all night."

FUKIEN'S MILITARY DESPOTS

Fattening on Opium Taxes: Orgies of Squeeze and Corruption

From a Correspondent.

Amoy Jan. 27.

We are in a mêlée, of military leaders as irregular as the "ranges" of the unarranged mountains of this naturally lovely and humanly vile south Fukien. Some of the minor generals are regularly receiving support from at least two sides. Their support of the major generals seems to consist largely in letting these greater ones have the right of way among the people's pockets. Of course, just now the harvest of opium and the scent of the poppy are so closely connected with the clink of revenue coin that we are not likely to hear firing or see smoke until the harvest is past and the tax collected.

In one case they worked out a beautiful scheme of tax rates. The planter of "one peck" paid $10, of "two pecks" $16, of "three pecks" $20. The folk who planted last year and not this year had added to their last year's account a fine of $5. Those who planted neither year paid less.

EVERYTHING "TAXED"

Taxes are developing wondrous growths. Any leader now can make one tax station appear where never was one before. At one they achieved heights seldom observed. A friend of mine passing through laid out his goods, paid his charges and passed on. In the lot was a pair of little baby shoes, home made, on which the collector said he need not pay. He went about 20 steps and was stopped again for "inspection." His receipts were scanned, and his goods examined again. "Ah! This pair of shoes is not on your list of duties paid. You are a smuggler." "But your chief gave me this slip saying I had paid all that was due." "What he says is nothing to me. You're a smuggler. You're fined $60." And he had to pay it. Another friend was caught and fined for not having paid duty on the umbrella he was using!

One of the preachers here has been caught three times and held to bring pressure upon members who were being "squeezed." Our first case of a real capture-and-hold-for-ransom is now on.

The price of rice has gone up 50 per cent. since summer. Everyone who can is leaving the region. Our launch connexion with Amoy—and the world—runs between shores held by opposing generals, who all collect charges on the way. This week one side felt it was not getting enough, so opened fire on the launches as they passed, killing one passenger and wounding another.

NEW YEAR FESTIVITIES AT HANGCHOW

Old Customs Much Alive in the Heavenly City

From Our Own Correspondent

Hangchow, Feb. 6.

The China New Year has come and gone with its thrilling memories of fire crackers, clanging cymbals, beating gongs, lighted candles, music without dancing, fantastic fanterns, kite flying, bird-airing, spirit feasting, ancestor remembrance, and lots of noise to drive away the evil ones.

The many gods have been visited, and soothsayers consulted and fortunes foretold. The pendulum which swung so far to one side at the Revolution is gradually coming back to the old ways of bowing, wishing well, and shaking your own hands in the air,—quite sanitary.

An abundant supply of good things were laid in for the festive season because the Sons of Han in spite of the Gregorian calendar believe at this time in a long holiday and good chow according to the gastronomic requirements of the family, seasoned with a little Shaoshing wine, which being spirituous helps to dissolve some of the fat that is always overabundant in the food at this season.

At the C.M.S. Hospital Chapel on Sunday, the Rev. Dr. Blain preached a fine sermon on the Cross of Christ, and at the end there was a United Communion Service, administered according to Presbyterian rites, when members of the various missions partook of the Lord's Supper. It is some years now since we have had such a communion, and is another proof of the wonderful spirit of unity there is amongst the Hangchow missionaries.

During the China New Year holidays there were quite a number of distinguished visitors in the city. The Belgian Consul was one of the guests in a house by the West Lake.

We are sorry to have to report the death of Mrs. Arthur, the beloved wife of Rev. J. H. Arthur, of the Presbyterian Mission North. She had had heart trouble for some years, but was wonderfully well. Serious symptoms, however, appeared a few months ago, and gave warning that the end might come suddenly. She was true and gentle, most unselfish, humble, blameless, and stainless, and will be greatly missed by all who knew her. Our sympathy goes out to Mr. Arthur and all who mourn her loss.

GUARDING A MISSION COMPOUND

Humble Shantung Soldiers Who Do Their Duty: Night in the Bandits' Country

From a Correspondent.

Tenghsien, Sung., Jan. 31

The bandits put Lincheng on the map. Tenghsien is one hour's ride on the train from Lincheng. This section for years has been badly infested with bandits.

At Tenghsien there are two schools—one a Theological Seminary and the other a Normal and Bible Training School. These schools are in one compound—not surrounded by a wall—but by a barbed wire fence.

On this compound live four foreign families, a number of native professors and teachers, also more than 200 students. Formerly there was no guard, but recently the local official has placed about 20 soldiers inside this fence, for the school's protection.

Whatever we may say about the Chinese soldiers in general, the guard on this compound has done its duty. The men have been quiet, courteous and faithful. As one hears their tramp, these bleak, cold, windy nights, one wonders, what do they get out of it?

While the soldier is reported to do little for his country, his country does little enough for him. They get the simplest food and small wages, and no appreciation.

Last evening I was sitting alone, calmly knitting, when the night watchman came in like a "bolt from the blue," with the startling intelligence that he west city gate was now in the hands of the bandits. The captain had sent word for all lights to be extinguished and no one to leave the house. These two things are always demanded. To go abroad, one becomes a target both for soldiers and bandits. At the house there was a lady just out from America and a child, neither of whom could speak Chinese. So I had to venture forth to reach them.

The night watchman was most solicitous. If I would go, he must accompany me, holding me by the arm all the way. I found the soldiers at their posts. We were challenged by two before reaching our destination.

Three belonging to our families collected at one house, where we sat in the dark and made our plans for hiding if necessary. Of course, the possibility of the house being set on fire had to be reckoned with, and a hiding place must always have an exit. The children were quite frightened. I calmed them by the utterance that the bandits did not want them, all the children at Lincheng having been set free. This made them quite happy, and they asked me, "Didn't I wish I was a child?" But it proved to be a false alarm. A house was robbed by a few men. There was an organized band and this latter affair was soon over.

JAPAN'S IMPERIAL WEDDING

A Picturesque Display of Old Japanese Ceremonial: Vast Crowds and Great Rejoicing in Tokio

By Alfred E. Pières.

Tokio, Jan. 26.

I fitted myself in my Court clothes and went to see the wedding of his Imperial Highness the Prince Regent with the Princess Nagako Kuni, elder daughter of Field-Marshal Prince Kuni-[illegible]. Thanks to an influential friend in the Foreign Office I was able to see a great deal of the proceedings at fairly close [illegible]. It was indeed a sight worth witnessing.

The nuptial rites had been fixed for 10 a.m. and from the first intimation of dawn, people began to [illegible] through which the Prince Regent and his bride were due to pass later. The police, military and gendarmes were in considerable evidence, and elaborate precautions were taken to ensure that nothing untoward would mar the importance of the occasion and the solemnity of the event. The attempt made on the Prince Regent's life on December 27 galvanized the police and military into careful preparations aimed at preventing politically discontented individuals or groups from venting their thoughts or dissatisfaction in any manner. The first step towards this end was taken a week before the royal nuptials were to be solemnized, when the police dragnet scoured all Tokio and its environs and gathered in a large number of Socialists, anarchists and persons supposed to be of advanced radical tendencies, both men and women, clapped them into cells and kept them under lock and key till the event was over.

The wedding was originally fixed for January 27, but was changed to January 26, because it was on December 27 that an attempt was made on the Prince Regent's life, and the date was decreed as unlucky and unpropitious.

MARRIAGE SANCTIFICATION.

Just as the enthronement of a [illegible] is similar in its religious significance to the coronation of a European King or Emperor, so was a Shinto High Priest conspicuous by his absence in the marriage rites of the Crown Prince. Following the example said to have been set by the first [illegible] the virtual succession to the Throne [illegible] of the Three Sacred Treasures of the Imperial House, the emblem [illegible] passes into the hands of the successor. The formal accession, for which a later and more auspicious occasion is selected, therefore, consists of two main parts, namely, the newly-installed Emperor's reverential announcement of the fact of his coming to the Throne before the national deities and [illegible] asking their blessing and guidance; and the announcement of the same to his subjects and the world at large during a State banquet.

In the case of the Prince Regent's wedding, after the betrothal was duly reported many months ago to the national deities and ancestral spirits and all preliminary ceremonies were gone through between the Prince and the Imperial parents, the next most important rite was the reading of a collect by the Prince Regent. Seated side by side on [illegible] placed on the floor with his royal bride, dressed in ancient Japanese robes, His Imperial Highness read a [illegible] to the Holy of Holies [illegible] one of the magnificent halls of the Imperial Palace, where the Yata Mirror, one of the three Sacred Treasures is enshrined. This served as the marriage. The royal couple then proceeded to the ancestral shrines in the Imperial Palace where they reported the marriage to the ancestral spirits. To-morrow they will leave for Numazu where the solemnization of the wedding will be announced to the Emperor and Empress, after which they will proceed to the Imperial Mausolea at Momoyama, near Kyoto, the ancient capital, and here again announce their having entered the married state to the Imperial ancestors deified in this shrine.

POEMS EXCHANGED.

The first direct exchange of sentiments between the royal couple took place to-day when his Imperial Highness presented to the Princess Nagako a tanka (Japanese poem) written on pink coloured paper. The Princess immediately wrote a reply, in fitting language, also in the form of a tanka. Formerly it was a strict rule of decorum in exalted quarters that the betrothed parties should not hold any correspondence until the day of their wedding. The earthquake, however, smashed this precedent, and both the Prince and the Princess hastening to write to find out whether anything had gone amiss. Correspondence relating to personal safety soon ripened into other correspondence. Thus the Prince Regent, aided by the earthquake, has been able to get rid of an irritating precedent, and revert to more natural rules.

PRINCESS GOES TO PALACE.

With heavily-armed troops, many feet deep, encircling the crimson-and-gold limousine that had been sent to the residence of Prince Kuni for his daughter to proceed to the Imperial Palace, the Princess Nagako, escorted by her father and a special chamberlain of the Palace, was driven through dense crowds of people. In the meantime, the Princes and Princesses of the Blood with their families; peers of the realm; high Court dignitaries and exalted officials had assembled in the Kashikodokoro Hall in which the wedding rites were to be solemnized. With the exception of those who represented one or other of the nation's fighting arms, and who were dressed in Occidental uniforms, the rest were clad in the ancient classical robes of Old Japan. Some of the most wonderful designs in ladies' kimono were to be seen, clothes that were specially made for the occasion and which will be worn but once. At the Palace, the Prince Regent and Princess Nagako changed into time-honoured court dress and when the royal couple entered the marriage solemnization hall, the Prince was clad in a deep-yellow silk kimono and a white hakama (skirt-like contrivance worn over the kimono) a garb that has been used on exceptionally festive occasions for over 1,200 years. Princess Nagako also wore an ancient court costume, the kimono being a twelve-coloured garment and her hakama of rich purple silk, the finest that the looms of Kyoto would make.

THE RELIGIOUS CEREMONY.

As their Imperial Highnesses entered the Kashikodokoro hall, they were offered the cleansing water in a gold and lacquer bowl, the highest Court dignitaries making profound obeisance while so doing. The Prince Regent then took up his sceptre and Princess Nagako the Hiogi fan and followed the Grand Master of Ceremonies to the Sanctuary at the end of the room. The Princes and Princesses of the Blood then followed and grouped themselves around the sanctuary, kneeling all the time in a manner similar to communicants in a Christian [illegible] of worship. Weird, yet solemn, Shinto music suddenly floated on the air, the signal for the opening of the doors of the Main Shrine by the officiating ritualists. The Chief Ritualist then read a collect. Followed by a chamberlain holding his train and another carrying the Tsubokiri sword, a gift from the Emperor, and followed by a group of civil and military [illegible] the Prince proceeded towards the Sanctuary. Princess Nagako, escorted similarly, followed His Imperial Highness, a number of ladies-in-waiting in addition going with her.

The Sanctuary of the Main Shrine which the Japanese regard as their Holy of Holies—is not very spacious. Several of the attendants of the Prince Regent and the Crown Princess, accordingly, had to remain outside. Their Imperial Highnesses entered the Shrine and were seated on two specially prepared thrones. Everyone in the immediate entourage then made profound obeisances, throwing themselves flat on the ground and affirming their loyalty to the future Emperor and Empress of these domains.

His Imperial Highness then read a scroll announcing his marriage with the Princess Nagako, after which their Imperial Highnesses stepped backwards out of the Sanctuary. The thrones were then removed to the edge of the Main Shrine, while a Ritualist brought a golden cup into which consecrated saké (rice wine) was poured. The cup was then placed in the Prince's hands who sipped it and then passed on the cup to his bride who did the same, this being symbolical of plighting their troth "for better or worse until death us do part." Another Ritualist then removed the cup and Their Highnesses turned towards the Sanctuary again and together made deep obeisances to the spirits enshrined therein, and then retraced their steps to the Kashikodokoro Hall, escorted as before. The door of the Sanctuary was then closed, intimating that the religious portion of the ceremony had been concluded. In the Kashikodokoro Hall are two other Shrines—the Kworeiden and the Shinden—and hand-in-hand the royal couple worshipped here again.

THE CIVIL CEREMONY.

The religious ceremony took place at 10.15 in the morning and while the rites "in the Holy Presence" were being celebrated at the Imperial Palace, all Shinto shrines throughout the country held special services in honour of the occasion.

At 3 in the afternoon, the ceremony of "dining together" was held at the Akasaka Detached Palace, the future home of the newly-married pair. This is the main feature of the civil side of the ceremony. Their Imperial Highnesses were seated on a four-legged stool, without a back, and in front of them were placed two red-lacquered tables. A Chamberlain then offered his Imperial Highness a cup with saké, and through a Lady-in-Waiting, the Prince offered the cup to the Princess, who drank of it and then, through another Lady-in-Waiting, returned the cup to His Imperial Highness. Princess Nagako then arose and approaching the Prince Regent served him in person with a cup of saké, after which her Imperial Highness received another cup of saké, this time direct from the Prince Regent.

This over, the royal couple took hold of their chopsticks, made of beautiful beaten gold, and ate of the special repast that had been prepared. After the meal was over, the assembled Princes and Princesses of the Blood and privileged courtiers gathered and shouted "Banzai" (Japanese method of cheering). The ceremonial tables were then removed. The civil ceremony was at an end, and the Prince and his bride retired into an inner chamber.

Lieutenant-Colonel F. S. G. MUKDEN EN FETE

Second Son of Uncrowned King of Manchuria Weds: The Bride's Trousseau

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mukden, Jan. 26.

The marriage of Marshal Chang Tso-lin's second son, Chang Hsueh-cheng who is 17 years of age, to the second daughter of the Marshal's Military Adviser, Gen. Yao, has naturally brought to Mukden all the leading Chinese officials of the Three Eastern Provinces, besides a number of other visitors. According to good old Chinese custom the wedding ceremony was celebrated at midnight, on the 18th instant and preceded by a sumptuous banquet which was attended by a galaxy of Chinese, Japanese and foreign dignitaries accompanied by their wives. Special theatrical performances were given for three days afterwards. Among those specially invited were Dr. C. C. Wang, President of the Chinese Eastern Railway, from Peking, and Messrs. Yu and Danilevsky, the Chinese and Russian Vice-Presidents of the C.E.R, from Harbin, Gen. Chu, Administrator of the Special Railway Area, and Gen. Wen, Police Commissioner of the Special C.E.R. area.

The bride-elect's wardrobe was most eleborate and was transported beforehand to the bridegroom's house in ten motor-cars. It consisted of some 120 pieces of costly embroidered dresses and several hundred pieces of jewellery, including rings, necklaces, bracelets, earrings and other bijouteries the total value being estimated at several hundred thousands of dollars.

Notwithstanding the fact that Marshal Chang had announced that valuable wedding presents would not be accepted, through the new Chinese order that officials are not allowed to accept expensive gifts, the Directorate of the C.E.R. sent a solid silver tea-set inset with diamonds and other precious stones, and Gen. Chu made an equally valuable present. Gifts were also sent by President Tsao Kun and the Directorate of the South Manchuria Railway, that of the latter being a costly Japanese embroidered screen. Gen. Yao, Military Adviser, has since been appointed Managing Director of the Three Eastern Provinces Bank (Bank of Manchuria.)

FENGTIEN FINANCES.

The finances of the Fentien Provisional Government are now in a most thriving state, thanks to the energy shown by Civil Governor Wong who also is in charge of the Board of Finance. The surplus in hand at the end of 1923 amounted to $21 million inclusive of the sum of $5,000,000, last year's surplus.

A young Russian aviator, Moservitch by name, in the employ of the Mukden Aerial Corps, met with a tragic death on the Yao-Chang wedding day. He was carrying out some wonderful feats of looping and drilling, when suddenly after-having dived to within 20 metres of the ground something went wrong with the machine, which dashed to earth nose-first. The young aviator was all but crushed to death, his companion on the rear seat, a young Chinese, escaping with his life by a miracle. He was only bruised and somewhat shaken.

The expansion of the Mukden Aerial Force continues. Over 20 aeroplanes form France have already arrived and more are expected in a month or so. The Air Office have selected a dozen or so young Chinese officers who are being sent to France specially to study aeronautics.

The Mukden Military Reorganization Headquarters is now selecting some 25 young officers to send to England for special military training.

The recently opened section from Chengchiatun to Toanan on the Ssepingkai-Toanan Railway is stated to be doing quite good business, the daily returns being some $1,300 in passenger fares and $8,000 in freight, whilst the total returns of the whole line exceed $25,000 daily. This must be considered as eminently satisfactory, seeing that the territory traversed by the railway is but scantily populated so far. It is only a matter of time before this line will become exceedingly prosperous, and if continued to Tsitsihar will become a serious competitor with the Chinese Eastern Railway. The scheme for building a railway from Kaiyuen to [illegible] which town lies to the east of the S.M.R. main line, will [illegible] eventuate this spring, as the undertaking has the support of Marshal Chang. It is likely that the sum required for its construction will be raised by subscription among the gentry and business people of Fengtien province.

MUKDEN CELEBRATES IMPERIAL WEDDING.

To-day is the Wedding of the Prince Regent. Japanese residents are celebrating the event notwithstanding that there has been a sudden fall in the thermometer and it is exceedingly cold, 18 degrees of frost being registered.

The whole of the Japanese settlement is gaily decorated with flags and coloured lanterns. All business has been suspended. The streets are thronged with holiday makers. At noon there was a huge gathering at the Shrine where Shinto priests held a religious ceremony. Massed bands of the different railway departments, the schools and other organizations were in attendance. A procession over a mile long, including numerous school children, masqueraders, gaily decorated motor-cars and lorries and a pageant on horseback then proceeded to the Japanese Consulate-General, where the Consul-general made a speech and where leading citizens were invited to drink the health of the Happy Imperial Couple. In the evening there was an official banquet at the Consulate, whilst all the Japanese theatres gave free performances.

HEROIC HONGKONG POLICE

The Central Station Memorial: Notable Events Recalled

Four brass tablets in memory of Hongkong police officers who fell in the Great War will be unveiled shortly at Police Headquarters, Hongkong, states the "South China Morning Post."

Eleven names appear on the list of Europeans who died in Hongkong. Those who come within the range of recent memory include Det.-Insp. M. O'Sullivan and H. G. Clarke who were killed in the Gresson Street affray in 1918, Sgt. Goucher who was mauled to death by a tiger (subsequently bagged) in the New Territories and Insp. Terrett, who was drowned in mysterious circumstances when crossing the East River at night in a hunt for a fugitive who had murdered the manager of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home.

The list for Indian officers dates back to 1894, when a Sikh constable received five bullet wounds in the chest, but was still able to overpower and escort from Wing Lok Street, two men alleged to have fired at him. This man died in hospital.

A brutal murder for a paltry sum in 1909 is recalled by two Indian names. These men were murdered in cold blood at Au Tau Gap while escorting a few hundred dollars, proceeds of opium sales, into Hongkong.

Three Sikhs who met their deaths when the Cheung-chau police station was raided by armed robbers in 1912 also appear on the Indian officers' list.

Twelve names are included [illegible] Chinese role of honour. The first one met his death in [illegible] when his assailant was executed [illegible] Chinese mandarin in Kowloon City. Amongst the more recent ones are those who were killed at Gresson Street, Sergeant Sin Chuen the hero of Wing Woo Street and Cheung Cheung [illegible] outside Messrs. Ullmann's last year

PAUL REGENDANZ GONE

Clearance Papers and Injunction against Her Departure Issued on Same Day

The str. Paul Regendanz left Shanghai on Saturday, when she received clearance papers, although the Mixed Court, from which 17 of the crew are under remand in connexion with the shooting affray on board at the Kaiyosha Wharf, on the same morning issued an injunction against the vessel's departure. We understand that the ship left her berth at 1 p.m. for Kobe, Yokohama and Dairen.

On Thursday of last week, when the accused men made their third appearance in Court, it was announced that the Chinese authorities claimed jurisdiction, but the bench declined to accede to the request on that day, adjourning the case.

On Saturday morning Dr. O. Fischer applied to Messrs. Jacobs (American Assessor). Thorgeir Siqveland (Norwegian Assessor) and Magistrate Li, for the case to be heard in the Chinese Court, Dr. Fischer's request for privilege of argument, as instructed by the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, was granted and February 14 was fixed as the time.

Mr. A. S. Allan, who had assisted in the prosecution, appeared in the Mixed Court on behalf of Captain Tezdorf, an American citizen and the former master of the ship under whose command the vessel proceeded from Hamburg to Colombo. He alleged that his salary totalling Tls. 2,700 had not been paid and because of the claim Mr. Allan asked that the steamer should be enjoined against leaving the port, which request was granted and the injunction issued.

Mr. J. K. Davis, Executive Consul at the U. S. Consulate-General stated yesterday that the Shipping Office had issued the Consular clearance papers on Saturday upon the presentation of the Custom's clearances. The American authorities here take a friendly interest in the affairs of Panama, but are not officially Consul for that republic.

THE B.-A. T. STAFF

Entertained at Dinner by Sir H. Cunliffe-Owen

It sometimes unfortunately happens that the good old phrase "an enjoyable evening was spent," is just a polite fiction used by the reporter to spare the feelings of those concerned, but the phrase can be applied at its full value to the entertainment which took place at the Carlton Café on Monday night. Having been publicly entertained by the staff of the British-American Tobacco Co., Sir Hugo Cunliffe-Owen, chairman of the company, and Lady Owen last night returned the compliment and were hosts to the entire staff, guests numbering about 360. The whole of the Carlton was engaged for the evening, and there was a full programme, with many interesting novelties which made the occasion entirely enjoyable.

The dining room was effectively arranged, with painsettias a feature of the floral decoration, and the tables were set out in the form of a star, lines radiating from a pretty centre piece. A novel method of seating guests was adopted. Each was given a number, and these went into two huge dummy cigarettes—an 9-ft. pair of "Capstan" and "Three Castles"—places then being drawn for, and seats taken without any reference to seniority, an informality which added much to the pleasure of the occasion. There were no speeches.

The great feature of the after dinner programme was a series of old fashioned dances, for which members of the staff had practised assidiously. The figures of the courtly Cotillon were prettily done and were a delightful change from the democratic fox trot. The rest of the staff had devised various novelties to enliven the proceedings, and altogether the party was a very happy one.

THE PUBLIC SHOOL FOR GIRLS

Exhibition of Handicraft by Pupils in Yuyuen Rd.: A Clever Display

The exhibition of the work done during 1923 by the pupils of the Public School for Girls as displayed in their fine new building in Yu Yuen Road last Friday afternoon was a very interesting demonstration, the more especially as it was a genuine cross section of the work of the school and not a spectacular show arranged merely for public entertainment. The drawings, art work and handicraft of the different forms and even some special models made by the different classes for this occasion were selected and arranged within a week's time.

The work of the pupils in the class-rooms was a representation of the normal work of the School, and by posting the names of the girls at the door and the name of the individual pupil on her desk parents could easily see the exact conditions under which the children work. The different forms had made models of various scenes as pictured by them—a snowy Esquimo landscape with igloos, a Chinese country scene with every detail represented, even to the amah washing rice in the canal where sampans floated and fishermen threw their nets. Two oasis scenes, one the work of the Upper Fifth, the other of Form IV showed palms, tents, serpents, camels, the pyramids and even the sphinx, while a Borneo village showed the native huts on stilts, snakes and snake-charmers and natives.

EFFECTIVE EQUIVALENT.

Wandering all over the splendid, airy building one admired its adaptation to its purpose, from kindergarten to chemistry laboratory—the latter not yet fitted up. Opportunity is given to every child to develop manual dexterity and artistic ability and the specimens of work exhibited showed excellent progress and a fine spirit of workmanship. The building presents a plain exterior and has been kept purposely simple, no verandah being added to shut off the light. Accommodation is furnished for 250 children at present and extensions can be added as required.

The lower school and kindergarten, gay with pictures and decorated by the children's own work, are situated in the eastern portion of the ground floor with cloak rooms, amahs' room, and lavatories. The dining room, kitchen, janitor's office, matron's room, tuckshop and piano room are provided for in the north wing.

On the first floor are five class-rooms, each exhibiting the pupils' work, the art room, preparation room, the mistress's common room, the Headmistress's office, book store and Assembly Hall in the central point of the school. The large science room, lecture theatre, the balance room where the weights and measures are kept, the store room for apparatus, two class rooms and living quarters for two mistresses are found on the second floor, which also gives access to the gallery over part of the Assembly Hall.

GOOD FOUNDATIONS.

Speech Day, held on Thursday afternoon, was of particular interest as being the first to take place in the new building. The Trial Scene from "Alice in Wonderland" was effectively presented by eight girls, songs, recitations, a series of tableaux representing "A Royal Princess" by Christina Rossetti were splendidly given and Mrs. Murray, head mistress, presented to the prize-winners volumes beautifully bound with the Council's seal stamped upon each.

Mr. Stirling Fessenden, Chairman of the Council, addressed the school, speaking in high appreciation of the new building, which he said was an ornament to the community. He urged the children to realize that they were, day by day, building the structure of their lives just as this building had been built up, brick by brick, and to see to it that they laid good foundations for future years.

WEDDINGS

Porter—White

A very picturesque wedding was solemnized on Saturday afternoon in St. Joseph's Church when Miss Clara Muriel White, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Augustus White, was married to Mr. Ernest John Andrew Porter, only son of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Porter of Epsom, Surrey. Mr. Porter served in the Transport service during the War, once being torpedoed and obliged to pass seven days in a life boat. Since coming to Shanghai in 1910 he has been associated with the Indo-China Steam Navigation Company. The Rev. Father Macdonald officiated and the church was decorated with palms, bamboos and white blossoms.

The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in white brocade girdled with small rows of orange blossoms which hung in knots of silver ribbon streamers at the side. The long veil which served also as train was fastened with a coronet of pearls and orange blossoms. The bridesmaids, Miss Frances White, sister of the bride, and Miss Eva White, her cousin, wore bouffant gowns of pale yellow and soft green taffeta, respectively with overskirts of georgette, and banded with fur. They wore Dolly Varden bonnets to correspond and carried muffs georgette trimmed with white fur and a spray of flowers.

The bridgroom was attended by Mr. A. Cameron as best man and Messrs. H. A. White, G. and F. Johnson and T. A. Cooper acted as ushers. A large reception at the home of the bride's parents, "Whitehaven," Avenue du Roi Albert, followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Porter received the congratulations of their many friends beneath a canopy of green, with floral bell. The beautiful and costly gifts, tastefully displayed, included a handsome dinner service and many choice bits of cut glass and silverware. Many showers were given to the bride and the gifts presented on these occasions were also shown with the more elaborate presents. The bridal couple have gone on a motor houseboat trip for the honeymoon. The bride wore on leaving the house a three piece costume of grey twill embroidered in rust red with a small hat to match.

Rosenbloom—Soulevich

A pretty wedding was solemnized on Sunday in Ohel Moishe Synagogue when Miss Olga Beatrice Soulevich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Soulevich became the bride of Mr. Mark Rosenbloom, of Messrs. H. S. Honigsberg & Co., Inc. The ceremony was performed by Cantor P. Rosoff. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore silver brocade, girdled with orange blossoms, with a long train decorated with white fur and orange blossoms. Her veil of embroidered net was held in place by a wreath of orange blossoms and the bridal bouquet was white carnations. The bridesmaids, Miss Tony Whitgob and Miss Tony Gookoff, wore pale pink taffeta and carried baskets of cut flowers. Mrs. Soulevich wore a dress of silvered satin, with matching hat.

Mr. Rosenbloom was attended by Mr. H. Whitgob as best man. After the ceremony a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents, 39 Haskell Road.

As an outcome of the capture of the American missionary, Dr. Schmalzreid by bandits in December, it is reported that the local authorities at Tungjen have been endeavouring to save themselves by shifting the blame on to the former, alleging that he disregarded the instructions that he should wait for his escort of troops, which had been detained by merchant junks down the river. One specific report handed to the Government is characterized as being absolutely false.

AMERICAN SHIP ON ROCKY ISLAND

The Edmore Badly Holed on Voyage from Kobe to Shanghai

The U. S. Shipping Board str. Edmore, bound from Kobe to Shanghai, ran on to the rocky ledges of Quelpart Islands late on Tuesday night in a driving rainstorm. She lies suspended bow across the rocks and stern swinging free in the water. The Admiral Line str. President Jefferson, Captain Nichols master, received the wireless S.O.S. calls, and rushed off her course to Shanghai to stand by until other aid arrives.

The unfortunate ship was ploughing through huge seas halfway between Moji and Shanghai when the master, it is thought, lost his course in the violent weather. Suddenly the rocks loomed up before him, so close that the helm could not even be thrown over and the Edmore drove directly on to the ledge and over. According to messages received in Shanghai the vessel went nose into the air and then settled down with a broken stem and shell plates smashed and twisted. There were no casualties so far as is known.

The speed must have been high for the fore part of the ship is 60 feet over the edge of the ledge, most of which is submerged. It is considered likely from the meagre reports at hand that eight or 10 feet of rock are projecting upward within the hull of the Edmore. The fore-peak and No. 1 hold are full of water.

There appears to be no great danger imminent, except in the event of bad weather.

The Shanghai offices of the Admiral Line have been informed that the President Jefferson will stand by to rescue the crew, should there be bad weather, until the West Henshaw, which has left Kobe, comes to the scene. This should have happened during last night. The mails and passengers which should have arrived in Shanghai yesterday will be 48 hours late.

SALVAGE TUGS DESPATCHED.

Determined efforts are being made to salvage the stricken ship. A tug has been despatched and a corps of divers from Korea, while more divers and assistance are being sent from Japan.

The Edmore is one of the vessels built under the direction of the American Government during the war. She is of 9,000 tons displacement and just under 500 feet in length. Her cargo consisted mainly of wheat and flour, with some general merchandise for Shanghai and Oriental ports.

PERSIA TWICE AGROUND.

The Lloyd Triestino str. Persia also experienced difficulty but nearer Shanghai, just north of the mouth of the Yangtze, when she went on to the Amherst Rocks early on Wednesday morning.

The pilot boat which was at the mouth of the river went to her assistance and managed to get her off, but as the fog came up, the smaller craft could not keep her under control, so she ran aground again in the false channel of the Yangtze about six miles from Tungsha Light.

At noon on Wednesday the St. Dominic and Samson left port but ran into a dense fog and could not approach her position until nearly 11 o'clock on Thursday morning. Lines were run to the Persia and she was finally dragged from her berth, but headway into Shanghai was slow. It was stated late yesterday that the vessel would arrive here during the night. Passengers and crew are safe.

Although the extent of damage is not known we have been informed that the Persia will be delayed in sailing and will be put into drydock immediately.

While the pilot boat went to assist, no fewer than 23 vessels had to wait a day at Fairway.

Later.

Wireless messages received in Shanghai late on Thursday evening state that the str. Edmore has been got off the rocks and will be towed to Shanghai stern first by two Shipping Board boats.

THE MUNICIPAL ORCHESTRA

The Shanghai Municipal Orchestra at their concert on Sunday afternoon rendered pieces suited to the most varied tastes in classical music, ranging from Bach and Mendelssohn to Debussy and Chabrier. This was the third time the last mentioned composer's name has appeared on the Sunday programme during the season, the other pieces comprising the overture to "Gwendoline" and a lively piece "Espania Rhapsodie" which created quite an impression on the occasion of its performance. Mr. N. Vierkowsky who performed the flute parts in the Bach Suite and Saint-Saens "Romance" was the soloist for the afternoon.

Gluck's "Overture to 'Alceste'," finely executed by the orchestra, has a haunting sense of sadness and impending fate which at the outset strikes the tragic note of the opera to follow. Few composers are so entirely satisfying as Bach. In the Suite in B. Minor for flute and strings, despite the close texture in design of the overture the sublime grandeur is never lost whilst in the dance movements which it precedes the bucolic notes of the flute add the effect of simplicity and thus is achieved the unity of perfection.

Mendelssohn's incidental music to "The Midsummer's Night's Dream" with its elf-like quality was in pleasing contrast to the Bach selection. In their interpretation of the three pieces from Debussy's "Children's Corner Suite" the orchestra succeeded in bringing out the Rodinesque quality of his work—that evanescent spirit which emerges from the raw material of sound and quickens it much in the same way as the great sculptor's creations endowed even the rough stone with feeling.

Another flute solo was given in Saint-Saens Romance for Flute with Orchestral Accompaniment and here it should be said that both in this piece and in Bach's Suite Mr. Vierkowsky's control of his instrument was superb. There was nothing to suggest effort on his part and he preserved a fine harmony of interpretation throughout.

SCHOOLBOY STOWAWAYS

Captured at Woosung: American Youths' Amazing Adventure

Dressed in their Sunday best and posing as first-class passengers, Allen Kees, "Sandy" Collins and Clisby Du Bose, three American schoolboys, on Monday morning stowed away in the str. President Lincoln in the hope of reaching America.

The young adventurers were caught at Woosung, a wireless message from Mr. C. L. Boynton, principal of the American School, having reached the ship while waiting for the tide in the anchorage. Without ceremony they were landed by tug at Woosung, whence a motor-car brought them to Shanghai and retribution.

The vessel did not leave at 9.30 a.m. as expected, but at one o'clock. This delay played havoc with their carefully laid plans, enabling the school to institute inquiries during the morning. Of course, the plot was known to their schoolmates, but how could they disclose it? Finally, however, one boy gave the game away. Scarcely able to believe the youth's statement, the astounded head acted promptly. He wirelessed the ship and as she had been delayed it was thus possible for the boys to be landed.

WIRELESS AND TIDES.

The deathblow to their hopes came swiftly though not unexpectedly to one bright youth. This boy, Kees, is known among his schoolboy set as the wireless "shark." He was in the wireless room on the President Lincoln and heard his fate spelled out in Morse. Listening to the familiar dot-dashes he mentally decoded the message, which he conveyed to the other two boys. The tides at Woosung had proved their complete undoing, delaying the vessel until the message came through.

It is reported that the youths had become discontented on losing certain privileges through misdemeanours so decided to leave for the liberty loving land.

WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC AT HARBIN

Russian Girls' Need the Slave-Traders Opportunity: Will the Chinese Act?

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Jan. 23.

The White-slave traffic from Harbin, still appears to be in a flourishing state and dealers in human flesh both European and Japanese are continually coming to the town to acquire fresh goods. As there are so many young Russian girls in the place, whose lot is a very hard one, it is not surprising that these monsters are able to pick and choose and take away with them innocent maidens of both education and beauty. The local newspapers expose these people from time to time, with warnings to the foolish, but this is of little avail and the Chinese authorities do not appear to be able to put a stop to this loathsome trading. A victim who has recently returned to Harbin warns girls in the public press about a certain former Russian officer, who is now an agent for some Japanese brothel-keeper at Changchun. This man knows the ropes very well and in order to avoid any trouble when passports are examined in the train, takes his victims by motor-car to the first station out of Harbin, subsequently getting off the train at Kuanchengtze, the station before Changchun, where passports are again examined. To drive from there to Changchun is only a matter of 20 minutes and there is no cordon of police posts to go through so [illegible]

As a rule girls are kept in Changchun in order to have their initial training before they are shipped on further to make room for new goods. The most infamous resort there is a restaurant much advertised in the Japanese papers appearing in Manchuria, the girls being described as Russian geishas as beautiful as flowers, even the charges for accommodation for the yellow patrons of the place are printed.

Not long ago one of the girls, aged but 19, committed suicide by taking an overdose of cocaine. It appears that though she had been in the place not over a month, she had contracted disease and her master wished her to return to Harbin. The girl refused and insisted that she be sent to hospital at Changchun at the owner's expense. For two days words passed between the two, the Japanese refusing to pay for medical attendance and the girl refusing to go back to Harbin. On the third day the girl locked herself in her room and took the fatal overdose, being already dead when she was called for by guests who had arrived at the place.

Though there was an inquiry afterwards the place has not been shut up but thing became so warm for the former Russian officer, who, doubtless having accumulated a small stock of dollars, has now left for pastures new either in South Manchuria or North China. BURIED CITY OF THE SEA

A Mongolian Pompeii Being Explored

In the deserts of Mongolia, far away from cities and civilization, a rumour originated some years ago of a dead city, abandoned by its inhabitants for centuries, and buried ever more deeply beneath shifting sands, says a writer in the "New York Times." In 1907 a Russian scientific expedition, led by Professor Kozlov, set our with the purpose of searching for the city. The task was difficult, because the nomadic tribes in the region were suspicious of strangers and slow to give information. When the Russian exploring party approached Kara-Khoto with their Mongolian guide they were compelled to plough through sand drifts 15 feet deep. It was this sand, together with the arid climate of Mongolia, that had preserved the city's walls and monuments over a period of many centuries. The neighbouring tribesmen, who had settled near the city ten generations before, declared that it always had been there as far as their records reached.

AN ANCIENT LIBRARY.

The streets and houses of Kara Khoto have been largely obliterated by waves of sand. But Kozlov's party found many interesting memorials in this Mongolian Pompeii. There were remains of Buddhist temples and Mohomedan mosques. There were packages of Chinese paper money, bearing grim inscriptions threatening counterfeiters with the loss of their heads. There were silver ornaments and money, carefully [illegible]

The most important discovery of all was a cone-shaped monument outside the city walls. In this monument was a library of 2,000 books, written in seven Eastern languages. In the thirteenth or fourteenth century the Chinese had sent out an army to capture Kara Khoto. For several years they besieged the city in vain. Then a Chinese engineer conceived the idea of cutting off the water supply. He blocked up with sand bags the river which formerly flowed through the city, and turned its course in a different direction. The people, desperate with thirst, dug a deep well inside the walls, but failed to get enough water to sustain life. Then the population buried all its treasures. The chief of the tribe killed his wife and daughter with his own hand, and ordered a mass sortie through a breach in the wall. The doomed tribe dashed out, only to be slaughtered in the open by the superior forces of the Chinese.

SIGNS OF HIGH CUTTURE.

The Russians found in the monument many signs of high culture on the part of the former inhabitants. There were books in Persian, Arabic and Hindu script, as well as volumes in Mongolian and Chinese. There was a collection of more than 300 sacred Buddhist pictures, painted [illegible]

Penetrating into the mountains of northern Tibet, the party encountered a band of mounted robbers, who attacked them with swarms of arrows. These were no match for the firearms of the Russians, and the robbers were beaten off.

A new exploring party has been organized for a three years' [illegible] Professor Kozlov, who again accompanies the expedition, says its purpose is purely [illegible] The first year will be spent in Mongolia, the second in Tibet, and the third will be devoted to the homeward journey, which may be through India or Chinese Turkestan. ARMED ROBBERS IN TSINGAO

A Growing Menace: Threatened New Year Strike of Unpaid, Inefficient Police

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 1.

It is becoming more and more evident that so long as the wages of the police are left unpaid, the community cannot expect any degree of efficiency in the control of crime. With the fast approach of the Chinese New Year, a series of thefts and armed robberies have occurred in Tsingtao, the police always arriving at the scene after the miscreants had made good their escape.

Added to this disgraceful state of affairs, there is the threat of a police walk-out on Chinese New Year's eve unless part of their unpaid wages is forthcoming before then.

On the 28th instant a gang of Chinese robbers broke into a native residence on Kwang-Hsi Road and, threatening the inmates with a toy pistol, they removed from the premises a quantity of personal effects together with a sum of money. On the 29th, the home of a Japanese was broken into, under similar circumstances. A score of such occurrences are taking place all over this district at this time.

BANDITS ON THE QUI VIVE.

To make matters worse, reports are current to the effect that bandits, with the connivance of certain sections of the military guards in Kiaochow Territory, are once more making their way for this district. Should the police walk-out, as threatened, the safety of the community would be gravely endangered.

The Chief of Police and the Administration, however, are exerting their utmost efforts towards arriving at a satisfactory solution of the difficulties ahead. The former has prohibited the burning of fire-crackers during the festive season. The reason for this prohibition is to prevent armed robbers firing their pistols simultaneously with the bursting of crackers in an endeavour to take advantage of the noise of the latter in achieving their nefarious ends. With this prohibition, however, a large number of local Chinese are dissatisfied, contending that the discharge of fire-crackers is a time-honoured custom that should not be interfered with, and that it is up to the police to keep the peace by improving their efficiency, especially at this time of the year.

A JAPANESE PROTEST.

It is now learned that in view of the constant menace to the safety of Japanese residents in this district, the Japanese Minister, Mr. Yoshizawa, has lodged a protest with the Chinese Government. The latter, according to reports, have instructed the Deputy Governor to devise measures for the better protection of foreigners here.

IMPORTANT CONFERENCE AT NANKING

Christian Colleges and Universities

From a Correspondent.

Nanking, Feb. 5.

Ginling College is acting as hostess for a three days' conference of Christian institutions of higher learning, which opened on February 3. Over 200 delegates were registered in advance who come from over 20 different colleges and universities and represent about 3,000 students. The conference programme includes general meetings, but emphasis is being laid upon the departmental sections for the discussions of technical matters and common problems in the teaching of each subject, of which there are more than 20. Administrative officers meet separately from the academic delegates.

The President of the Association is Dr. Hawks Pott of St. John's, the Vice-President Miss Fenn of the Women's College of Peking University, the secretary Dr. E. V. Jones of Nanking University, and Dr. C. H. Westbrook is the treasurer.

Dr. Harold Balme of Shantung Christian University, Mrs. Lawrence Thurston, President of Ginling College, Prof. Sarvis of Nanking University, and Mr. E. H. Cressy, the Executive Secretary, constitute the Committee on Arrangements.

The conference is housed in the beautiful new buildings which Ginling College opened in the autumn and where there are 96 young women studying for their degrees. It is hoped that the conference will afford opportunity for stimulating discussions of college problems and will add strength to the whole Christian movement in China.

LISTENING TO THE CHINESE

The "Chinese Recorder" for February

Beginning with the editorial section, which is headed "Some present problems of Christian living in China," we find the "Recorder" readers are given the benefit of the editor's listenings to frank and thoughtful discussions in which Chinese interested in the Christian movement discussed its meaning and significance for their own lives. Chinese proverbs appropriately accompany and illuminate each paragraph. These listenings form an interesting excursion into Chinese thought regarding some vital questions. Among the more significant remarks are: "The way to inculcate vocational ethical standards in Chinese Christians, is, among other things, to lay more emphasis on old Chinese principles;" (honesty and confidence are referred to, and, by the way, the bank manager mentioned was not resigning, but on the eve of taking up a more responsible position in London in connexion with the same bank): "The Chinese standards and motives of conduct are more ethical than religious;" "Chinese Christians tend much to ignore their responsibility for community and national life;" "Chinese Christians should not give up their rights and responsibilities as citizens. Neither should they expect to be treated differently because they are Christians." Although such disjointed quotations are apt to be misleading we quote this reference to the increase in divorce which is said to be due, in some cases, "to the fact that while in the past secondary marriage with a desirable woman was a comparatively easy matter it is now more difficult. In other words divorce is often the attempt to get free from an unsuitable wife married in youth and secure a suitable one. In such cases divorce indicates a move away from polygamy to monogamy."

In his quest for a religion that will meet the needs of the China of to-day Mr. J. D. Macrae, among other distinctive features, claims that Christianity is a religion of experience, not a system; that it is creative in the sphere of character, progressive not static, ethical and redemptive, and is a world-wide fellowship in which China claims to make her contribution to the spiritual enrichment of the race.

DR. ARTHUR SMITH'S RECOLLECTIONS.

Dr. A. H. Smith continues his reminiscences as to how Mission work looked when he came to China. He speaks of discouraging beginnings and toilsome years, old controversies and notable gatherings, the pioneer stage of Chinese study and the men who prepared the first text-books. The veteran writer has not lost in the narration the faculty so well-known in his speaking of seeing and indicating the humorous points.

In his further instalment of the Confucian theory of moral and religious education and its bearing on the future civilization of China, Mr. Zia shows how Confucius met opposition and handicaps but never got discouraged, how open-minded he was, and although poor all his life had a passion for truth. The common sense and personality of the sage come up in connexion with pedagogical methods. Among the other contributions in this issue perhaps the most significant is Mr. K. T. Chung's account of a city-wide evangelistic effort which comprised all Christian bodies and calls for the heading of Indigenous Evangelism in Shanghai." In the contributions by Mr. Reichelt (A Taoist story of Christ) and Mr. Millican (Chen Ju) we have research work which ought to stimulate others to like studies.

ence of 40 per cent. in the purchase price: I am also aware that the plaintiffs have had, on their own admission, this money from the landlord; and taking it all into consideration I hold that the plaintiffs have failed to satisfy me that the bargain is not correctly represented in the agreement. The defendant is entitled to set off $920 on this head, and as the plaintiffs never kept their bargain about the advertisement I must take the defendant's figures as to that, and he is entitled to set off $195 here. This means the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment for $1,180, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum from March 15, 1923 (when they made the definite offer to hand over the lease) to date, with costs.

Mr. Master asked for an order that only a portion of the taxed costs be paid by defendant, he having won on the issues as to the water rate and advertisement, the first of which formed an important part of the case.

His Lordship—I shall make no special order. The less said about it the better. Your client has had the business all these months, and only paid a sum of money into court nine months after purchasing the business, and then with a denial of liability.

A CASE FOR EXPERTS

Building Contractor's Disputed Claim

At H.M. Supreme Court on Monday, before his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner, Kung Chang-tai sued C. P. Rakusen for Tls. 425, balance of account for repairs done and alterations made at No. 49A Nanking Road.

Mr. R. C. Faithfull, who appeared for plaintiff, said the matter was a building dispute which ought not to be difficult to adjust. Defendant said plaintiff had not done certain work, and plaintiff said he had, and counsel agreed with the suggestion that a practical man should be called in to decide the question.

Mr. R. F. C. Master, for plaintiff, said his client had very fairly suggested that the dispute be decided by any firm of British architects whom plaintiff liked to choose: but no reply had been received to this offer. Therefore, if plaintiff now agreed and asked for and adjournment, he ought to pay the costs.

The case was adjourned for a fortnight, and the question of costs reserved.

THE AVENUE JOFFRE SHOOTING

W. H. Shaw Brought up in Police Court on Charge of Assault on Police

The shooting affray at 280 Aveiue Joffre was recalled last Friday when W. H. Shaw apptared before Mr. G. W. King in H.M. Police Court to answer a charge of assaulting Detective Emilianoff, of the French Police. Shaw, who is convalescent and looked very pale after his stay in hospital, was allowed to be seated.

Mr. C. Mansel Reece, who appeared on behalf of the French Police, stated that he wished to ask for a remand until Shaw and Lowry, also under arrest, could be tried together.

Det. Sgt. O. B. Henry, of the Shanghai Municipal Police, gave evidence of arrest. When cautioned Shaw made no reply. After the arrest he took the accused to the General Hospital, where he left him under arrest.

Examined by Mr. Reece as to why prisoner was taken to the hospital in an ambulance, Det.-Sgt. Henry stated that Lowry had told him that Shaw was in a very weak condition. This was also confirmed by the doctor.

Mr. Reece asked for a remand until the 7th instant.

Mr. Goldring opposed this and asked that the case should be dealt with forthwith unless the prosecution agreed to bail.

This was objected to by Mr. Reece. He had given the French Police to understand that he would ask for a remand and was not therefore prepared to go on with the case.

Mr. Goldring asked why it was the French Police were not in court that afternoon. He had waited in Court in the morning for an hour for them to turn up but they did not do so. The case consequently had to be postponed. Inasmuch as they had not turned up yet, despite the postponement, he was entitled to ask that the case be dismissed.

His Worship.—You are entitled to apply but your application will not be granted.

Mr. Reece stated that the remand was necessary as the case was very intricate and necessitated the collection of further evidence.

Asked by the Magistrate, with reference to the question of bail, what would become of Shaw when he left the Court—whether he would go home, to prison or the hospital—Mr. Goldring stated that but for the action of the French Police in arresting defendant's wife for the French Consul to examine her, Shaw would not be in hospital.

Mr. Reece objected to bail on the ground that there was a danger of defendant escaping from the jurisdiction of the Court.

Bail was refused and the case was adjourned until the 7th instant.

Mr. Goldring said he should appeal against the Magistrate's decision. This appeal was accordingly made in the afternoon before the Judge in chambers.

French Detective's Story of Trap Set to Catch Alleged Opium Dealers

The hearing was continued on Thursday.

There were two new charges brought against the accused, by the police of the International Settlement, viz: (1) That they entered into negotiation, with one Wu Yük-sih, to deal in opium, contrary to the King's Regulations, at Boone Road in December last; and (2) the larceny of $885 belonging to the same Chinese.

In the assault case, Mr. P. W. Goldring and Mr. Tycho Wing appeared to defend Lowry, and Mr. Goldring and Dr. G. Sellet defended Shaw, Mr. C. Mansel Reece appearing to prosecute on behalf of the French authorities.

Mr. E. T. Maitland prosecuted in the second case.

Det. Sub-Inspector Conduit, in giving evidence of arrest, said he executed the warrant at 8 o'clock on Wednesday evening at No. 280 Avenue Joffre. They were cautioned, and made no statement of any kind.

Mr. Maitland asked for a remand on these charges until Monday, saying that he would not object to bail. Owing to the holidays, the prosecution were unable to get their Chinese witnesses.

Mr. Wing—It is very unreasonable to ask that these proceedings be protracted in order that some Chinese may go holiday-making.

A remand was ordered until this morning, bail being allowed.

The court then proceeded with the original charge, viz., that of having assaulted a French police officer, Emilianoff.

SETTING THE TRAP.

In opening the case for the prosecution, Mr. Mansel Reece said that the actual assault took place on January 23, but antecedent to that the French police received information—.

Mr. Wing objected to the Court being told what information the French police received.

Mr. Mansel Reece—I must explain how the case arose. The police received information that certain—

Mr. Wing—I do object. This is absolutely hearsay evidence.

Mr. Goldring—All we are charged with is an assault.

The Magistrate said that he could not stop counsel at that stage, and continuing, Mr. Mansel Reece said that the French police received information that a man named Shaw was dealing in opium. Acting on this information Detective Emilianoff was instructed to make inquiries with regard to this opium traffic and, in doing so, on two or three occasions he visited Shaw's house in Avenue Joffre to ascertain something of the position and ultimately bring the matter to light. The detective's inquiries culminated on the evening of January 23, when Emilanoff called again at the house, the door being opened by Shaw. A quasi-business transaction with Shaw ensued, accused producing opium and discussing the question, and then complainant was assaulted by Shaw and his two friends—Lowry and Ledoux, the latter of whom had since been charged in the American Court. At the time of the assault Shaw had received information that Emilianoff was a French police officer and of course knew what his business was, and Shaw and his confederates had a motive for smashing complainant up if possible.

Dr. T. M. Burton, who attended Shaw in the General Hospital, gave evidence that he had received a punctured wound in the left side, two inches below the nipple. The bullet had struck a fountain pen in Shaw's pocket, causing it to travel round a rib and lodge in his back some two inches from the spine.

THE KNOCK-OUT BLOW.

Dr. Fresson gave evidence as to his examination of Emilianoff on the day following the shooting. There were several contusions on complainant's face, but the most serious mark was on the left angle of the jaw, raising a lump and a violent contusion so that complainant could hardly open his mouth. There were also two or three contusions on the forehead and several others on the back of the head. The blow on the jaw was characteristic of what was known in boxing circles as a knock-out blow, and was quite enough to knock the detective out.

His Worship—Were the other blows characteristic of anything in the fighting line?

Dr. Fresson—No, except that from the nature of the injuries it appeared they were all caused by the fist, not by any sharp instrument.

Mr. Wing—The injury to the jaw might have been caused by a blow with the open hand?

Witness—I do not think so.

Mr. Wing—You don't say positively it could not!

Witness—It certainly could not.

Mr. Wing—If the detective thought he was in danger of his life he would be proceeding on a wrong hypotheses!

Witness—Not at all, because a knock-out blow on the jaw makes a man senseless and unable to analyse whether he is fainting or dying.

Mr. Wing—I have had many blows on the jaw, and I am afraid I cannot agree with you.

THE DETECTIVE'S STORY.

The complainant, Det. G. A. Emilianoff, then told his story of the affair, saying that on January 22 he was informed by his Inspector that the owner of car No. 2730 was dealing in opium, and instructed to make inquiries. At the Traffic Department, he found the car was owned by Shaw, and he was then instructed to visit Shaw's house and present himself as an opium broker, in order to obtain evidence, and to say that a certain well-known Frenchman had recommended him to call at the house. Witness first called at 280 Avenue Joffre at 6 o'clock on the evening of the 22nd., Shaw being at home with a lady, who soon left saying "Well, I'll leave you alone." Witness began to open a deal, saying he had been told Shaw had some cargo, and asking for prices and a sample. Shaw said he had no sample in the house at the moment, but offered to sell at $43 per pound. Witness replied that his employer would not give more than $36, and would buy four cases at that price. Shaw answered that this could easily be done, because he had 43 cases in stock. He added that delivery could take place at that house, but witness suggested this should not be done as the removal of the cases might arouse suspicion, to which Shaw replied that he was not afraid, because he was paying the French police. Shaw invited witness to call on the following day at tiffin time, and witness did so. Shaw then displaying a sample of opium which he described as the "knife" brand. Witness smelled it and, in the manner of an opium broker, started to break it when Shaw asked him not to do so, saying there were other buyers calling that afternoon and that was the only sample he had. He asked witness to call again at 6 o'clock that evening, but witness was an hour late in keeping the appointment. Lowry and Ledoux were then in the house, and the former informed witness that Shaw would be back at 8 o'clock.

SHADOWS.

Returning at that hour, witness observed shadows on the window indicating that there were several people moving about the front room, but when witness knocked at the door nearly two minutes elapsed before the door was opened, and then Shaw was alone. They sat down together at a table and began to discuss the opium deal, witness saying that the buyers would not give more than $37 per lb., Shaw replying that he could dispose of the stuff at $38. Finally witness said he would pay $38 at his own risk, and then asked to see a sample. Shaw then rose and said: What is your name." Upon being told that it was "George Lang," and that witness was a Russian, Shaw asked: "Do you really come on behalf of this Frenchman?" Witness was about to explain that he was not exactly acting on behalf of the Frenchman when he received a blow on the jaw which sent him to the floor, dazed. Upon attempting to rise, he received a number of blows, and, as he was crouching against the wall on one knee and with his left arm shielding his head, he saw three pairs of feet around him. The blows were struck by more than one person. Thinking that he might become unconscious if more blows were struck, witness cried "I am a French detective, I'll shoot," but the blows did not cease. Witness had by this time drawn his revolver and, raising it under his left forearm—which was still shielding his head—fired, without seeing where he was shooting. The blows ceased and witness got up, then seeing Shaw standing with his right hand pressed to his side, and Lowry and Ledoux standing against the wall. In leaving the room witness avoided going by the front door, as that would have meant turning his back towards the three men. He therefore made his way out cautiously by the back door.

Dr. Sellet—Did you really think you were in danger? You were armed, but these men were not armed.

Witness—Are you sure they were not armed?

Dr. O'Hara, called by Dr. Sellett, stated he examined Shaw upon his arrival at the General Hospital, and found that the bullet had penetrated the left lung, and witness removed it from his back at a point a shade lower than the point of entry.

Mr. E. Sidaine, assistant of the French Police Criminial Investigation Department, who visited the house shortly after the shooting took place, described the scene. A gramophone had been overturned on to the sofa, records were lying about broken, and chairs were overturned. On the floor was a bag belonging to Shaw, containing a cigarette case and 109 rounds of revolver ammunition, of the same calibre as a revolver found in the house.

When the proceedings were resumed in the afternoon, complainant was re-called and, questioned by his Worship, said that the blows came from all directions, and at such speed that witness was sure several men struck him. He sometimes got two blows together.

MAH JONGG AND CHINESE CURIOS.

This concluded the case for the prosecution, and Mr. Wing at once asked that Lowry be discharged, there being no evidence against him at all, but counsel's application was not granted.

Lowry then gave evidence, stating that he was a traveller and did business at the river ports, and was now making arrangements with Shaw to open a branch at Peking. On the evening in question, he had dinner with Shaw, leaving the room when complainant whom witness did not know to be a police officer—called. Upon hearing the shot fired, witness ran into the room and saw Shaw holding his side and the detective, making for the back door, cry "French police officer! French police officer!" Witness had not the slightest reason for supposing that he was, and was not armed. He had no knowledge of any opium at the place, and had never had any dealings in opium. He was a dealer in Chinese curios, mah jongg sets, etc.

The defendant Shaw was then called. He said that the complainant called at noon on the day in question and said he had a business proposition. Some reference was made to mah jongg—(witness was a dealer in mah jongg sets and curios), and witness asked him to call again that evening. When he did come and they sat down to talk, complainant confessed that the business he had come upon was not mah jongg but opium. "You have made a mistake. You have come to the wrong house," said witness, but complainant "kind of winked" as much as to say that witness need not be afraid and that he could fix the business up all right. Witness invited him to "please go," but he offered some money, and persisted in offering some money, finally so annoying witness that he gave the man a slap in the face with his open hand, whereupon he immediately drew his revolver and fired. Lowry then came in, and witness exclaimed "This son of a gun has shot me in the heart." The complainant, who was behaving like a maniac, cried out that he was a French policeman, and ran out of the house. Neither Lowry or Ledoux touched complainant, and witness only gave him a single light blow with the flat of the hand.

Mr. Mansel Reece—You are a professional boxer?—I was, but am not now.

What sudden whim induced you to abandon prize fighting and go in for selling mah jongg sets?—No sudden fancy at all.

When did you first know the man was a policeman?—Not until after I had been shot and he told us. I thought he was a lunatic with a gun.

Asked by the Court how he accounted for the injuries certified by Dr. Fresson, witness thought the doctor had been mistaken. He accounted for plaintiff's story by the fact that Emilianoff lost his head and fired, and had to make up some excuse.

J. R. Ledoux, a motor engineer, corroborated Shaw's story in most details, and denied that either Lowry or himself struck complainant, while Shaw only gave him an open handed slap.

His Worship found the case against Lowry had not been proved and discharged him. He believed the story of the prosecution against Shaw, and found him guilty, sentencing him to two months' imprisonment with hard labour. In view of the wound Shaw had received the sentence would be under medical supervision, and if the doctor found he could not do hard labour, it would be cancelled.

TARDY WITNESSES

In the U. S. Court for China on Monday afternoon, before his Honour Judge Lobingier, Mr. H. R. Snyder, acting as special assistant U. S. District Attorney, moved that A. P. Pattison, who has been in the custody of the U. S. Court in Shanghai, charged with alleged embezzlement, be released on his own recognizance, pending trial. Mr. Snyder stated that the defendant had been in custody for a considerable time awaiting the arrival of witnesses for the prosecution, who had refused to come to Shanghai for a considerable time, although their expenses had been offered them. Under the circumstances, since the defendant had unsuccessfully endeavoured to secure bail his further detention seemed unjustified. In consideration of these facts the Judge ordered that the defendant be released on his own recognizance until further order.

PSYCHOLOGY AND DISEASE

The Nature of the Soul and its Connexion with the Human Body: Origin of Diseases Traced to Childhood's Repressed Complexes

Before the Quest Society last week Dr. Bary gave an interesting lecture entitled, "Psychology and Disease—in which he dealt with earliest theories relating to psychic forces, the relation of psychic activity to the diseases of the body and the latest developments in experimental science.

The lecturer pointed out that from the very beginning of the conscious life of man and before the dawn of the light of scientific investigation or of any definite knowledge of the structure of the human body, philosophers and theologians have endeavoured to ascertain and explain the nature of the soul which was thought to be spiritual and on an entirely different basis to the material body. Since that time and all down through the ages speculative philosophers, clever logicians and men of science have continued their investigations and formulated theories with no definite or universally accepted result.

LAST CENTURY'S DISCOVERIES.

Towards the end of the last century psychology began to concern biologists and physicians rather than the philosophers and theologians, and with the great strides made in natural science and medicine coupled with a wave of materialism it was not unnatural for a pronounced change to occur in the prevailing mental attitude towards all psychic phenomena which came to be considered as merely the action of the nerve cells in the human brain.

One of the German biologists, Charles Vogt, held that all ideas were the result of secretions in the brain in the same manner as that the bile is the secretion of the liver. When biologists entered the realm of psychology the methods of speculative philosophers were abandoned and the more accurate experimentation applied to physiology and other branches of science were adopted and hence was evolved the term "experimental psychology." It is now possible by means of the most accurate devices and instruments specially invented for the purpose to define, express, measure or compare nearly all psychic actions such as thought, feeling, memory, attention, imagination, etc

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL RELATIONS.

After dealing with the methods of experimental psychology Dr. Bary said that it has not only established definite relations between the mental and physical states and enabled us to measure the speed at which they act and react, but it revealed the fact that the nature of ideas is frequently determined by the physical state. Thus in employing the word test after physical fatigue it has been noticed that the mental association of one word with another is more frequently that of sound than of logic.

Modern developments have assisted in many different branches of work, amongst others education and criminology. An illustration of the pactical adaptation of experimental psychology to education is in the selection of a course of study or profession most suitable to the individual mental capacity and natural predilection. In Germany and the United States special psychotechical institutes have already been established where the best career for an individual can be established with almost mathematical accuracy.

THE ORIGIN OF DISEASE.

With regard to disease the materialists claim that it has a purely physical origin: the psychologists contend that it is in a large measure due to mental or psychic imperfections. Many diseases are unaccompanied by any perceptible change of tissue as is often the case with palsy, fits, loss of consciousness or power of speech. Such diseases are known as 'functional' and, in spite of the materialistic trend of modern scientific research, the belief is spreading that they owe their origin to purely psychic influences. Thus, for example, the idea occurs that the arm cannot be moved without causing severe pain. This may produce a palsy of the arm hardly discernible from palsy resulting from anatomical changes in the brain. In this connexion very interesting results have been obtained from a study of the consequences of Compulsory Workman's Compensation Laws. Eliminating the many cases of conscious attempt at fraud, it is shown that recovery and return to work is generally much quicker where no compensation at all is paid or where it is paid in advance in one sum than when payable periodically for the duration of the illness. In the former instance there is a strong mental incentive to quick recovery which is absent in the latter.

It appears that most functional nervous diseases have their origin in repressed complexes formed in earliest childhood, as for example the youngest child may develop neurosis as the result of two complexes formed on the one hand by the parents exalted idea of their youngest, and on the other by the older and jealous children treating him as a nonentity thus giving rise to the complex of inferiority.

FUNCTIONS OF THE GLAND.

Having found that serious and prolonged diseases may be due to no physiological but purely psychic conditions it remains to trace the means by which the cause produces the effect as revealed by the latest researches in experimental psychology. The existence of certain glands producing different secretions such as the saliva, bile, the urine, etc. had long been known to medical science but the functions of other glands which produce no secretions such as the thyroid, suprarenal, etc., were quite unknown until quite comparatively recently. We are also now aware that the so called endocrine glands are of vast importance in the life of the individual. Their secretions are known technically as hormons which enter the blood in very small quantities, and a study of their effect necessitates their being considered as actual poisons.

GRAVES' RESEARCHES.

The English physician, Graves, proved that excessive production of the hormons of the thyroid gland produced certain physical symptoms such as abnormal perspiration, irregular heart, protruding eyes, etc., which are the characteristics of the disease which bears his name; on the other hand diminished thyroid Secretions he found gave rise to totally different physical symptms, and also mental disorders. More recent investigations have shown that the hormons of other endocrine glands have also their peculiar and important functions, and when greater or less in quantity than normal produce physical and mental abnormalities. The suprarenal gland secretes the socalled adrenalin which causes in excess a prompt and considerable contraction of the blood vessels. Derangement of the hypohysis (a small gland under the brain) produces enlargement of the feet and hands and lower part of the face and sometimes the gigantic growth of the whole body. Giants have, for example, suffered from the over-activity of that gland in childhood. We have also known that the poisonous effects of one gland are normally neutralized by those of another.

Abnormal conditions of the secretary glands are the cause of many well known and serious diseases: thus excessive secretions of the thyroid gland give rise to Graves disease to which reference has already been made; deficiency in the secretions myxoedema and imbecility; whilst the destruction of the thyroid produces cretinism. It is now generally admitted that the actual cause of insanity is abnormal conditions of the secretary glands, and through this discovery we are [illegible] which until quite recently were considered incurable. I could give you many interesting examples that have occurred in my own experience, but the time at my disposal does not permit to do so.

WORK ON THE NERVOUS SYSTEM.

It may now be stated, as established beyond question, that not only the glands, physiological and nervous, frequently caused by abnormalalities in the secretary glands, but that the activities of the nervous system have an important effect on the secretary glands. It is now many years ago that I demonstrated at a medical congress that it was possible to produce salivation by stimulating certain areas of the cortex of the brain, Subsequently it was shown by the celebrated Russian physiologist, Pavlov, that by purely mental or psychic processes the secretary juices of the stomach could be stimulated. Such phenomena are common in the every day life of humanity.

Experimental psycology has established the conclusion that temperament and character determine to a much greater extent than was before thought possible the physiological characteristics of the individual. It is seen in his features, in his gait, in his manners as well as in his susceptibility to disease. It has been truly said that "as a man thinketh so is he."

WHERE CURE LIES.

Having shown what a very important part the psychic forces play in the cause of disease, is it not natural to suppose that those same forces might also be employed in its cure! As a matter of fact modern experimental psychology has effected a great change in ideas, not only as regards the origin but the treatment of disease. It is now generally admitted that a cure is by no means the result of prescribed medicines but also due to a combination of psychological conditions which, until recently, were not understood, or generally ignored. While those psychological conditions always existed, their therapeutic value has been vastly increased by the konwledge which has enabled their conscious application by physicians on a scientific basis.

HUMANITY'S MISFORTUNE.

After dealing in detail with hypnotic treatment and "the talking cure." Dr. Bary, referring to the psycho-analytical methods of Freud, said: It is unfortunate for humanity that the full psycho-analytical treatment can never be widely practised, for the following reasons: Not many physicians possess in themselves those psychic qualities that are essential to the successful practitioner. Moreover, very few physicians can afford the time or possess the infinite patience required to effect a cure and none but well-to-do people can afford to pay the fees that must be charged for such services.

THE PSYCHIC FORCE.

In conclusion the lecturer said:—Suggestion plays an important part in the life of every individual, in his religion, his politics, his business and in all the relations of man to man. It is at the basis of all appreciation of or genius for music, art, poetry, etc. It is entirely disassociated with brute force or more cleverness and can often accomplish as much or more than those qualities are specially expected to achieve. The people of a while continent trembled at the word of Napoleon, but paid no attention to Louis XVIII and yet each spoke as the chief executive of the same great nation with similar armies and competent generals to support them. An ignorant damagogue may have a greater influence over a mob than the wisest statesman, and a fraudulent quack a wider popularity than a talented and learned physician. In sickness or in health and in the whole range of human life and activities, it is the psychic force, that expression of the soul of man, entirely disassociated from the material body that plays the leading part and enables us to discover and appreciate, to control and to use for the benefit of mankind the natural wonders of God's world.

Another smart capture has been made by Bah Tsong-gee, who holds a wonderful record among the Chinese detectives in the Municipal Police for arresting armed robbers. On Friday his suspicions were aroused by actions of a loafer, whom he subsequently arrested. The man is thought to be one of the principals in a big armed robbery in Pootung recently. The remainder of the gang are still at large

THE EMPIRE OPTICAL COMPANY

Judgment in a Tangled Lawsuit Between Chinese Vendors and Mr. C. P. Rakusen

Judgment was given in H.M. Supreme Court on Monday afternoon, by his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner, in the case in which a group of Chinese sued C. P. Rakusen for $2,300, the agreed purchase price of an optician's business in Nanking Road. Defendant, who paid $5 alleged to be bargain money, deposited $1,000 in court, and claimed various sums paid by himself but for which he held plaintiffs were liable, and the principal one of these—amounting to 40 per cent. of the contract price—was allowed by his Lordship. Judgment was given for plaintiffs for $1,180, with costs.

Mr. Tycho Wing appeared for plaintiffs, and Mr. R. F. C. Master for defendants.

His Lordship said:—The plaintiffs sue here for damages for breach of contract dated February 10, 1923, in which the defendant with one R. A. Thompson aggeed to buy a business at that time running in the Nanking Road for a sum of $2,300. The defendant, while admitting the contract, pleads in effect that the plaintiffs have not fulfilled their part of the contract: he seeks to set off certain sums as against the purchase money and he brings a sum of money into Court with a denial of liability.

The plaintiffs owned this optical business and shortly before China New Year, 1923, wanted to dispose of it for cash. Having already been into business relations with Thompson, they are brought into connexion with the defendant Rakusen who was possessed of capital and was also interested in the optical business. After negotiation the terms of purchase were agreed and were signed on February 10, 1923, on a document prepared by the defendant and seen by the plaintiff's agent, one Tsar, for the first time on that occasion. On February 11 (Sunday) the defendant entered into possession and an inventory was taken: he has remained in possession ever since. He has only paid $5 (as we now know) on account of the purchase money: and it was not until he filed an amended defence on November 1, in the action which had been begun in May, that he suggested liability at all in the matter by bringing money into Court.

THE TROUBLE IN THE CASE.

The real trouble in this case is primarily due to the fact that no provision was made in the contract for payment, with the result that the defendant has refused to part with his money until the plaintiffs fulfil all their covenants and the plaintiffs refuse to do anything until they get their money. It is to say the least of it an unfortunate dispute. It is also due to the fact that the transfer of the existing lease of the premises which had some 23 months to run was never made by the plaintiffs nor was it offered till March 13, when the defendant had made his own arrangements for a new lease. Not that the defendant has suffered much harm here: for he was able to obtain a fresh lease on the same terms from the landlord for the unexpired term on March 15. Certainly from that date onwards, the defendant had the business, the goods, etc., on the premises and a lease for the agreed time: the only matters left over then were (1) a question as to water, (2) a question as to advertisements, and (3) a question as to alleged missing goods. Yet the defendant paid nothing more and has not up to date.

CONTEMPTUOUS BARGAIN MONEY.

Now as to the date of payment, it is true there is no express term as to when this should be. But it seems to me that clause 6 shows at all events the latest date when payment should have been made: 60 days after occupation. The only right the defendant had to detain purchase money was given him by that clause: and that was only to be for an agreed sum. I think the contract meant to provide for bargain money on signature (I cannot believe that the letter of February 15, referred to bargain money for nothing), for part payment on getting occupation and for payment of the balance 60 days after that, i.e., under the circumstances as they were by April 12. None of this has been really carried out, for the $5 is really almost contemptuous as "bargain money," though I must hold it to be such. Now the defendants were not bound to furnish a list of outstandings: but they were bound to insert advertisement relating to their own liability on such outstandings, and this they did not do: they say, as they had no money available as no payment had been made on account: at all events the defendant did it, as he has sworn, at a cost of Tls 140 ($195).

Now the defendant seeks to set off three items against the purchase price, and I think he is clearly entitled to a deduction for the advertivements. As for the value of goods taken away, I am not satisfied about this at all: the defendant made his inventory and took possession of the premises and is practically charging the plaintiffs or one of them with breaking in and taking away certain goods. This seems to be based upon some statement made by Tsar and an offer of come to terms on it: but it is clear that he was anxious to get payment and was ready to make some concessions. No deduction can be made for this.

A DELIBERATE SWINDLE.

The water bill is more difficult and has led to a very unpleasant controversy. It is enough to say that the relations between defendant and Thompson now are very badly strained whatever they may have been at first; and Thompson on his own showing was a party to what he calls a deliberate swindle. This must lead me to disregard his evidence throughout, and I am left to the evidence of the plaintiffs and the defendant and the written document.

It seems that the plaintiffs had already recived from the landlord the account of the water rate for the balance of the lease. They say that this was taken into consideration in fixing the price at $2,300, and that the defendant was not to get the advantage of it; the defendant says exactly the reverse and supports his word with the form of clause 3 of the agreement. That clause had originally no reference to this matter at all: but as it now appears it contains a liability on the part of the plaintiff to settle this water-bill. This is added in ink to the type-written clause and the addition is initialled by the defendant only. There were three parties to the agreement: defendant, Thompson and Tsar (for tht plaintiff); and the meaning and effect of this addition is to reduce the purchase price from $2,300 to $1,400: a very large change. It is a curious thing that the defendant, accustomed to make agreements and evidently knowing the value and importance of initialling alterations should not have obtained the initials of Thompson or of Tsar to this change.

A CHARGE OF GROSS FRAUD.

Now the oral evidence is entirely contradictory, and I have then to deal with the matter strictly. It is first of all to be noted that the document has been in the possession of the plaintiff Tsar from the commencement and he has never till now put this matter forward. Next, the document is essential to his case: he has to produce it and it would appear the burden of proof is on him to satisfy me that these words were not there when he signed. Again I have to remember that the charge is one of gross fraud and was not raised in the pleadings or in any correspondence between the parties. I am aware that it means a differ-

DISPUTE OVER A SHIP'S CHARTER

Yu Fong S. Co. v. Wm Katz & Co.: Judgment for Plaintiff in $22,000 Claim

Judgment was given in favour of plaintiff yesterday in the United States Court in the case in which the Yu Fong Steamship Co. sued Wm. Katz & Co. for charter here of the str. Hwah Jah and other items. Messrs. Rodger & Haskell appeared for plaintiff and Messrs. Fessenden & Holcomb and Davies & Bryan for defendants. In giving his decision Judge Lobingier said:—

This is an action to recover Hongkong $19,654 for charter hire of the steamer Hwah Jah, chartered to defendant in December, 1921, and retained until August of the following year. The amended complaint claims for the fifth and sixth months of the term and also for certain items alleged to have been incorrectly charged by defendant against plaintiff. The answer denies these latter items and while admitting its failure to pay, alleges as its reason for non-payment:

"that the plaintiff had violated the terms of said charter party [illegible] stopping [illegible] with [illegible] from the [illegible]

Such a provision is valid and enforcible.

Plaintiff's contention is that defendant failed to pay for the third month, commencing May 10, 1922, and that stoppage of the steamer was thereby justified though not actually effected. Defendant testifies that the charter hire for the third month was actually paid before the steamer was ordered stopped, but he produces no vouchers and plaintiff's accountant testifies that none were furnished, while both the accountant and the shipping manager, declare that the charter hire for the third month was not paid when due. Moreover defendant's testimony on this point is not of payment by himself but by a sub-charterer, and as the latter was not available, the next best evidence would have been the signed voucher, which, as we have seen, was not produced.

But we need not finally resolve this conflict. For even if it were true that plaintiff was unjustified in ordering the steamer withdrawn, we are cited to no authorities for the proposition that such withdrawal would cancel defendant's liability for subsequent charter hire. Defendant's remedy for wrongful withdrawal would have been a counterclaim for any damage it might have suffered thereby. But no such counter claim is pleaded. Moreover it appears from the ship's log and the captain's testimony that the steamer had already been stopped before plaintiff's order, owing to the charterer's failure to supply it with necessary funds. The log book shows only three days during which the steamer was "awaiting owner's orders" and on the day following it proceeded [illegible] stances any defence to plaintiff's claim and, since no counterclaim is pleaded, [illegible] deduction.

Besides the hire [illegible] tiff claims the sum of $2,763.37 alleged [illegible] charged [illegible] The latter [illegible] time lost at Chefoo and Guildford during that time. The captain testifies that the ship was about [illegible] hours during which time the passengers were discharging, and that it is not the rule to deduct for a shorter period than 24 hours. There is no contrary evidence and we feel obliged to allow these items, amounting to $2,450.38, which added to the undisputed balance of $19,654.00, makes a total of $22,104.38. We do not find, however, that the other items for difference in exchange and one day's charter hire are proven.

It is accordingly considered and adjudged that plaintiff have and recover from defendant $22,104.38 together with costs.

A PORCELAIN SHOP OWNER

Responsibility of Proprietors for Agent's Acts: A Fine but No Moral Slur

A 71-year-old Chinese was fined $20 by Mr. A. J. Martin (British Assessor) and Mr. Kuan Chun (senior Chinese Magistrate) at the Mixed Court last Friday morning for allowing obnoxious porcelain figures to be sold at his shop in Nanking Road.

Mr. E. T. Maitland (Prosecuting Solicitor) represented the Police, and Mr. W. S. Fleming defended.

Mr. Fleming stated that his client admitted the sale of the figures in his shop, but said that he was an old gentleman, who only owned the shop and knew nothing about the sale. Certainly he had never participated as he lived in the Native City and had left the management in the hands of an assistant. The shop assistant admitted having sold the articles and did not object to having his name substituted in place of the old man's on the charge sheet.

Mr. Maitland stated that accused was charged with selling obnoxious figures in his shop at 158-159 Nanking Road. A detective had purchased two of them, and, when the place was raided, 18 more were found in the premises.

Mr. Fleming submitted that his client was an old man and infirm, who had been a very good character. He had been 40 years in the porcelain business and was quite innocent of the charge. The goods did not belong to him.

Det.-Sub. Insp. Yorke gave evidence of the execution of the search warrant, and produced the figures in question. The Assessor, with the concurrence of the Magistrate, remarked that the Bench did not wish to inspect them.

Det.-Sub-Insp. Yorke, continuing, said that he spoke to the assistant, who stated that the figures came from Kiangsi. There was never a suggestion that they belonged to any person other than accused.

Cross-examined by Mr. Fleming, witness said that to the best of his knowledge the shop was an old established one. Personally he knew that it had been opened for 10 years. He did not know whether accused had ever been charged before, and in this instance he had not made any sale. The figures were in the shop, above the accountant's desk. Some were wrapped in paper, but some could be seen if one went into the shop by the back door. From the front of the shop, they were not exposed.

THE PROPRIETOR'S PROTEST.

The accused said that he was 71 years old, and had been in the porcelain business for about 40 years. He was formerly chairman of the Hupeh Guild and the Porcelain Dealers' Guild. Never in his whole career had he been charged with such an offence as this. He had never bought any of the figures, and if he had known about them he would not have permitted them [illegible] his shop because he knew that it was wrong. During the 16 years that he had lived in the Settlement he had never allowed any of the figures in his shop. His assistant had taken them in from a friend, who left them for disposal. The assistant had never told him about them, and he did not hear of them until he was summoned. If he had known, he would never have permitted his assistant to take them into his shop.

Cross-examined, he said that the assistant was still in his employ and was in court. Witness looked after the Nantao side of the business and the assistant was in charge in the Settlement. He knew nothing about a bill of his shop being used in connexion with the sale of the figures. Witness never sanctioned the sale.

The assistant was called and admitted that the figures had been left in his charge by a relative who brought them from Kiangsi. He had been asked to dispose of them. Witness never told his master anything about the matter, which was a private transaction and had nothing to do with the business.

NO MORAL SLUR.

Mr. Fleming: I don't mind if my client's name is taken off the charge sheet and this man's substituted. The Police proceed sometimes in matters like these without looking into the rights of the parties concerned. In this case, they have not summoned the real man. I ask that this man's name be substituted.

The Assessor: That may be done.

Mr. Fleming: That is up to the police, but a person cannot commit a crime without criminal intent. My client had no criminal intent. It is not right that he should be charged simply because he is owner of the shop. If that were so, perfectly innocent persons could be charged and for offences committed by their employees. Why did not the police arrest the real offender, when they knew who it was? I ask that the charge be dismissed.

The Assessor (after consulting the Magistrate): We do not think that there is any moral slur on accused, but we do think that while he did not know of the sale he was responsible, and we fine him $20.

Mr. Fleming: Will the Court add a rider on the charge sheet clearing accused, because he is a man of good character?

The Assessor: We have said that there is no slur on him morally.

DUMMY PISTOLS

Robbers Armed with Tin Revolvers and Paper Ammunition

An interesting statement was made by Inspector J. MacKenzie in the Mixed Court last Friday, when, before Mr. Whitamore and Magistrate Li, he charged two Chinese with being concerned in two larcenies and with being in possession of dangerous weapons. He said that it was his belief that there are in Shanghai a number of robbers who, use water pistols and toy "dummies," in intimidating people and robbing them.

Acting on information received, to the effect that a band of armed desperadoes were in a certain Chinese lodging house in Canton Road, witness and a squad of police went to the place, prepared for all eventualities. On going upstairs and entering a room, they found two men (the accused) who were immediately searched for arms. None were found, but the accused were recognized by detectives as being men who had been deported from the Settlement and were immediately placed under arrest. The room was completely searched and under the mattress of a bed on which accused were sleeping a dummy pistol and a couple of water pistols were found. The men and the pistols were brought to the station and the accused admitted that they had taken part in two larcenies. Upon information given, the stolen property was recovered and was identified by the owners, who were in court. Accused were charged with the larcenies and with being in possession of dangerous weapons which, he believed, were being used by a number of armed robbers who have been committing depredations in the Settlement for some time past.

The dummy pistol was produced in court and a demonstration of how it was used was given by Inspector MacKenzie.

The Court found both men guilty of the charges preferred against them and sent them to prison for two years each.

SENTENCE ON CARGO PILFERER

Echo of Holt's Wharf Case: Three Years for Opening Godown Door

Three years' imprisonment was passed by Mr. Whitamore and Magistrate Li at the Mixed Court last Friday on a carpenter for being concerned with half a dozen other men, already convicted, in breaking into a warehouse at Holt's wharf and stealing a quantity of serge.

Mr C. Mansel Reece (prosecuting) stated that accused was charged with being in association with prisoners whom the Court had already dealt with. A statement was made by Li Tsang-nyeu, already convicted, against the accused, this showing that accused had provided the key by use of which the men managed to get into the godown.

One of the men already convicted stated for the prosecution that he was invited by accused, whom he knew, to go out to play. He complied and accused led him to the godown where the theft took place.

Accused, in a very rambling statement, said that he knew the last witness who had given evidence against him, but they had not met for a long time and the statement was not true. This witness was an enemy of his and had a grudge against him.

The Magistrate—Are you telling the truth? If you are not, and do not admit the statement, other witnesses will be brought forward and if they testify against you as this witness has done, you will be heavily punished.

Accused—I tell you the men are my enemies.

Three more witnesses were called and they corroborated the previous witness's statements, saying that accused led them to the place and opened the godown doors; he had taken part of the serge himself.

Accused—Yes, Sir, I admit that I was concerned in the affair, but please do not be harsh with me.

The Magistrate—Oh, no, certainly not. Only three years.

In connexion with the case arising from thefts on board the P. & O. S. Kashgar, another remand was ordered until after the Chinese New Year holidays.

LOTTERY SCHEME OR KINDNESS?

A Bookseller's Explanation of his Distribution of Coupons

A Chinese bookseller was charged at the Mixed Court last Friday before Messrs. Martin and Kuan with running a lottery without a licence at 110 Foochow Road during the month of January.

Mr. E. T. Maitland prosecuted and Dr. A. Fishman defended.

In opening, Mr. Maitland stated that accused could have had a licence if he had applied. In June last a notification appeared in the Municipal Gazette stating that a licence must be obtained before lottery tickets could be distributed. The Council was not opposed to lotteries which were intended to assist trade, provided that licences were first obtained. In this case, advertisements appeared in the Chinese press announcing that prizes might be won with lottery tickets sent out to purchasers of books from accused's shop. Tickets were of various colours and were worth different sums of money. It was a case of pure chance, because the tickets were not in every package.

NOT PRIZES BUT PRESENTS.

Dr. Fishman admitted that defendant distributed the tickets, but said that the police translation of the advertisement was wrong. Instead of "prizes" the word which appeared in the advertisement was "presents." Every package of books contained a ticket for a present. This was not a lottery, but it was a case where accused was selling books. It was intended as a matter of courtesy and kindness for accused to give each one of his customers a ticket which would entitle him to a present.

The Assessor—If it was an act of courtesy, then everybody would have equal privileges because the advertisement contains an inducement open to everybody.

Counsel then proceeded to cite a case in which Mr. Blackburn (a former Assessor) and Magistrate Kuan held that a bona fide bond scheme was not a lottery either by Chinese law or by construction of the municipal by-laws in the Settlement or in the Mixed Court. Whether such a scheme was bona fide, the Court held, was a question of fact to be considered in each individual case, but the mere fact that such a scheme was called a premium savings scheme did not necessarily make it a lottery.

Mr. Maitland, who prosecuted in the case referred to, stated that that was entirely different from the present case.

CHINESE AND THE GAZETTE

Dr. Fishman, continuing, held that it was a complimentary scheme. Accused was a member of a big firm which was not in need of money as a lottery scheme would call for. It was a company of $150,000 capital and did $14,000 business annually. In any case, the average Chinese did not read the Municipal Gazette, and the accused did not know that he had to obtain a licence, as called for.

Mr. Maitland stated that the advertisement appeared in two Chinese papers.

The Assessor asked Dr. Fishman if accused was prepared to discontinue distribution of the tickets, to which a reply was given in the affirmative.

Mr. Maitland—The Police do not object if he takes out a licence. He applied for one after the case came up.

The hearing was then adjourned and the Court reserved its decision.

It was reported to Yangtzepoo Police Station in Monday that a Chinese dwelling in Kwe Tang Road was entered at 2.30 in the morning by eight men armed with choppers and knives. The robbers made good their escape with money and jewels to the value of $80.

The Hongkong Harbour Police last week made what is described as one of the largest seizures of arms ever made on a ship in the waters of the Colony. This was from the str. Bendoran. After a careful search the arms were found concealed in sacks, and comprised no fewer than 62 revolvers, three Mauser pistols, 10,000 rounds of Mauser ammunition and 5,400 rounds of revolver ammunition. No arrests have been made.

A good "Prince" story is going the rounds just now. It appears that on a former visit to Canada our popular Ambassador was entertained by the prominent men of a certain town, and, after luncheon, he was chatting with the company in his informal manner in the smoke-room. One young man, a nephew of a certain English dignitary, who had had just a little too much to drink, was continually breaking into the conversation with, "I wonder, gen'l'emen, if you are aware that I am a nephew of Lord——?" The Prince stood it as long as he could, and then turned to him. "It's quite all right, old man," he said "I shan't tell him!"

One small insurance company, the Taisei, has already paid the "sympathy" allowance of 10 per cent. to those of its clients who lost their property in the great earthquake catastrophe, and one of the large companies—the Tokio Marine and Fire, Mr. Kagami's company—has announced its intention of doing so regardless of the decision of others. So the "Asahi" reports, mentioning also that a meeting of the Insurance Association was held on the 24 to discuss the problem of sympathy payments. The paper confirms the report already published that the new Cabinet is not inclined to help, but that the companies may make a compromise with their clients, in order to avoid the lawsuits with which they are threatened. So this is what the Association's sympathy and generosity comes to.

Shanghai goal—particularly in the second half, when they had reasonably good opportunities of scoring a goal or two, and one "certainty,"—they showed pronounced weakness in front of goal. On one occasion, at the finish of a nice combined movement, Falconer found himself standing uncovered in front of an absolutely empty goal. Had he allowed the ball to roll on untouched, it must have found a resting place in the net, but he took a shot and lifted it clean over the bar. The crowd roared its amusement and disappointment, for the visitors during this period had their longest and strongest period of attacking—a bout of some five minutes in the neighbourhood of the Shanghai goal—and a goal to them would have been deserved and welcomed. Several less obvious but quite presentable chances were missed, and for the rest, Quayle and Turner very effectively checked all forward rushes without serious difficulty, and Remedios had only two really dangerous shots to deal with during the match.

HANKOW'S FINE GOAL KEEPING

Shanghai played a vastly different game from that which they put up against Hongkong and, making ample allowance for the difference in the strength of their opponents, the conclusion must be that they were an improved team. Madar and Collaco on the right wing worked admirably together and with the rest of the line, and Collaco got a pretty goal. Coulcher and Goldman were much too clever for the opposing halves, and deadly in front of goal while Wilson had Lasham and Malone beaten most of the time. The most interesting feature of the game was the fine display of goalkeeping given by Crossland. The first indication of his skill and judgment came early on when he saved a terrific drive from Wilson, and thereafter he repeatedly got his side out of difficulties, reaching a number of shots stamped with the scoring trade mark. He was in the unhappy position of having to pick the ball out of the net on 10 occasions, but this was no reflexion at all on his game, for half a dozen of the shots which scored were sent in at great pace and short range and the rest were all fast, well placed shots which would have beaten the best of goalkeepers. Malone and Mackey put up a very creditable defence, but the real weakness—next to the forwards' inability to shoot—was in the middle line. The halves were outplayed, and very rarely held the Shanghai quintette once they got fairly going.

The first goal came after five minutes' play, Madar neatly crossing to the centre where Coulcher was ready for a characteristic drive. Such chances as came the way of the Hankow front line were not taken, Linford and Falconer both sending wide. Shanghai were repeatedly by dangerous and only good work by Crossland kept the score down. On one occasion he made three remarkable clearances in almost as many seconds. Things looked hopeful for Hankow when the forwards got away again and Nash was given a chance, but this also went west. Linford almost did the trick, however, dropping a shot from the wing right into the goal mouth, but Remedios managed to tip the ball over the heads of Aspden and Falconer who were in attendance. Shanghai's second goal came after 35 minutes' play, Wilson sending in a great drive which Crossland stopped but could not get away—the mud was against a quick movement—and Goldman had only to touch the ball into the net. Collaco got the third point, with a low, cross drive from 15 yards out. Crossland just failed to reach it, but might have done so had he not been unsighted by one of the backs. Shanghai led at half time by three goals to nil.

VISITOR'S PLUCKY EFFORTS

Despite the fact that the visitors made several plucky attempts to score, and at one time did quite a long spell of attacking, they were outplayed in the second half and were seven more goals down. The first came in less than a minute from the kick off, Wilson and Coulcher going down on the left, Malone was the only Hankow player to touch the ball—and Coulcher driving the ball into the net a few yards out. Pretty forward work resulted in two more goals within five minutes, Coulcher and Goldman scoring, again close range shots. Wilson was responsible for the seventh, although Goldman actually touched the ball into the net, and the latter also got the eighth, after Crossland had made a great save. Coulcher scored the ninth, and then came the visitors' turn of attacking in which the sad incident of the missed open goal occurred. Crossland had a lot more work to do and did it well, but had no chance with a shot from Goldman who went right through the defence and almost walked the ball into the net. Hankow have Crossland to thank for keeping the score down. He came out of the game covered with mud and glory.

INTERPORT RUGBY

Shanghai Wins from Tientsin

The interport Rugby football match between Shanghai and Tientsin was played on Thursday afternoon on the Cricket Club ground and resulted in a win for Shanghai. Tientsin showed distinctly better form at the start, when Shanghai played an unattractive game. Later Shanghai got together better and after a spell of continuous pressure won. The sides were:—

Shanghai.—G. D. Nicholl; G. F. H. Bichard, H. W. P. McMeekin (captain), C. S. Holdsworth and C. R. W. Thomson; G. E. Goolden and R. L. S. Webb; W. E. D. Smith, S. A. Grew, C. E. Fleury, C. T. Davis, J. G. B. Dewar, J. C. Stewart, J. R. Harder and J. H. Raikes.

Tientsin.—R. B. Gotch; H. C. Eustace, Capt. Fabre, Sold. Magnoud and Cpl. Roberts; I. S. Annand and I. H. Howell; F. W. G. North (captain), E. M. P. Williams, Lt. Steiger, Lt. Waymel, Capt. O. Cushman, O. Lattimore, Capt. Adams and G. Craigie Ross.

Referee.—F. R. Ormston.

Linesmen.—E. I. M. Barrett and F. J. W. Evans.

Tientsin played from the pavilion end of the field in the first half and early demonstrated superiority in individual work and combination. After some rather scrappy and open play the Shanghai three's got the ball, but wild passing, which continued to be a feature of the game, spoiled their chances. The game had not been in progress very long before Capt. Cushman received a nasty kick on the head, and he was hors de combat for the rest of the half.

TIENTSIN OPENS THE SCORING.

Capt. Fabre, who is understood to have just missed his international cap for France, now made an opening in midfield for Tientsin, and then the visitors drew blood. He passed across to the inside right, who at the psychological moment parted to his winger, Reberts, and the latter scored a try far out. Gotch took the kick, but failed to convert. Tientsin 3; Shanghai nil.

At this stage of the game the Tientsin forwards, although weakened by the absence of Cushman, were playing a fine bustling game and the Shanghai three's being too slow, never had a chance to show their capabilities. Shanghai would seem to start a likely run, but then it fizzled out. Goolden and Bichard occasionally did good individual work but the others could not coordinate. At length Bichard made progress by finding touch well down the field, and from the resulting line-out Goolden secured an opening. It was a case requiring instant judgment, for the play was very close, and here Thomson came in and scored close to the post. Holdsworth took the kick and converted. Shanghai 5: Tientsin 3.

VISITORS AGAIN LEADING.

It was a momentary triumph for Shanghai for Tientsin, although still a man short, were working hard and their outside play was surer than Shanghai's. They were assisted by the fact that the Shanghai men were tackling in poor fashion, and thus, soon after the score by Shanghai, they succeeded in improving their position. The left three-quarter wing got the ball, both men were unsuccessfully tackled, and Eustace, with a fine turn of speed, crossed the line and running, scored between the posts. It was an easy matter for Gotch to convert, and Tientsin again took the lead. Tientsin 8 points: Shanghai 5.

Loose and uninteresting play followed, and Shanghai was penalized for holding. Gotch took the free kick, and with a perfect effort added a penalty goal for Tientsin. Tientsin 11: Shanghai 5.

Shanghai now put on a spurt, and the three's broke away. The forwards backed them up, and it was rather unlucky that no score resulted. Half time was now signalled and the score stood:—

Tientsin 11 points (1 goal, 1 penalty goal, 1 try).

Shanghai—5 points (1 goal).

THE SECOND HALF.

Capt. Cushman was fortunately able to come on again in the second half, and played a good game. This half was very different from the first, for the Shanghai pack was now getting together and putting in much better work. Tackling, however, was still weak, and all the time there was a tendency to take the man too high. Shanghai inaugurated this period by initiating a three-quarter movement, but as in so many cases in the first half it was ruined by bad passing. The three's continued active, and aided by better work on the part of the pack brought the ball practically down to Tientsin's 25. Here when the ball came out of the scrum the Shanghai men showed themselves very slow, until Bichard, who had got the ball from the inside three, made a short swerving run, and though well tackled, scored. Holdsworth took the kick but failed to convert. Tientsin 11: Shanghai 8.

Shanghai continued their pressure, and as the pack was playing a more bustling game the opening for the outside men were greater. The three's however, were still passing wildly, and not until a free kick was given against Tientsin for offside was there any further scoring. It was in a favourable position, and the Shanghai captain elected to take it himself. He succeeded and equalized the score.

SHANGHAI WINS.

The concluding phase of the game was sensational. With Shanghai's forwards pressing play was carried down to the Tientsin 25, and after a series of scrums the ball came out to the Shanghai three-quarters. Bichard got it, but on the point of scoring was pushed into touch. On the throw in Harder caught the ball, and barging a couple of feet forward scored the final and decisive try. McMeekin failed to convert, and the game concluded:—

Shanghai:—14 points (1 goal, 1 penalty goal, 2 tries).

Tientsin:—11 points (1 goal, 1 penalty goal, 1 try).

Gotch, well-known in Shanghai as a back, was perhaps the best man on the field. Fabre and Magnoud were also good for Tientsin. The Shanghai pack was the better of the two, with Fleury outstanding, while Bichard must be given every credit for his work.

THE PAPER HUNT CLUB

Another Win for Mr. Benbow Rowe: A Protest Lodged

Saturday's hunt was laid by Mr. N. L. Sparke, the winner of the Hunt Handicap and one of the dead-heated winners of the previous hunt. The weather condition were excellent, as the rain of the previous week had effectively laid the dust which has proved such a nuisance this winter, whilst the ground was not rendered too heavy. The meet was at 3.30 p.m. at the Misery Flats, on the Minghong Road, halfway to London Town.

The field was unusually large, approximately 130 riders, and they sang to themselves low though sweet songs as they waited for the order of the Master to go. This was forthcoming without delay, and the riders galloped off towards the west, presently to swing away to the left, on the familiar run to London Town.

The finish of the hunt was expected to be at Benbow's Dry Cut, but it carried on and over a platform to the right, so that others thought it would be at London Town, and accordingly ran off paper in that direction. The finish really was on the Springfield Line, where so many hunts have finished in the past, although, strangely enough, very few have finished there in the last two seasons. Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe, on The Chimley, came in first, thus winning both light and heavy weight prizes, the card reading as follows (though the placings are subject to the decision on a protest):—

1. Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe on The Chimley.
2. Mr. H. Arthur on Hairpin.
3. Mr. R. Moon on Happy New Year.
4. Mr. A. David on Tommy.
5. Mr. J. G. Lyon on Wee Jimmy.
6. Mr. A. S. Withers on Night Raider.

A Ladies' Hunt

The ladies had a most successful run on Sunday for the first hunt since the formation of the Ladies' Paper Hunt Club, the one improvement one could have wished for being in the size of the field, for there were only 13 starters, as a consequence of which Mrs. Hickling, the Master, announced before the start that there would be only four placings. The men found it really fine going on Saturday in spite of the rain and so the ladies, with a day and a half of drying weather to their advantage, had even better ground. The start was at the second bridge on the Minghong Road, from where Mr. Graysigge, Master of the Paperhunt Club, led the ladies on a fairly long trail past Burnham Wood, then circling round to a finish near the Temple of Joy. There were one or two spills, but all the riders came home and made a glorious finish to the run, there not being more than four lengths over the first five.

The result was really remarkable, for Mr. N. L. Sparke won a hunt in a dead heat a fortnight ago, this being the first time there has been such a decision for very many years, and yesterday Mrs. Sparke dead-heated with Miss Harris, so that they will have the joint honour of wearing the first pink rosetttes which will distinguish hunt winners. The card read:—

*1. Mrs. Sparke, on Dry Goods.
*1. Miss Harris, on Martinus.
3. Miss Ritchie, on Para.
4. Miss Trindle, on Paper Money.
*Dead heat.

Tuesday's Hunt Won by Mr. R. Moon on Wee Mac

The clerk of the weather has not been too kind to the hunting confraternity, for in place of the three hunts arranged for the New Year holidays, only one has taken place so far, that on Tuesday afternoon.

The hunt was laid by Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe, winner of the previous event on Saturday last, and the meet was set for the World's End jump, at London Town, which was also to be the finishing jump. Some 40 riders put in an appearance at the hour appointed, 3.30 p.m. — not a large field now-a-days, but they made up in enthusiasm for what they lacked in numbers. In the absence of the Master, the hunt was dispatched by Mr. H. W. Lester, senior Steward present, and passing over the Camel Creek, and a dry cut, at which several riders came to grief, the hunt skirted Graygrigge's Delight, and crossed the railway line to Baffle Creek.

There was a nice line of jumps on this line, including a fair sized water jump where there were several refusals. Then came a run round by the Pyramid Grave to the Boat Jump, then the Concrete Bridge, and rounding a lagoon, hunters encountered several water jumps in quick succession, till after reaching the village of Changjao, the trail turned towards the west and, passing the Moat Farm, reached Wukacha. From Wukacha there was a rapid run home, viâ Burnham Wood and the Minghong Road, to Pheasant Creek, and then round the Blue Lagoon, and over the Zigzag Jump to the World's End jump, where the flags were erected.

Mr. R. Moon on Wee Mac came in first, followed by Dr. C. N. Davis on Sherwood, and Mr. H. W. Lester on Kilmarock, the last named winning the heavyweight prize. The card reads as follows:—

1. Mr. R. Moon on Wee Mac.
2. Dr. C. N. Davis on Sherwood.
3. Mr. H. W. Lester on Kilmarnock. (heavyweight winner).

GOLF

The China New Year Cup

Golf was just possible on the Race Course on Thursday, when the China New Year Cup was played for. The rain of the previous days had resulted in the links being extremely sloppy, and there was a great deal of casual water about. The greens were also as wet as the other parts, and becoming hacked up by many footprints, competitors early displayed a fondness for the mashie when it came to putting. To make matters more difficult a strong drying wind was blowing and in the afternoon the greens became extraordinarily keen. Altogether golf was difficult.

The competition resulted in an easy win for J. B. Ferrier, whose judgment of the conditions was generally above reproach. He was 159 for the 36 holes, and was 15 strokes better than anybody else. His score was made up as follows:—

3 5 4 4 4 5 5 5 6—41	1st Round
4 4 4 4 5 5 6 4 5—40	2nd Round
3 4 4 4 5 4 4 4 6—38	3rd Round
4 4 5 4 5 4 5 4 5—40	4th Round

In view of the conditions and the great difficulty experienced in approaching and putting this must be considered a very fine performance. The card is as follows:—

J. B. Ferrier	159
H. B. Lane	175
C. Richards	177
W. Huggett	180

INTERPORT ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL

Hongkong v. Shanghai, 3 all: A Fine Game: Shanghai Lucky to Draw: Last Minute Goal

This match, the first of the Interport series, was played on the Police ground on Tuesday afternoon. The rain that had fallen during the whole of the previous night and on Tuesday morning had considerably softened the turf which, although in no place under water, was everywhere slippery and treacherous.

The teams were as follows:—

HONGKONG. Weness; Wynne and Bishop; McKelvie, Stewart and Lelliott; Charlesworth, Eaton, Johnston, Nash and Begg.

SHANGHAI. Remedios; Turner and Quayle; Phillips, Crawford and Falconer; Witschi, J. Johannson, Goldman, Coulcher and Wilson.

Quayle won the toss and elected to defend the south goal, at the same time taking advantage of a moderate southeasterly wind that was blowing. The opening exchanges were on the ragged side, with Hongkong doing most of the pressing. Shanghai's left wing got going but Wilson was given off-side from Coulcher's pass, and from the free-kick Eaton took possession. After beating Crawford he passed over to Begg, who nullified a nice run by kicking behind from about eight yards' range. The ground was troubling both sides, but Hongkong were keeping their feet far better than were Shanghai. Five minutes from the start, after some midfield play, Stewart passed to Charlesworth, who scored with a great shot that Remedios managed to reach but could not stop. From the centre-kick the Shanghai forwards got going, and forced two corners in quick succession, neither coming to anything. After Shanghai had conceded and Turner had cleared a corner, McKelvie shot from at least 45 yards' range. The shot probably was the best of the whole match; the ball travelled at terrific speed and skimmed the bar, Remedios just touching it as it whizzed over his head. The corner-kick proved abortive. Witschi received from Phillips and after a run along the wing, put across a low centre which Coulcher met with a first-timer. Weness dived and made [illegible] that a goal was certain.

HONGKONG TWO UP.

After 13 minutes, there was a [illegible] Wynne, who had to leave the field for a short time. From another centre from Witschi, Coulcher appeared to be right through when Weness rushed out and took the ball from [illegible] It was a fine clearance. By this time, Hongkong had the measure of their opponents, and were adapting themselves much better to the slippery ground, the Shanghai players obviously being disconcerted by the (for them) unusual conditions. The Hongkong forwards had the Shanghai defence continually guessing, and failed only when in the immediate vicinity of goal. Coulcher, from Crawford's pass, nearly got through again, but once more Weness took the ball right off his toe. After Falconer had conceded a corner out of pure necessity, as a result of the joint attentions of Nash and Begg, the Shanghai forwards had a short spell of attacking. Witschi shot behind when well-placed, and Coulcher, after a fine individual run following a pass from Crawford, struck the bottom of the post with a rasping shot. Following some scrappy midfield play, McKelvie passed to [illegible] who beat two of the opposition and shot from short range. Remedios partially [illegible] of goal, Phillips, in attempting to [illegible] the clearance, fell. Eaton, true opportunist that he is, promptly shot the ball into an open goal, putting Hongkong two up after 25 minutes.

Hongkong continued to harry the Shanghai defence, one particularly promising movement being spoiled through hands. Stewart who, like his vis-à-vis, Crawford, was playing a great game passed to Begg, who appeared certain to increase the lead when Turner rushed up and cleared. Quayle conceded a corner off Eaton and a few moments later had of necessity to head over from a dangerous short-range shot from the same opponent. Remedios, who from the commencement had appeared nervous and inclined to fumble, did well to turn a shot from Lelliott for a corner, and Quayle, a moment later, could only safely deal with the attentions of Nash by conceding another corner. Begg got the ball full in the stomach in the encounter with Quayle, and had to leave the field for a time.

At this period of the game the Hongkong forwards and halves were irrepressible and kept Quayle and Turner continually on the defensive. Remedios, in stopping a low shot from Johnston, mishandled, and was fortunate that the result was no more serious than an unproductive corner. Coulcher, in making one of his bustling efforts, was brought down just outside the penalty area. Turner took the kick, which was nicely cleared by Bishop. From a pass from Johnston, who secured from Falconer, Coulcher put over when about five yards from goal and when inability to score appeared impossible. Again, Coulcher was nearly through when Wynne cleared with a hefty tackle and a heftier kick. Crawford, apparently disappointed at the non-success of his forwards, tried one of his well-known long shots, which sailed harmlessly over.

Shanghai's spell of attacking was short-lived and the Hongkong forwards again came along. A high shot from Charlesworth was dealt with by Remedios only with difficulty, Turner having to complete the clearance. A nice individual effort by Coulcher was negatived by Wilson being off-side, and a moment later Coulcher hit the post following a free kick for a foul against himself. There was little else of interest before the interval, which arrived with Hongkong holding a well-deserved lead of two goals to none.

SHANGHAI EQUALIZES.

On the resumption, Shanghai seemed to be a little more at home on the mud, and for the first time in the match Goldman gave us a sample of his true form. After an incursion by the Hongkong forwards, Coulcher was tripped when making for goal. The free-kick came to nothing. Crawford, who somehow found himself on the right, centred accurately to Goldman, who headed over from a rod's length. Begg made a good run and Turner cleared, but a moment later Johnston, obtaining possession right in front of goal, shot hard. Remedios made a splendid clearance. Hongkong came on again, and Phillips cleared right on the line when an addition to the score seemed certain. At this period of the game Hongkong were having most of the play. Then the much-expected revival of the Shanghai attack took place, and from then till the close the former inequity was reversed, Shanghai generally doing most of the pressing. Coulcher and Goldman now [illegible] Johannson came much more into the picture. He put in one great left-foot drive that only a high [illegible] could have cleared. Weness cleared well. Then came one of the best shots of the match, from the foot of Goldman, who hardly hesitated on receiving a nice pass from Wilson, and sent the leather at terrific speed just outside the bottom of the post. [illegible] went right across the goal-mouth and behind for a goal-kick. Shortly after this, Shanghai's [illegible] Quayle, in [illegible] the attentions of Johnston, passed the ball to Falconer. That player, after a short manœuvre, sent on to Wilson who transferred to Coulcher. Coulcher beat Wynne and put in a hard, low oblique shot from about 15 yards that had Weness hopelessly beaten. This was 21 minutes from the resumption.

Hongkong then took another turn at attack, Eaton being particularly prominent. On one occasion he had passed Quayle and 10 yards from goal had Remedios guessing when Turner rushed up and made a fine clearance. Then came Shanghai's second goal. Johannson received from Crawford and finding Bishop in too close attendance, passed to Goldman. Goldman could have shot himself, but seeing that Coulcher was better placed and unmarked, he passed, Coulcher scoring with a hard shot from 15 yards. Shanghai continued to press, but Wynne and Bishop were playing a great game and breaking up the most promising efforts. Hongkong had a turn at attack, and Quayle made a couple of grand clearances. A run by the Shanghai right wing terminated in a low shot from Witschi which Weness cleared well. At this period of the game there were offside decisions against both teams.

AN EXCITING FINISH.

Hongkong's third goal came from a scrimmage following a corner, the ball going to Nash, who was lying unmarked. He shot hard and low and Remedios had no chance. Johannson was limping and Witschi came to the inside berth, while Quayle, no doubt in search of goals, joined the forwards, Falconer going to left back. A free-kick against the Hongkong goalie for over-carrying was unproductive, and the game appeared to be over, with Hongkong justly the winners, when the unexpected happened. Forty-five seconds from the end Quayle passed to Goldman, who sent the ball on its way in the direction of Witschi. That player, on the run, sent in a shot that Weness was able to touch but not divert, and the game ended.

Hongkong, 3. Shanghai, 3.

HONGKONG'S FINE PLAY.

On the general run of the play, Hongkong deserved to win. They were the better team—better balanced, quicker on the ball, showed infinitely better combination, passed more accurately, kicked more surely and cleanly, kept their positions better, and adapted themselves to the slippery surface as though they had never played on anything but mud. Their goalie, for what little he had to do, was per excellence, and so were their backs, who made not one real miskick throughout the game. Their halves were a rare trio of despoilers who never tired and who never were out of position. They plied their forwards judiciously and covered their backs faithfully, and in every respect constituted an excellent department of an excellent aggregation. All of the Hongkong forwards played a great game. They played the individual game only when nothing else was possible; they seemed to know just where the ball was coming and gave an exhibition of mastery over sticky leather that would be difficult to improve upon. The whole Hongkong team, without exception, worked with so much cohesion and understanding that it is almost unfair to single out any individuals as being specially worthy of mention. If any names should be mentioned, however, they are Weness, Wynne, Stewart, Eaton and Begg.

SHANGHAI NOT UP TO FORM.

Few members of the Shanghai team played football quite up to interport standard, and not many of them played up to the best class of First League football in Shanghai. It is no injustice to say that in the first half the Shanghai players were mostly where the ball was not. At least three-quarters of the play was in the Shanghai half, and during that doleful first half only two players of the 11 really stood out—Crawford and Coulcher. In this half, Quayle was not by any means the Quayle we know, and Turner, though he did an immense amount of hard and useful work, marred many good efforts by wild kicking. Both improved considerably in the latter half, and we had an appreciable period of Quayle at his best. Each of the Shanghai halves was in a class by himself excellent, good and poor. The first adjective describes Crawford. He worked like two men from beginning to end, and in the first half especially his energy, skill and doggedness were of incalculable value.

Phillips was good without ever being brilliant. Whether he was unable to accustom himself to the greasy surface or whether he was a little off colour is not clear, but what is certain is that he has played better on every previous occasion he has been out this season. Of course, in Nash and Begg he had a rare couple of opponents, who would have worried any half-back in Far Eastern football, however good. Falconer was disappointing. On his day, he is one of the very best local half-backs; but Tuesday was certainly not his day.

Taking the game from start to finish, the Shanghai forwards played an unbalanced, disjointed game, without cohesion or effective combination—that is, compared with the standard set by Hongkong. In the first half, Coulcher was the only one of the five who lived up to his reputation, and he continued throughout the game to be the best and most dangerous member of the Shanghai attack. Witschi was good in parts. He made occasional brilliant dashes, and equally frequently was ineffective. There were one or two occasions when his work with and understanding of Johannson were good to see, but on the whole he did not play like an Interport outside right. Johannson rarely got going as we know he can. He had many encounter with Bishop, and it must be confessed that the Hongkong back, oftener than not, came out to advantage. In the second half, when the Shanghai inside forwards had gone through some abstract form of re-vitalization, Johannson shone frequently; but on the whole he, too, was not up to form. On the 90 minutes' play, Goldman was distinctly below par. In the first half he was, mostly, sluggish and inert, and it was only from about 10 minutes after the resumption till the end of the game that he really reproduced his S.F.C. form. Wilson has played many better games, and he, too, seemed in the first half to be suffering from that inability to do the right thing that characterized the play of some of his team-mates. It must be stated, in justice to Wilson, that before the whistle went for the interval, he had sadly been neglected, and on about half of the few occasions he did get going his efforts were brought to a close by a whistle for offside. He was more in the picture after the interval, but still did not play up to his normal form.

Mr. W. C. G. Clifford, as referee, controlled a fast and difficult game most efficiently. He kept well up with the ball, was very keen on offside movements, and while never intruding on hard, fair tackling, allowed no breach of the rules to go unpenalized. Messrs. Bissett and Squibb officiated as linesmen.

SHANGHAI'S LUCK

By Onlooker.

Truly Shanghai's lucky star was in the ascendant on Tuesday last against Hongkong. If ever a team deserved to lose on the day's play, it was Shanghai. Not that Shanghai played such bad football, but, under the prevailing conditions, Hongkong played the better. They adapted themselves to the heavy ground far quicker than the Shanghai team and were undoubtedly on top during the greater part of the game. The Hongkong team, as a team, was uniformly good and it is extremely difficult to single out individuals for special mention. Both backs were sound, the halves were infinitely superior to the Shanghai trio, and the forwards were well balanced and showed excellent combination. In fact, as a team, they opened the eyes of the Shanghai supporters, who, from past results, were led to expect a comfortable victory for the home side.

There can be little doubt that the exhibition of football given was quite the best that has been seen in Shanghai. In spite of the heavy going the game was extremely fast, nor was there anything of the drawing-room variety about it.

This leads us to another point. It is doubtful if there has ever, locally, been seen a finer example of refereeing than that given by Mr. Clifford in this match. Not only did he appear to have the players well in hand, but he was quick, accurate and impartial, in fact everything that a referee should be. If he made a mistake, it was difficult to detect. Nine out of 10 spectators are (in their own opinion) better referees than the unfortunate gentleman officiating! They frequently voice the fact when lighting a perfectly good cigar and seated on a perfectly hard uncomfortable seat! Mr. Clifford's work was most excellent and, in our opinion, quite a feature of a very memorable match.

SHANGHAI UNEQUAL.

The Shanghai team was unequal. The halves were distinctly weak. Phillips alone did himself justice and he was up against a warm proposition in Begg, the visitors' outside left. The backs were, on the whole, sound. Quayle was very uncertain in the first half but more than made amends in the second. Turner was uniformly safe and reliable. Remedios, in goal, was apparently nervous and caused some anxious moments, but a greasy ball may account for a number of errors in all departments. The Shanghai forwards were disappointing. So much was expected of Goldman and Coulcher that they were obviously well marked. Wilson was, for the most part offside, and did not give himself (nor was he given) a chance. Witschi justified his existence by shooting a splendid goal at the finish and thus saving Shanghai's bacon. Johanssen was more or less of a failure both before and after he was crocked. Goldman played somewhat below his form; nevertheless, two of Shanghai's goals were the direct result of his efforts. Coulcher scored two goals and is undoubtedly Shanghai's most potential forward. Being so well marked Goldman would have been better advised to swing the ball more frequently to his wings. The same remark applies to Coulcher. The latter is somewhat inclined to overdo the individualist business but, in the manner of R. E. Foster, he has great control of the ball and is always making tracks for goal.

CLEVER CAPTAINCY.

With one forward crocked (Johanssen), and a goal down, it was a clever piece of captaincy which prompted Quayle to go up into the forward line when only some 10 minutes remained for play. If during his absence from the position of full back, Shanghai had lost 4 to 2, Quayle would probably have been blamed, but where is the difference between being beaten 3 to 2, and 4 to 2?

On the day's play, Hongkong deserved to win by a comfortable margin. They took the best advantage of all opportunities and what luck there was went their way. Shanghai's three goals were such excellent efforts that one is inclined to believe that the team was a trifle below form and therefore a draw may be considered a satisfactory result (at any rate from the Shanghai point of view!).

SHANGHAI v. HANKOW

The Visitors Meet with a 10-Goal Disaster

There was no change for the better in conditions under which the second of the Interport games was played on Wednesday afternoon, a heavy ground and drizzling rain making things uncomfortable for players and spectators—there was an excellent attendance, some 1,500. Shanghai made three changes from the team which met Hongkong, Knight going to left half in place of Falconer, and Collaco and Madar taking the right wing in place of Johannsson and Witschi. The teams lined up as follows:

Hankow: Crossland; Malone and Mackay; Lasham, Hunter and Sundays; Linford, Nash, Aspden, Falconer, and Tweedie.

Shanghai: Remedios; Turner and Quayle; Phillips, Crawford and Knight; Madar, Collaco, Goldman, Coulcher and Wilson.

The first few minutes of play made it obvious that the visitors were in for an unequal struggle. They had neither the finesse nor the speed of the Shanghai side, and though the forwards made some well conceived runs on the

COMMERCE AND FINANCE

CHINA NEW YEAR

A Satisfactory Settlement

Chinese merchants appear to be taking advantage of the incidence of the week-end to prolong their New Year holiday beyond the ordinary. Except those interested in exports, none have so far shown any signs of life, and no business will be attempted until next week.

In the circumstances it is too early yet to try to state what has been the general effect of the China New Year settlement, although from all accounts it ought to have passed off satisfactorily. Although dealers in piece goods, metals and hardware are regarded from the foreign point of view as having done fairly well, one of them is credited with the remark that the banks made most of the money. Chinese merchants, however, are at times prone to be modest on the score of profits.

The position at the moment differs in no way from the anticipations current prior to the settlement, and it is presumed that the situation is as reported previously.

THE CURRENCY BUREAU

History of an Institution Now Abolished

The Chinese Economic Bulletin contains the following:—

The Currency Bureau, abolished by a Presidential Mandate recently, was one of the bureaux directly under the control of the Cabinet Office, and not, as might be thought, under the Ministry of Finance. The Bureau was established in 1909, in the Manchu Dynasty, under the name of the Currency Investigation Bureau. Its special function at that time was to take up questions connected with establishing a monetary standard and a uniform currency system.

At that time the question of the standard was not one of gold or silver, but concerned the weight of the standard coin, whether it should be one Kungping tael or .72 of a tael, the latter being the weight of the silver dollar then in use. Eleven of the 22 provinces favoured one tael as the unit, nine provinces favoured the .72 tael, and the rest advocated using both. The Currency Investigation Bureau decided to coin both kinds, fixing the ratio between them at to 1, adjusting the weight to the ratio by the difference in fineness of the silver. The one-tael coins, however, were never minted.

The name of the Bureau was changed in 1910. Since then it has been known as the Currency Bureau. In 1918, under the Republic, a set of regulations was adopted, putting the Bureau in charge of all matters concerning money, note issue, and other currency questions. All the Government mints, the Government Bureau of Printing and Engraving, the Government Paper Mill at Shenkiaki, Hupeh, and all Government Supervisors of Banks were to be under the direction of the Bureau.

When private banks wished to issue notes, they had first to secure the consent of the Bureau. The period of its existence was limited to 10 years. To secure cooperation between the Bureau and the Ministry of Finance the Minister of Finance was made Director-General of the Bureau, while a director in active charge was appointed by the President. The present Minister of Finance considered the Bureau superfluous and it was abolished as part of the retrenchment programme which is now being carried out.

CHINA TEA

Increasing Popularity at Home

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Dec. 20.

China tea is clearly growing in popularity. Up to the end of October from the start of the season in June the exports of China tea have exceeded those of the previous year by 19 million lb. and of this excess 8½ million lb. have come to London. This excess is interesting in view of the decline in the export of Indian tea in the same period—Ceylon tea is on the other hand holding its own in point of exports. Yet both India and Ceylon planters are making very large profits as the following figures will show:—

Season 1921-22	Price per lb.	s1.2.91d.
Season 1922-3	Price per lb.	s1.5.81d.
Season 1923-4	Price per lb.	s1.7.43d.

It is true that during the war ten estates had a bad time but this has long passed away. China tea does not much fluctuate in price and its sale is of course hampered by the 2d. Preference against it. Hence there is a good deal of interest in the China market to see whether in these anti-Preference days the 2d. will be left on or swept away, when the tea duty is reduced.

CAUESS FOR DISSATISFACTION.

Probably some campaign will be set on foot without delay to stimulate the consumption of China tea in this country. In the meantime, it would be well for China tea exporters, and also China tea growers, to realize that there is a good deal of dissatisfaction in this country with the state in which tea reaches the British market. In the first place it is not too carefully picked, or cleaned, and there is a good deal of improvement possible in grading and standardization. These are not my personal sentiments but they are the sentiments of the British tea importers, and the sooner an improvement is introduced the better. The import of green China tea for this country is of course dead as a result of the recent arsenic scare, and it is never likely to be revived. Exports are still made of this commodity to Morocco, but the trade does not pay because the French buyers, knowing that there is no market here for this green tea, offer what prices they like.

Clearly the tea competition in this country is getting more and more acute; it is true that most of the Japan Formosan tea goes to America, but evidently they still anticipate some business in this country, since the Japanese Government has just issued some most perfectly turned out pamphlets showing how the tea is prepared and the finished way in which it is handled. One must admire the thoroughness with which they attend to these commercial matters, although frankly I do not think that Formosan tea will ever secure much of a public in this country.

HONGKONG STEAMBOATS

Preparing for Collapse of Present Abnormal Prices

Hongkong, Feb. 2.

At a meeting of the Hongkong, Canton & Macao Steamboat Company, Ld:, the Chairman, referring to the increase of $146,198 in the investment fluctuation account, sounded a note of warning. He stated:—

"This augmentation is due to an exceptional rise during the past year in the values of local stocks and your board, being of opinion that the present abnormal prices may not be maintained in the near future, deem it prudent to leave this book profit in fund for future contingencies."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE PORT OF TSINGTAO

Trade Figures

The Statistical Department of the Harbour and Wharf Administration Bureau, Tsingtao, has issued its report for the second 10 days of December last. During this period 37 steamers (64,783 tons) entered the harbour while 35 steamers (58,999 tons) cleared. In comparison with the corresponding period a year ago this shows a decrease of four steamers entering and an increase of three in departures. According to nationality the ships entering are classified as follows:—Three Chinese (2,601 tons); 24 Japanese (32,854 tons); four British (10,876 tons); one American (3,552 tons); five of other nationalities (14,900 tons). In clearances the numbers were:—Three Chinese (2,601 tons); 22 Japanese (30,039 tons); five British (12,028 tons); one American (3,552 tons); four of other nationalities (10,779 tons). Of the steamers entering 13 were from Shanghai, eight from Dairen, and 11 from Japan ports, while of those clearing 10 were for Shanghai, 10 for Japan, and seven for Dairen.

Exports during the period under review amounted to 24,551 tons, a decrease compared with the 1922 period of 2,607 tons. On the other hand imports show a substantial increase, being 16,741 tons against 11,231 tons in 1922. In exports the most important decreases were in salt, coal and iron ore, while the increases registered in imports were principally in marine products and kerosene oil.

THE PANAMA CANAL

Steadily Increasing Traffic

The report of the Panama Canal for 1923 shows to what an increasing extent advantage is being taken of this new means of communication. The figures for tonnage are rapidly approaching those of the Suez Canal, which during the year 1922 passed shipping representing 21,360,000 tons, compared with 18,605,786 tons for the Panama Canal for the year 1922-23. The tonnage thus reported for the latter compares with 11,417,459 tons in the previous year, the growth having been largely accounted for by the expansion of the Californian oilfields. The number of vessels making the passage of the Canal in the 12 months was, 3,967, including 121 motor ships.

Vessels are worked through the Canal on a regular schedule. The greatest number of vessels passed through Gatun locks in a day was 24 commercial sea-going vessels put through in 23 lockages. This was accomplished on May 25, 1923. Actually 38 vessels have been passed through on one occasion, but these included submarines and destroyers in groups. The average number of lockages per diem has worked out at Gatun at 11·7. At these locks there were only nine delays of more than 10 minutes' duration, due to faulty operation or failure of equipment, the total time aggregating 5 hours and 4 minutes. At the other locks delays were of a trifling character.

With regard to water supply, this proved ample during the year for all lockages, and for operating the hydro-electric plant at Gatun continuously, the steam plant at Miraflores being held in reserve. Surveys continued in the Charges Valley with a view to locating a site for a dam above Alhajuela to provide the additional storage which will become necessary.

A number of small slides occurred during the year, and the total amount removed from the East and West Culebra Slides in the year was 1,290,250 cubic yards. At East Culebra, in December, 1922, about 595,000 cubic yards of material moved into the basin excavated at the side of the canal, and about 150,000 cubic yards moved into the canal itself. The slides caused no interruption to traffic except for one day to a vessel drawing 34 ft. of water.—"Engineering."

Should this proposal be approved, the Board will further propose that 375,000 shares be issued at par at the ratio of share for share, bringing the issued capital up to $7,500,000, consisting of 750,000 shares of the nominal value of $10 each, and leaving a balance of 250,000 shares unissued.

Japanese Competition in East Africa

London, Jan. 25.

Reporting on the trade of East Africa, the British Trade Commissioner warns United Kingdom manufacturers that, in addition to competition from the Continent and from India, Japanese manufacturers have now obtained at least a temporary domination of the market for unbleached piece goods and are now extending their activities to Manchester lines.—Reuter.

Dutch Oil Tax

The Hague, Jan. 25.

The Lower House to-day adopted by 52 votes to 13 the bill retaining the tax on agricultural produce in the Dutch East Indies and introducing a tax on oil.

The Minister of the Colonies in the course of the debate said that the oil tax would not be extended beyond 1924, even if revision of the fiscal legislation of the Indies were not finished before January, 1925. The House carried without a division the bill repealing the export duty on oil.—Reuter.

CHINA NEW YEAR RACE MEETING

Wretched Conditions at Kiangwan Course: Run of Success for Mr. Morriss

The China New Year race meeting of the International Recreation Club opened on Wednesday under most unpleasant conditions. The course resembled a paddy-field, being inches deep in sticky mud, with great pools of water lying about in many places. In addition, the rain fell practically throughout the day, making things most uncomfortable for the big gathering of racing enthusiasts, despite the fact that the splendid public stand offers so much protection. Members attended in fairly large numbers and had a chance of seeing what a wonderful club-house and stand is being erected for their benefit. At the moment only the skeleton of the former is in position, but it was sufficient to show that a truly palatial club is being built. The front of the stand has been completed, save for the roof and side shields, and was in use. Even as it is there is no stand in China so well built and it will be a beautiful work when finished. Its great sweep of terraces should more than suffice to accommodate every member of the club and in front there is a wide paddock for promenading. The I.R.C. invariably makes some little improvement at every meeting and this time it introduced printed slip-on numbers for the riding weights on the name-boards, which is a distinct advantage, for often before, especially in wet weather, the figures were illegible.

It was a great pity that the conditions were so bad, for probably never before in China have there been so many ponies of such high class as were entered for the meeting. As expected, Mr. Morriss did extremely well and it is doubtful whether any pony can approach his selection for the Champions, but there were others also who ran in particularly good style. The wonderful Ataman simply left the field standing in the opening race, in which the Field stable had two runners, and, incidentally, Covellite, the one who was expected to stop him, finished nowhere. Mr. Morriss' run began with the Griffin Plate, which he won in the easiest fashion with Swallowfield, who had not been expected to start. Then Abbeyfield cantered in for the Empire Stakes, with Patsfield second; Plainfield was second for the Grand Juvenile Plate behind the speedy Moon Star; Lissenfield won the Craven Stakes in the easiest fashion; Hartfield was third for the New Nursery Plate; and Letchfield was beaten only a bare length by its old stable companion, Danesfield (now Florida), for the Yangtsze Stakes. City of Peking justified its favouritism by winning the Club Cup without being overworked. The ponies ran very true to training form and the only real upset was when Empire Down won the New Nursery Plate, but Wm. Hu invariably brings at least one outsider in during the New Year meeting.

The results in detail follow:—

SWALLOWFIELD'S DERBY

The weather conditions were somewhat better on Thursday. In the forenoon the course was badly flooded, but at least it did not rain any more and the sun even shone for brief intervals. The course was drying all through the day, but at that it still was very heavy. The run of Field successes did not continue, for Mr. Morriss sent out very few of his ponies. The outstanding event was the Derby, for which Swallowfield naturally started a raging favourite and won very comfortably from an outsider in Witty Fellow, with City of Peking filling third place. Rayfield was the only other Field pony to win, annexing the Red Rose Stakes [illegible] Champions included Robbery, Covellite, Capella Eyes, Columbia and Leadership.

INTERNATIONAL RUGBY

Wales Defeated by Scotland by a Big Score

Edinburgh, Feb. 2.

Scotland beat Wales by 35 points to 10 in an international Rugby match played here to-day. The weather was dull and windy. There were 25,000 spectators.

In the first half the Welsh backs were slow and failed badly, especially when on the offensive. Scotland was mostly attacking and after six minutes Smith scored a try, which Drysdale, the full back, converted. Then Drysdale kicked a penalty goal. Before the interval Bryce, Bertram, Smith and Wallace added tries. Drysdale took all the kicks and converted one. The scores at half-time was Scotland 22, Wales 0.

Until 10 minutes from the finish Scotland outplayed and outpaced the Welshmen and tries for Scotland were scored by Waddell, Macpherson and Smith. S. Gillies failed to convert the first but Drysdale converted the last two. Wales then attacked desperately and Griffiths and Ivor Jones scored tries, Male, the Welsh full-back converting both, making the final score 35 points to 10 in favour of Scotland.—Reuter.

RUSSIANS SENT NORTH.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In December of last year the Ural-Siberian Trading Society, of which I am managing director, after every imaginable effort to get work for its members had the luck to find employment for a few hundred men on the timber concession of the C. E. R. near Harbin.

The Society had no money for the forwarding of its members, and I applied to the Committee, whose purpose was to assist Russian Orphans of the Great War, for help in the transportation of the requisite members of the Society from Shanghai to the place of employment.

The president of the Committee of Assistance to the Russian Orphans of Great War, Mr. Grosbois, and all the Committee have exerted themselves most kindly and successfully in the matter. We began by transporting 126 men from Shanghai to the place of employment. The forwarding of the men was done by groups of 10, and the majority of them are already at work and earning money.

At the timber Concession, where are engaged the members of the Society hitherto sent up, there is still work available for about 100 men. The Society has about as many of their members in Shanghai left behind, as there is not enough money for their transportation, but enormous help has been given to the Society, and by that assistance 126 men have work. Therefore, Sir, will you allow me through your columns, in the name of all members of the Society to thank the president of the Committee of the Assistance of Russian Orphans of the Great War, Mr. Grosbois, the secretary of the Mommittee, Mr. Shendrikoff, and all members of the Committee.

I would also express my gratitude to the Race Club for the help they gave in forwarding our men from Shanghai.

I am very thankful to the Director of the Shanghai-Nanking Railway for his deduction of 25 per cent. on the tickets from Shanghai to Mukden; and to Messrs. Thos. Cook & Son, who organized free of charge the manner of transportation of the men.

I am, etc.,

ITALY AND RUSSIA.

To the Editor of the

SIR,—Referring to the Italian Wireless message through Reuter on the Russo-Italian negotiations published in your issue of to-day, having compared the original of Mussolini's speech before the Italian Parliament with the version given by the above message, I find that when he refers to the concessions to be obtained from Russia he mentions "raw materials" and not "war materials" as erroneously stated in the English translation.

DR TEOFILO BRAGA.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Yesterday saw the announcement of the death of Dr. Teofilo Braga, an eminent philosopher and man of letters, and the first President of the Portuguese Republic.

The demise of one who was highly respected throughout the country not only for the great teachings that emanated from his many philosophical writings, but also for his personality, so full of humility, must have been bitterly felt by the entire population of Portugal and her colonies.

Dr. Teofilo Braga leaves behind him a luminous track, which if followed by our politicians of to-day, will undoubtedly lead them to a better understanding and to a solution of many vital problems affecting the present and future welfare of Portugal.

Men like Dr. Teofilo can hardly be replaced, and in mourning his loss I feel confident that the Portuguese nation is not losing sight of the fact that a great man, a very great man indeed, has passed away.

CHINA, THE LEAGUE AND AMERICA.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In your issue of January 29 a correspondent "S" writing about the solution of China's difficulties, suggests that the League of Nations "appoint a committee (including if possible a representative from the U.S.A.) to take over the task of protecting China from all outer and inner foes."

May I state that it would not be fair to include a representative from the U.S.A. as long as America withholds herself from joining the League of Nations. She deliberately keeps herself aloof from the troubles of Europe where she might help, though at some financial risk to herself—so why should she have any say in the reorganization of China's affairs? She could earn herself a place in such a committee as the above only when she is recognized as a useful member of the League of Nations.

THE EMPTY FLAGPOLE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR, The Council of the International Settlement of Shanghai is the owner of a very excellent mast on the Bund. It is one of the finest masts I have ever seen. It has a pretty gilded ship on the top, but no flag.

The Council of the International Settlement is also the sole owner of quite a handsome flag. It is somewhat faulty as to heraldry I am told, but that is a minor matter. It is really a good-looking piece of bunting.

Cannot something be done to bring these two kindred spirits together? They belong together. They have a right and demand to be joined together, and besides, would it not show the proper civic spirit to display the emblem of the International Settlement in some other place than over the police stations?

Mr. Chairman of the Council; what about getting together to put "Omnia juncta in uno" up the pole?

THE LIBERAL PARTY.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—If you will excuse me saying so, you always seem to me less luminous than usual when you write on English politics. What grounds, for instance, have you for your assertion on January 18 that the Liberals are a dying party? In the recent election they polled more votes and secured more seats than in 1922, which does not look as though they were exactly moribund. Of the votes cast for the three main parties (excluding those cast for the half-dozen independents) no party secured as many as 40 per cent. and the Liberals obtained over 30 per cent. On these figures alone there is no justification for your statement.

But you go on to remark that protection will eventually be brought into force by the Labour party. Accepting this forecast, may I ask from whose ranks you think that His Majesty's Opposition will then be drawn? Surely from those of the Liberal party whose watchword has been for decades, is now and will then still be "Free Trade."

I am, etc.,
X.O.X.

Up Country, Jan. 28.

 There are men of other parties who oppose Protection. But in any case, the party which merely opposes has little to offer to the country and that was the prevailing characteristic of the Liberals' programme at the late election. They may of course strike out a new line and acquire a new lease of life. But the signs of the times are against it. —Ed.

Above there is written in English "East India Company." The coin is dated 1804 and as I have no means of finding out if it is of any value I would appreciate it very much if some kind person would let me know if it is considered rare and would advise me of the approximate value of same.

AN EARLY ARMADILLO

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Perhaps you will consider the following incident worthy of record in your valuable columns. Shortly after noon yesterday I was enjoying my customary constitutional along Ningpo's picturesque Bund, and was passing the imposing portals of the Campo Club, when my eye was caught by a slight movement on one of the adjacent mud flats which are a peculiar feature of our river at low water. Imagine my amazement at beholding a fine adult armadillo (Saurus vestibularius sinicus), basking in the mellow rays of the midday sun. Surely it is most unusual for these nimble saurians to appear in the upper reaches of the Yung River so early in the season? In my small experience no single specimen of this species has ever been reported north of a lat. 26° 39′ earlier than the vernal equinox. Yet I do not think I can have been mistaken with regard to its identity, in so far as from a prolonged sojourn in the Rio delta I am sufficiently familiar with the appearance and habits of the closely-related South American variety of this interesting vertebrate.

I shall be interested to know if any of your readers can produce a parallel to this remarkable occurrence.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The report of the pure milk commission, your leading article thereto anent, and the letter of a correspondent in your to-day's issue form interesting reading and cause one to hope that our local health department will be no less active in insisting on pure milk than they were in compelling purveyors of such to supply pure icecream.

This subject calls to mind the following lines:—

Milk is a menace to man and to maiden,
To mothers, boys, babies alike, when germ-laden,
Who will protect us, if not the good fairies,
From poisons that lurk in tuberculous dairies?
Drawn from the cow through immaculate udders.
Freshest of milk is a matter for shudders
Where cans are unclean, for no act can be vainer
Than putting pure milk in an impure container;
'Tis brought in the morning, escaping inspection.
And proves to the household a source of infection.
Imparting diseases which oft become chronic.
Alas! for the milk that is new and pneumonic!
O germ-laden cans to which dairies allow use;
O vessels pernicious for holding the cow juice!
Let rhymers with verses and artists with pencils
Unite in denouncing damn dirty utensils.
And so say all of us.

GENIUS AND LONGEVITY.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In your issue of January 9 you have a note on the above subject, in which you quote a few instances in support from the records of poets and other men of letters. The following lines, author unknown to the writer, further support what you say. It is on "Old Age."

"It is too late! Ah! nothing is too late
Till the tired heart shall cease to palpitate.
Cato learned Greek at eighty: Sophocles
Wrote his grand Oedipus, and Simonides
Bore off the prize of verse from his compeers,
When each had numbered more than fourscore years.
And Theophrastus at fourscore and ten
Had but begun his "Characters of Men."
Chaucer, at Woodstock with the nightingales,
At sixty wrote "The Canterbury Tales."
Goethe at Weimar, toiling to the last
Completed "Faust" when eighty years were past.
What then? Shall we sit idly down and say:
"The night hath come; it is no longer day."
The night hath not yet come; we are not quite
Cut off from labour by the falling light;
Something remains for us to do or dare,
Even the oldest tree some fruit may bear,
For age is opportunity no less
Than youth itself, though in another dress;
And as the evening twilight fades away
The sky is filled with stars invisible by day."

COMPANY MEETING

THE CHINA GENERAL OMNIBUS CO.

Plant Purchased and an Engineer Engaged: Operations to Commence Shortly

The first annual general meeting of shareholders in the China General Omnibus Co., Ld., was held last Friday at the office of the general managers, Messrs. Arnhold & Co., 6 Kiukiang Road. The Chairman (Mr. H. E. Arnhold) presided, supported by Capt. R. E. Sassoon, Mr. H. Hanbury (directors), Mr. J. A. Moller (secretary) and other shareholders, a total holding of 7,060 shares being represented. The secretary read the notice convening the meeting.

The Chairman—Before moving the adoption of the report and balance sheet, I would like to make one or two comments.

It will be remembered that preliminary expenses were estimated at Tls. 20,000. The balance sheet shows that we have paid Tls. 4,458.34. There are still to be paid the expenses of preparing our technical plans, which will amount to about Tls. 8,000, and also the expenses of sending our technical adviser to England viâ America. It will be noted that nothing has yet been paid to the general managers under their agreement. They have agreed to forgo their charges for the period under review, and to begin charging us as from January 1, 1924.

SELECTION OF CHASSIS.

Mr. Sellick, our technical adviser, has now visited the United States and Great Britain, where he has been able to make a close study of the best types of omnibuses, and of the latest methods of operation. As a result of his studies, we have, on his advice, placed orders for 30 Tilling Stevens petrol electric chassis, shipment of which will begin within the next few weeks. The special feature of these chassis which [illegible] London and elsewhere, is the replacement of the gearbox for speed-changing by an electrical connexion between the engine and the wheels. The advantages derived from this system include smoother running, easier control, less wear of tyres and roadway, and decreased maintenance charges. We have also decided to order in England 24 single-deck bodies with spring seats and double entrances. The doors will be arranged so that they cover the steps when closed, so that riding on the step or entering and riding a 'bus in motion are entirely prevented. Six double-deck bodies will also be ordered for use during rush hours and for other special duties. Messrs. Tilling Stevens, the chassis manufacturers, have checked our figures of revenue and cost. They are so well convinced of the prospects of the services proposed that they have indicated their willingness to accept a substantial [illegible] shares. On Mr. Sellick's advice, we have [illegible] England. The [illegible] and [illegible] are in course of construction to [illegible] These [illegible] specially designed for [illegible] and is arranged to permit of extension as required.

WORK TO BEGIN SOON.

We have been fortunate in securing the services of a highly qualified and experienced managing engineer, Mr. Petrie. This gentleman comes to us with the highest [illegible] He was [illegible] both by Mr. Sellick and by the London [illegible] of our general managers, both of whom warmly recommended his engagement. He is expected to arrive in Shanghai with Mr. Sellick about the end of March. Material for the garage and 'buses will begin to reach here about the same time, so that Mr. Petrie's services will be available during the time of erection and assembly.

Mr. Sellick's visit to England on our behalf has proved well worth while. It has resulted in the selection of reliable and up-to-date equipment and has been the means of a valuable curtailment of the inevitable interval between the formation of the company and the operations of its fleet of omnibuses. At our next annual meeting I hope to give the results of our first few months of actual operation.

I should be glad to answer any questions that may be put to me. If there are no questions, I will move:—

That the annual report and balance sheet, as presented, be adopted.

No questions were asked and the resolution was seconded by Capt. R. E. Sassoon and carried unanimously, as also were the following:—

That Mr. Ellis Hayim be elected a director of the company.—Proposed by Mr. F. Norton Bell, seconded by Mr. S. G. Adams.

That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham and Matthews be re-elected auditors to the company.—Proposed by Mr. J. S. S. Cooper, seconded by Mr. W. D. Wells.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt and [illegible] Mr. Kermit Roosevelt, who were accorded such a wonderful reception in Japan, were to leave Peking last Sunday on their [illegible] Russia.

That the phrase "irresistible accident" might be used in commercial documents instead of "an Act of God" was suggested by a speaker at a recent meeting of the Chartered Institute of Shipbrokers. The phrase "Act of God" commonly occurs in commerce, and if there were any real demand for its replacement by another phrase, "irresistible accident" would seem to express the meaning of the present term fairly well. The term "irresistible accident" is in keeping with the explanation of the term "Act of God," which was given some months ago in the course of the series of articles on Trade Term Definitions in the Trade and Engineering Supplement of the "Times." It was pointed out in the discussion that the true test to apply to all cases where an Act of God was alleged was whether or not the damage caused by an Act of God could have [illegible] Mr. Singer suggests that "irresistible" [illegible] word. Another which would closely express the meaning [illegible]

SOUTHERN Rhodesia, which was inaugurated as the youngest self [illegible] of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which [illegible] for 27 years been administered by the British South Africa Company, possesses one of the finest climates in the world, with [illegible] of sunshine, healthy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most [illegible] of the opportunities, energy and technical knowledge are [illegible] to [illegible] business or professional [illegible] a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages [illegible] The [illegible] sport, climate and [illegible] features [illegible] with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly [illegible] is willing and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy [illegible] and [illegible] is plentiful and not expensive.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

CORRESPONDENCE

BRITISH TRADE FOR BRITISH BOATS.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—A considerable number of Canadian missionaries in West China have been desirous of booking to Canada via Europe between March and June next. According to the P. & O. report just mentioned in the papers, British passenger lines were running very light, and we understood that there would be no difficulty in getting accommodation on British boats. But though a number of us have been in correspondence with shipping companies and agencies since last summer, practically not one of us has yet got a booking, and one of our number has just received a letter saying that nothing could be secured in March. This party was hoping to secure passage by the Naldera, slated to leave Shanghai on March 17 or the City of Cairo. We have been offered passage by the Japanese line, 2nd class, repeatedly, and one of our number has been offered a booking by Messageries Maritimes. None of us were anxious to travel by any foreign line, and all have asked for passage on British boats first. Now that it is getting doubtful if we can get a comfortable booking by a British line, we are starting to investigate the possibilities of the three German lines that are catering to passenger traffic. But why should we have to go to them?

So far removed as we are from the coast, we have to get our booking months in advance. If we were resident in Shanghai or near by, we could afford to let matters stand, and take such passage as might present itself at the last moment. Do the shipping companies disdain missionary trade, or why is it so hard for us to get consideration? We aggregate from 15 to 20 fares, and none of us are yet definitely booked. Moreover, we would like to know why British lines have given up calling at Italian ports. Time was when one could take P. & O. from Egypt to Brindisi, but now anyone wanting to traverse Italy has to back up from Marseilles, say, to Naples at considerable cost. Most of us wish to travel viâ Naples, Rome, Venice, Switzerland, Paris, to London. The German boats call at Genoa or Naples and that is somewhat of an attractiion, in addition to the difficulty of getting a British booking.

THE REPATRIATION OF RUSSIANS.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—May I have space in your paper to give my views re the solving of the "repatriation" of Russian refugees? I read the appeal signed by several of our commercial magnates and [illegible] in the morning's issue with what I said soonest mended." No white man can work and live in Shanghai on $20 per month, and it would only hasten his demise. I am, of course as [illegible] that a man who works needs food accordingly.

But the remedy is not in work in Shanghai, it is in getting rid of them and seeing that no encouragement is given to others to come. I would therefore suggest that the Race Committee be approached and asked to place a surtax of $0.50 on each Champions ticket sold for the May meeting, charge $10.50 per ticket on the understanding that the 50 cents is to be handed over to the Repatriation Committee to be spent through, say, Thos. Cook & Son, for passages away from Shanghai. The Race Club sell on the A & B Sweeps probably [illegible] tickets, therefore $40,000 is obtained and it would not interfere with their present system of allocation of charities, and it would have no debit side.

Now, Sir, the Championship is a vital part of Shanghai life. We all hope to get the winning ticket and no one can say that those whose names appear on the Race Committee are not of A1 sporting natures, and I can vouch for the racing public raising no objection. So let the Repatriation Committee approach the Race Committee and I am sure your Russian refugee can be sent home. Do not ask him under present political conditions throughout the world to work as a white man for $20 per month in Shanghai. It's a poor return for "services rendered."

I am, etc.,
SEATON DELAVAL.

Shanghai, Jan. 31, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—The letter of your correspondent "Seaton Delaval" in this morning's issue of your paper, displays such ignorance of the subject on which he writes that I cannot let it pass unnoticed. The whole problem is receiving the careful consideration of an international committee of business men who are in possession of very full facts and information regarding the position. Whilst eventual repatriation must be the ultimate object to be attained, it is not at present possible, nor will it be so until both political and economic conditions in Russia generally and Siberia especially show some signs of improvement. The problem to be faced is that of providing some form of employment for a large number of refugees who are willing to work, and it has been ascertained that the sum of $20 per month will certainly maintain a man in good physical health even though he may be performing hard manual labour.

It has never been suggested that the conditions of labour should be made attractive, as the danger of encouraging a fresh influx of refugees from other congested centres is ever present. What is suggested is that work be found for those already here, until such time as the opportunity arrives when they can be repatriated. Broadly speaking the matter is not one for individual private effort, but it calls for public action. The Chinese authorities appear unwilling to help or to take any action to mitigate the distress, and it therefore behoves the foreign community to take such relief measures as will meet the situation.

I am, etc.,
M. H. LOGAN.

Shanghai, Feb. 2, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—May I reply to Mr. M. H. Logan's remarks in yours of February 5, re above? I based my contentions on the following facts:

Reading the report of the Shanghai Municipal Council for 1921 p.p. 267a to 276a I noted that the Salaries Commission which consisted of "nine ratepayers not members of the Council, selected as being sound solid business men in the community appointed specially to find a solution to this vexed question of pay"——

"Many of them are large employers of labour themselves and it is not supposed, that, of their own accord——"

Page 277a para. 3 reads—"But the cause of dissatisfaction remains in that certain rates of pay are admittedly inadequate, while it has been verified from irrefutable evidence that the pay of many grades is Too Low having regard to the local conditions to form a suitable living wage."

The above remarks are above the signature of the Municipal Councillors of Shanghai in their reply to the refusal of the ratepayers to sanction an increase in taxes from 14 per cent. to 16 to cover additional cost in carrying out the recommendations of the Salaries Commission re proposed increases in pay to Municipal employees to enable them (and which the Commission termed its most important recommendation) to meet the higher cost of a reasonable standard of living.

The Commission, which decided that and were prepared to see the taxpayer muloted in an addition of 2 per cent. on his taxes to meet the cost, contains names that appear under the appeal for work for Russians in Shanghai through the "North-China Daily News" and tell us that they can live on $20 per month and do any kind of manual labour, and possibly through "ignorance" of the subject I failed to see how they had been converted; hence, "Least said, soonest mended."

Mr. Logan goes further and tells us that a man can keep physically fit even if performing hard manual labour on $20 per month.

Will Mr. Logan please inform me if the necessities of life and rentals have decreased in cost since the Salaries Commission made their report in 1921?

Is the standard of living to-day for white men lower or higher than it was when some of the gentlemen alluded to were of the opinion that the least a man could live upon in Shanghai was Tls. 105 plus Tls. 35 house allowance for a single man (probationary fireman).

The Repatriation Committee—which is also composed of smart men—have been asking the public to subscribe through a gambling medium to enable them to get cash to repatriate—not upkeep—and have sent several away and I believe have received letters of thanks.

Mr. Lebedeff, as per yours of the 4th, has already sent nearly 200 and is asking for more money to send more away to SIBERIA.

Are both these Committees giving their labour in ignorance of conditions in Russia? Surely a man would not appeal to the public for money to repatriate his own nationals to where their necks would be wrung on arrival.

It is with his idea prevailing that I am forced to the conclusion (as many more will be) that there are now two distinct appeals. One for money to send the refugees back to Russia where they can and do obtain work and are doing well:—vide reports of the Committee and Mr. Lebedeff's letter.

Another, which says 'give us employment for them as they are willing to work for $20 per month and we are sure they can maintain themselves on this amount,' and to which Mr. Logan adds that it is not possible to send them back to Russia or even Siberia as political and economical conditions make it unsafe to do so.

I do not grasp in which particular Mr. Logan infers I am so ignorant; I trust that, if he means the Russian problem, he will be satisfied with what I quote from authoritative sources and if he means labour conditions, well I have had 26 years out East and have been supervising all the time, and have done it under many and varied conditions and am prepared to challenge Mr. Logan's statement as contained in his letter of even date, that is that with the subject under review—"Russian Refugees."

It is not possible for a man to maintain himself in such physical health and perform hard manual labour in Shanghai on $20 per month and I am prepared to give that amount to either party if Mr. Logan can prove his statement by giving the public a bill of quantities showing what he deems would be necessary to do so, also a bill of costs based on Hongkew market official prices and cost of housing. The only condition I lay down is that laid down by the Salaries Commission in Budget for 1922 page 278a 3 viz: That the standard of living to which a municipal employee should conform should be that to which other men of similar education, age and position in other concerns in Shanghai can reasonably adopt.

To cover what he would call "contingencies" he can also have the assistance of any other men in Shanghai to help him figure it out to preclude error.

If their contentions and his are in order then, Mr. Logan, being eligible for councillorship, should be on the Council, and have another Salaries Commission appointed to reduce the abnormal (?) amount paid in salaries by the ratepayers to the Municipal employees, taking into consideration that the time has now arrived when it is possible to live on $20 per month in Shanghai. The difference in taxes would be so much that the ratepayers would be able to find the necessary amount to repatriate every Russian in Shanghai if feasible; or

DEATH OF DR. WOODROW WILSON

Ex-President Succumbs to Severe Illness: A Man of Personal Magnetism and Great Breadth of Culture: Originator of the League of Nations

Washington, Feb. 1.

Ex-President Wilson, who has recently been suffering from digestive disorder, has become decidedly worse to-day.

His physician's bulletin says that Dr. Wilson spent a restless night and has lost his strength. During the night the ex-President took a sudden turn for the worse. "I regard his condition as very serious."

Later.

Ex-President Wilson is still conscious but very weak. He is able to converse in whispers and told the doctor: "You've done the best you could but I'm a broken machine," adding with a rally of failing strength: "But I'm ready."

The House of Representatives suspended debate to-day as a token of respect.

Later.

[illegible] no improvement in [illegible] Wilson's condition [illegible] clock this afternoon. [illegible] country is stunned [illegible], that he is at death's door, and the patient's hourly [illegible] the sole topic everywhere. He slept intermittently to-day while the doctors watched. Many rumours of his death have been in circulation and the flags on [illegible] Government buildings were one [illegible] mistake lowered to half-mast. His personal physician, Rear-Admiral Grayson, called other physicians into consultation, but there was little to be done except to make the patient comfortable. No opiates but some stimulants have been used.

The ex-President has been plucky throughout. He told his physician that it would be better that he should go than remain a hopeless invalid. Mrs. Wilson is constantly at his bedside and is bearing up bravely. Other relatives, including his daughters, have been summoned.

It is believed that the malady originated as a result of some indiscreet choice of food. It appears that Admiral Grayson was summoned from a hunting-trip and found Mr. Wilson up and looking after correspondence. He ordered him to bed immediately. Further stomach trouble continued, accompanied by violent bleeding at the nose, and the ex-President finally collapsed.

Gradually Losing Ground.

Washington, Feb. 2.

Early this morning ex-President Wilson's condition remained grave. His physicians assert that he has gradually lost ground. The ex-President is still conscious and is not suffering. His temperature is normal. Dr. Wilson's personal physician, Admiral Grayson, remained at his bedside all night long.—Reuter's American Service.

Life Slowly Ebbing.

London, Feb. 3.

A stream of messages from Reuter's correspondent at Washington show that Mr. Wilson's life is slowly ebbing away and that death may be expected at any moment. The ex-President was conscious nearly the whole time. The latest bulletins state that his heart action is weakening and he is in a state of almost complete prostration.

Many London Sunday editorial articles refer to Ex-President Wilson in most sympathetic terms. The "Observer" concludes its article by saying: "History will honour him as a man who gave the world a new conception of its changed self and a new conscience in international affairs." The "Sunday Express" describes him as the greatest American since Lincoln. He was a failure, like Moses, because he was not allowed to lead Europe into the promised land.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Feb. 3.

At 9.55 this morning ex-President Wilson became unconscious. His pulse was very weak.

Rear-Admiral Grayson, the ex-President's personal physician, remained at the Wilson home instead of going to his own home for breakfast as usual.

Later.

Ex-President Wilson died at 11.15 this morning without regaining consciousness. His death was peaceful and painless. Mrs. Wilson and Rear-Admiral Grayson were at his bedside.

In accordance with a prearranged agreement, about 100 men and women of all creeds gathered in front of the Wilson residence and prayed shortly before the former President's death.

A Long Period of Ill Health.

Later.

The bulletin announcing ex-President Wilson's death, signed by his physician, Rear-Admiral Grayson, says: "The heart's action became feebler and feebler. The heart muscles were so fatigued that they refused to act any longer. The end came peacefully. The remote causes of death lie in ill-health which began more than four years ago, namely, arteric sclerosis with hemipleoia. The immediate cause of death was exhaustion following digestive disturbance, which began in the early part of last week but did not reach an acute stage until the early morning hours of February 1."

Admiral Grayson was worn with the strain and held back his tears with difficulty as he announced Mr. Wilson's death to waiting journalists.

The patient during the last day slept fitfully, later passing occasionally into unconsciousness. He refused nourishment towards the end.

Messages of sympathy poured in as the news of Mr. Wilson's death spread. One of the first was from President Coolidge.—Reuter.

British Premier's Sympathy.

London, Feb. 3.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald has sent a message to the American nation and Mrs. Wilson saying that he is deeply grieved to hear of the death of the ex-President and knows that the whole British nation shares his feelings. He adds that Mr. Wilson had a fine vision of the reason and wisdom of leading Europe to peace and security. He had gone before its fulfilment, but he will be recognised as one of the world's greatest pioneers.—Reuter.

Shanghai's Condolence.

The American Consulate-General has been officially notified of the death of the ex-President and has been instructed by the State Department that the local Consular flag should be flown at half-mast for 30 days as a token of respect and mourning.

Mr. Cunningham yesterday sent the following telegram to the Secretary of State:

"The American Community at Shanghai, as represented by the American Association and the American Chamber of Commerce, desire to convey to Mrs. Woodrow Wilson their sincere condolence in the loss of her distinguished husband."

French Press Tributes.

Paris, Feb. 3.

The "Temps" says that the memory of ex-President Wilson will be imperishable if only as the founder of the League of Nations.

The "Intransigeant" says that France owes Mr. Wilson grateful homage, for he loved justice and was France's friend.—Reuter.

Sympathy in Japan.

Tokio, Feb. 4.

Japan deeply mourns the passing of ex-President Wilson, to whom prominent personages, including the Premier, the Foreign Minister and Count Chinda, pay a generous tribute as a sincere advocate of international understanding and friendship amongst the nations. The Premier states: "With the best of his policies no wise statesman can disagree. So effective was his appeal to the more generous instincts of the nations that even doubters of the efficacy of his policies were forced to regard him with the highest esteem. His position in history is established."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Thirty Days' Mourning Ordered by President Coolidge

New York, Feb. 4.

Ex-President Wilson died in his sleep so peacefully that his wife, who was holding his hand, and his daughter, Margaret, at the foot of his bed, were not aware of his death until Rear-Admiral Grayson's eyes betokened it.

A faithful negro attendant outside the door sobbed audibly as the ex-President's personal physician passed out of the room with bowed head. Hundreds of people outside knelt on the sidewalk in silent prayer when the death was announced.

President Coolidge was in church when he heard of the death. The pastor was preaching a sermon extolling the world movement toward peace and mentioned the part Dr. Wilson had played in it when the voice of a newspaper boy shouting "Extra!" came through the window. The pastor paused and said solemnly: "Even now we hear that which marks the passing of the beloved Leader of the peace movement." President Coolidge immediately left church and went to the home of Dr. Wilson to offer his condolences to his widow.

The flags of public buildings throughout the country are at half-mast.

President Coolidge has issued a proclamation praising "the man who led the nation through the terrific struggle of the World War with a lofty idealism which never failed him and who uttered his aspiration with an eloquence which held the attention of the earth and made America a new and enlarged influence on the destiny of mankind."

President Coolidge has proclaimed a 30-day period of mourning, ordering flags to be flown at half-mast from the White House dome to the remotest warship.—Reuter.

Tributes from London, Canada and France

London, Feb. 4.

Ex-President Wilson's outstanding qualities and failings as a statesman are summed up in long critical studies of his career in the English papers. Particular attention is devoted to the part which he played in connexion with the Great War. He is recognized as having been a great idealist who more than anyone inspired the United States to enter the war, but who failed when it came to a question of political tactics and the hammering out of peace. It is considered a mistake on his part ever to have gone to Versailles. High tribute is paid to his complete sincerity and particular note was taken of the fact that he was instrumental in saving the Covenant of the League, which alone earned him a niche in history. It is agreed that posterity is likely to appraise his worth even more highly than the present generation.—Reuter.

Ottawa, Feb. 4.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, has sent a message of condolence to ex-President Wilson's widow, expressing Canada's sense of the loss that the United States has sustained in the death of "one whose name is inseparably associated with the world's freedom." The Premier also made a statement to the press declaring that history will assign to Dr. Wilson the crown of martyrdom.—Reuter's American Service.

Paris, Feb. 4.

All the newspapers pay tribute to the memory of ex-President Wilson and declare that France will be ever grateful to him for bringing victory to the Allies.—Reuter.

Bitter German Comment on the 14 Points

Berlin, Feb. 4.

The newspapers are bitter in their obituary notices of ex-President Wilson, who was always regarded as having lured Germany into a false armistice with his famous Fourteen Points.

The "Kreuzzeitung" charges the ex-President with perfidy, duplicity and weakness. The "Deutsche Zeitung" declares that the oppressed peoples will follow his coffin angrily raising their fists. The "Deutsche Tageszeitung" asserts that Dr. Wilson was mainly responsible for Europe's disastrous position. "Vorwaerts" terms the former President a tragic symbol of idealism who did not dare to fight to the end against the power of evil.

Feb. 6.

It is officially announced that the German Ambassador at Washington asked the German Government whether he should officially express the sympathy of his Government on the occasion of the death of ex-President Wilson. The Government replied that there was no occasion to express sympathy in the name of the Government and the Ambassador must himself decide on the form in which he personally wished to participate in the national mourning.—Reuter.

Washington Crowd Enraged.

Washington, Feb 6.

A crowd, resenting the delay in half-masting the German flag on the German Embassy on the occasion of the funeral of ex-President Wilson, decorated the front of the Embassy with an American flag to-day. The flag was removed after complaint had been made to the police.—Reuter's American Service.

The Funeral

Washington, Feb. 6.

Government Departments and all commerce and industry observed a great silence on the occasion of the funeral of ex-President Wilson, which was carried out without ceremonial, but with the highest honours, at Little Bethlehem Chapel. The actual interment was witnessed only by very near relatives, as President Coolidge, the Cabinet Ministers, the diplomatic representatives and the other guests left after the pronouncement of the benediction. The funeral service was broadcast by wireless throughout the country.—Reuter's American Service.

THE LATE DR. WILSON'S CAREER

The late Dr. Thomas Woodrow Wilson, 28th President of the United States, was born in Staunton, Va., on December 28, 1856. His paternal grandfather came from County Down, Ulster. In 1875 he entered Princeton University, graduating after four years. Later he pursued his studies in government and history at Johns Hopkins University, where he received the degree of Ph. D. in 1886. In 1885 he married Ellen Louise Axson, of Savannah, Ga., who died in 1914, leaving three daughters. In 1885, also, he began his teaching career at Bryn Mawr College, where he was Associate Professor of History and Political Economy until 1888; and after two years as professor of the same at Wesleyan, he entered the Princeton Faculty in 1890 as Professor of Jurisprudence and Political Economy. With slight changes in title, he served in this capacity until 1902, when he became President of Princeton. His lectures were remarkable for clarity of presentation and brilliancy of phrasing. He was also responsible for many reforms of the educational and social habits of the undergraduates. He displayed great interest in political questions, and won a national reputation. In September, 1910, he was tendered the Democratic nomination for Governor of New Jersey, and in November he was elected by a plurality of 49,000 votes. As Governor, he successfully carried through a series of reform measures, which included a Direct Primaries Law, a Corrupt Practices Act, an Employers' Liability Act, and the creation of a Public Utilities Commission.

Elected President.

In July, 1912, the Democratic National Convention nominated him for the Presidency. In the campaign that followed he voiced popular discontent with the conservatism of the Republican administration, which he believed to have been too closely allied with the interests of "privileged big business." The opposing camp was divided and in the November election Wilson received 435 electoral votes as against 88 for Roosevelt and eight for Taft. The new President soon made it plain that he was determined to exercise his personal influence and his position as head of the party to initiate and carry through the legislation he had advocated in his campaign, and his ascendancy in Congress was soon established.

The first important piece of legislation was the Underwood Tariff Act, passed in September, 1913, providing for a notable downward revision, and this was followed by a broad measure of currency reform, the Federal Reserve Act, signed December 23, 1913. Mr. Wilson's policy of domestic social reform was developed with surprising legislative success during the first year of his administration, but his foreign policy was not so clear cut and aroused little enthusiasm. Definite steps were taken to prepare the Filipinos for self-government; pressure was brought to bear on the California State Government to mitigate the severity of its anti-Japanese legislation and American bankers were effectively discouraged from participating in the international Chinese loans. As a result of the President's personal demand, Congress repealed the law exempting American coastwise shipping from Panama Canal tolls.

The World War.

Foreign affairs after July, 1914, were naturally dominated by the World War. President Wilson insisted upon a policy of strict neutrality and in an address to the American people on August 18, 1914, adjured them, in view of the mixture of nationalities in the United States, to be impartial in thought as well as action. The proclamation of a "war zone" about the British Isles, in which German submarines threatened to destroy enemy merchant vessels with consequent danger to the lives and property of neutrals, was met by a Note of February 10, 1915, which warned Germany that she would be held to "strict accountability" for the lawless acts of submarine commanders. A series of submarine attacks including the sinking of the Lusitania (May 7, 1915) and the Sussex (March 24, 1916) elicited further protests from President Wilson but no further action.

During the electoral campaign of 1916, President Wilson's foreign policy was severely criticized by the Republicans, but his supporters declared that he had "kept us out of the war" and he was again elected. He now proceeded with plans for peace proposals to the European belligerents to whom he sent identical Notes; but they were not of an acceptable nature. The continued sinking of American ships compelled him to ask Congress on April 2, 1917, for a declaration that a state of war existed with Germany. He opposed a coalition war cabinet, as leading to divided responsibility, and military policy was handed over to the military experts. On the advice of the General Staff, he appointed Gen. Pershing commander of the expeditionary force to France and, as regards conduct of operations, gave him complete authority and permitted no interference by politicians. In the building of the new army, the President took no part, but used his authority consistently to favour centralization under the General Staff.

During the war President Wilson consistently developed his ideals of a new international system which should perpetuate peace and assure justice and security to every nation regardless of its material strength. The most notable of his speeches was that of January 8, 1918, in which he stated 14 points necessary to a just and lasting peace. It was on the basis of these points that the Armistice was granted to Germany.

Believing that his presence at the Peace Conference was neces-

THE MORAL WELFARE LEAGUE.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In connexion with the question of prostitution in Shanghai, the above mentioned association has of late been very prominently brought to the fore in correspondence of the local press. Among the points the following seem to have occupied the mind of the various correspondents.

1.—The League has a very high sounding name, it means well, but lacks [illegible] organization for a vast undertaking as that of fighting commercial vice.

2.—It has apparently devoted its exclusive attention, so far, to the International Settlement, leaving the rest of Shanghai to the care of the devil.

3.—Its actions seem to be those of an amateur, thus negativing its aspirations.

Anything done by halves is never done well, and if the League tackles a job, it must first see to it that it possesses the necessary facilities that lead to results, otherwise such an undertaking is doomed to failure from the start.

MORALS.

The dividing line between morality and immorality is impossible to determine. For instance a man who commits bigamy, whatever his morals may otherwise be, we would, according to western notions condemn right away as an outcast, as below the zero mark. Here in China conditions are different: most foreigners quite willingly hobnob with officials and compradores who boast of quite a harem. Do the good people of our Model Settlement realize that there are in greater Shanghai, with a population of nearly two millions, from thirty to forty thousand prostitutes? I have this estimate from good authority, from a foreign-trained Chinese medical practitioner, and the figure refers to Chinese prostitutes only. The proportion of foreign women in the profession, not including Japanese, we are given to understand, is about 1 per cent. of the total, that is to say, there are three to four hundred white women [illegible] wholly or partly by prostitution [illegible] inconsiderable part of their re[illegible] Let us leave this small number out of consideration and proceed with some remarks regarding the other 99 per cent.

Of Chinese prostitutes there are [illegible] The Chinese Advisory Committee to the Municipal Council has already registered a protest that sing-song girls (otherwise Class I), should not be designated as prostitutes, [illegible] them without having to resort to prostitution. In fact, should these girls accept any bidder that comes along, they would likely lose cast and tumble down to catagory II. They carry on flirtations, and their amorous inclinations are not as a [illegible] purse. Singsong girls are specially trained and are selected [illegible] entertainers. They [illegible] often probably dream of buying their [illegible] time or other to become a concubine and thereby to attain [illegible] which [illegible] quite a lot of money on the calling, and are able to marry at their own choice.

Those of Class I may have similar aspirations and may in many cases be even equals of the higher class. They are entertainers at parties and often go from [illegible] to another, deriving quite an income in this or a final engagement.

Class III are street walkers, frequenters of places of public entertainment, in former days known by a handkerchief attached to a button of their coat as a badge of their profession. These have generally nothing to commend them other than perhaps their outward appearance, charms which are mostly artificial. These girls may be the property of a brothel or they may be mortgaged to one by their parents or relatives, but a good many are just a free-lance with apartments somewhere. This catagory is probably the largest and the least [illegible] They are called at Shanghai "wild fowls" or pheasants. Class IV consists simply of automons herded together in the lowest slums. Their fees amount to what a coolie is able to pay, I am told 20 cents and four coppers including a cup of tea. In spite of this their owners make a good living.

My authority gave me the following estimate of venereal disease prevailing of inmates.

Class I. 10=20 per cent.
" II. 30=40 "
" III. 50=65 "
" IV. 70=80 "

This does not include many who are themselves not infected, but who still carry disease germs [illegible] infect others.

WELFARE.

As is seen the danger of venereal infection at Shanghai is very great. Prevention is only feasible if we have the root of the evil under control. A great step towards general welfare would be accomplished if diseased women were isolated in hospitals and not allowed to roam about propagating disease, thereby perhaps wrecking a man's very prospects of future happiness. As is the case with vaccination in case of smallpox, we should make Chinese understand that prevention is better than cure also with regards to venereal diseases.

LEAGUE.

The unfortunate girls under treatment should supply a vast field for rescue work by the League. Further let it find out those who are prostitutes against their own free will and set them free. Also those who, owing to their tender age, are unable to discriminate for themselves, should be taken in hand and prevented from sliding down that awful avalanche from which salvation at a later stage becomes almost impossible. The League should wage war against such as live by corrupting the morals of [illegible] girls and the like. The League would render a service to the welfare of humanity by curbing venereal diseases. The Scriptures say: "There shall be joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over 90 and nine righteous persons, which need no repentance." If the League will carry out the above precept, then certainly it will be deserving the right of existence.

In our Model Settlement ideal ideas find a fruitful field. The suggestion is made to eliminate prostitution from our midst. Sure, sure, sure—hands up—the motion is passed. The police get instructions to carry out "the will of the people," but alas, they must admit, after trying for several years, that the task in impossible to carry out in spirit—and the withdrawal of [illegible] brothels has only meant increased secret prostitution, which being unrestricted, escapes proficient control, and is a greater danger than ever. The oldest profession in the world cannot be restricted or suppressed by any fast laid-down municipal rules of bye laws. At worst the brothel keepers wander to places beyond the Settlement confines, where they can carry on at their own sweet will.

The serio—comical situation in the International Settlement of Shanghai to-day is that prostitutes cannot be driven from the streets, because the police are afraid of making a mistake and insulting a decent woman, while decent women avoid being out after dark fearing to be taken for prostitutes.

Thanking you for the space,

DOCKING AND WHARFING.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—You use the heading, "Empress of Russia to Dock within Sight of the Bund on Saturday," in your to-day's issue. The word "dock" in this instance is an entirely incorrect and misleading Americanism.

The Empress of Russia may "berth," "anchor," "moor," or "go alongside the wharf" within sight of the Bund, but she will not "dock."

I have never heard an American shipping man mis-use the word "dock," but American tourists (particularly those of the weaker sex) hardly ever use any other expression and are apparently unable to differentiate between a dock and a wharf.

It would be just as logical to describe a man entering his house as going to bed.

English and Mathematics Combined

Middle Schools to-day face a perplexing situation in adjusting the legitimate demands of students for more English with the actions of Educational Associations tending to lessen the amount of English taught. The mastery of English is the open door to world citizenship, and to the literature, the science and the news of the world. It is quite vital to business success in China. The question is to learn to handle it well in the time allotted.

Professor H. B. Graybill, widely known as the author of "Mastery of English," agrees with leading educators that, apart from elementary study, this situation can best be met by teaching other subjects in English, especially subjects that will be useful to students upon entering careers after graduation. With Professor Lo King Tuen, of Canton Christian College, Mr. Graybill has just finished a Middle School Arithmetic which combines study in English and applied Mathematics to meet this widely felt need.

On the side of English this "Practical Arithmetic" contains the vocabulary used in shopping, travel, all sorts of business, the Customs and Postal Services, newspapers and in ordinary conversation. It also gives an English preparation is Higher Mathematical and Scientific study. The first part of the book is as much a study and drill in English as it is an Arithmetic.

As a mathematics the Lo-Graybill "Practical Arithmetic" is unique, the first adequate, original arithmetic written for China. It meets the requirements of commercial schools, and of middle schools preparing both for college and for immediate entry into business. In addition to the usual arithmetical processes its arithmetical foundation in Algebra and Geometry gives an excellent basis for work in college. Short cuts in calculation of great practical value are incorporated as well as the most complete and convenient series yet published of tables of Chinese, metric and English measurements with their cross values. This arithmetic introduces the study to the understanding of Exchange and to many other actual problems met with in everyday life in China. It is unique in its inclusion of over 60 very original China-born individual and class projects, a distinct advantage on other texts.

"Practical Arithmetic" is direct and natural in method. The student is helped to build up processes in Mathematics for himself so as best to grasp the basic principles. Arithmetical terms when first used are given with their Chinese equivalent. To secure speed, accuracy and skill, ample drills and exercises are incorporated. The teacher is given a wealth of problems for his selection, all of which will prove of great interest to Chinese.

This book is now ready. Its price $1.60 Mexican. Principals and teachers who are interested may ensure a sample copy by dropping a card to Edward Evans & Sons, Limited, Shanghai. (Advertisement).

ROBINSON PIANO CO./LD.

Clemenceau and Dr. Wilson had signed a secret compact in that connexion. He had just received the documents from the Foreign Office. The French now wish to publish the secret agreement and desire his consent.

Later.

The allegations of Mr. Lloyd George with regard to a secret agreement between M. Clemenceau and President Wilson in 1919 have become a first-class sensation. The French Foreign Office has made a statement declaring that it prefers to await the text of the allegations before commenting and meantime denying the conclusion of any secret agreement.

The British Foreign Office issues a statement that the French Government recently gave notice of their intention to prepare a Yellow Book containing the documents relating to the drafting of Articles 428 to 431 of the Peace Treaty. The British Government decided before replying to acquaint Mr. Lloyd George with the proposal as an act of courtesy. Consequently proof-sheets of the documents were despatched to Mr. Lloyd George, asking whether he had any personal objection to their inclusion in the Yellow Book, and requesting him to return the proofs. No answer was received and the proof-sheets were not returned and the first indication that the letter had reached Mr. Lloyd George comes in this alleged interview.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 7.

With regard to the Lloyd George interview, M. Tardieu, who took an active part in the drafting of the Treaty of Versailles declared that to describe as a secret agreement a proposal which had been a fortnight in the hands of the British and American delegations and which, owing to the absence of Mr. Lloyd George, was approved by President Wilson 36 hours before Mr. Lloyd George, was preposterous. —Reuter.

The Text of the Articles.

Note.—Articles 428 to 431 of the German Peace Treaty refer to guarantees in Western Europe and are as follows:—

Article 428.—As a guarantee for the execution of the present Treaty by Germany the German territory situated to the west of the Rhine, together with the bridgeheads, will be occupied by Allied and Associated troops for a period of 15 years from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Article 429.—If the conditions of the present Treaty are faithfully carried out by Germany, the occupation provided for in Article 428 will be successively restricted as follows: (1) At the expiration of five years there will be evacuated: the bridgehead of Cologne and the territories north of a line running along the Rhine from Remagen along the railway Juelich, Duren, Euskirchen, Rheinbach, then along the road Rheinbach to Sinzig, and reaching the Rhine at the confluence with the Ahr: the roads railways and places mentioned being excluded from the area evacuated: (2) At the expiration of ten years there will be evacuated the bridgehead of Coblenz and the territories north of a line to be drawn from the intersection between the frontiers of Belgium, Germany and Holland, running about four kilometres from the south of Aix-la-Chapelle, then to and following the crest of Forst Gemeund, then east of the railway of the Urft Valley, then along Blankenheim, Valdorf, Dreis, Ulmen to and following the Moselle from Bremm to Nehen, then passing by Kappel and Bachamach: all the places, valleys, roads and railways mentioned above being excluded from the area evacuated. (3) At the expiration of 15 years there will be evacuated: the bridgehead of Mainz, the bridgehead of Kehl and the remainder of the German territory under occupation. If at that date the guarantees against unprovoked aggression by Germany are not considered sufficient by the Allied and Associated Governments, the evacuation of the occupying troops may be delayed to the extent regarded as necessary for the purpose of obtaining the required guarantees.

Article 430.—In case either during the occupation or after the expiration of the 15 years referred to above the Reparations Commission finds that Germany refuses to observe the whole or part of her obligations under the present treaty with regard to reparation, the whole or part of the areas specified in Article 429 will be reoccupied immediately by the Allied and Associated forces.

Article 431. If before the expiration of the period of 15 years Germany complies with all the undertakings resulting from the present Treaty, the occupying forces will be withdrawn immediately.—Reuter.

BRITISH CABINET CONFERENCE

Discussions of Unemployment, Housing and Agriculture: Three Labour Peers

London, Feb. 4.

A Cabinet communiqué says that to-day's meeting received reports from the committees on unemployment, housing and agriculture, indicating considerable progress. The Cabinet discussed questions of foreign, Indian and Colonial interest and decided to hold two further meetings in the present week in view of the number of urgent problems requiring consideration.

The National Council of the Independent Labour Party, of which Mr. Ramsay Macdonald is a member, issues an agricultural programme, the main points of which are the nationalization of land and the organization of agriculture as a national service on a co-operative basis. The programme significantly advocates regulation by the State of the purchase, importation and storage of staple foodstuffs with the object of stabilizing prices for several years.

Labour Peers have been created in the persons of Sir Sydney Olivier, the Secretary of State for India: Brigadier-General C. B. Thomson, the Secretary of State for Air; and Mr. Sydney Arnold, the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies.

ANGLO-PERSIAN OIL

Burmah Co.'s Protest that Sale of Shares Would Not Have Checked British Control

London, Feb. 1.

The Burmah Oil Company has issued a statement denying the assumption that the sale of the Government's shares in the Anglo-Persian Oil Company would have resulted in throwing the control of the Anglo-Persian Oil Company into foreign hands and jeopardizing the Navy's supply of liquid fuel, and declaring that the consequences would have been and were intended to be exactly contrary.

The proposal to sell these shares to the Burmah Oil Company in such a way as to secure British control of the new group, consisting of the Burmah, Shell and Royal Dutch Companies, was mainly intended to remove the weaknesses and dangers of allowing the British Navy to rely so greatly upon a single oil-field in Central Asia. The result of the proposal would have been that the amount of British-controlled oil, on which the Navy supplies were based, would have been vastly extended and the great Royal Dutch organization would have been controlled by London instead of by Holland.

The scheme proposed to include the Burmah Oil Company, enlarged by the acquisition of the Government's Anglo-Persian shares, as the third shareholder in the division of interests between the Shell and the Royal Dutch Companies. The result would be to give the two British companies an assured and permanent majority in the group. Guarantees were to be given that this arrangement should not be impaired by subsequent arrangements, thus preventing the creation of a monopoly of the oil markets of the world by any future combination of oil companies.—Reuter.

THE AMERICAN OIL SCANDAL

Fall Considered Fit to Give Evidence and Subpœnaed: A Note for $100,000

Washington, Feb. 1.

The House of Representatives has passed Senator Walsh's resolution directing the President to sue for the annulment of the Doheny and Sinclair oil leases. The resolution was adopted by the Senate yesterday.

It is announced that a subpœna will be issued for ex-Secretary Fall's appearance before the Investigation Committee, as the physicians appointed by the Committee are of opinion that he is in a condition for examination.

The Committee has received from Mr. Doheny a portion of a note for $100,000 which the witness stated was Mr. Fall's.

In the course of Mr. Doheny's examination to-day it transpired that the promissory note alleged to have been given by Mr. Fall did not bear a signature. The witness declared that the note was torn in two by Mrs. Doheny to prevent witness's executor from suing Mr. Fall for the amount if Mr. Doheny and his wife died.

It also transpired that Mr. Fall informed Mr. Doheny by long-distance telephone on November 29, 1921, that he would accept a loan for the improvement of his ranch. The torn note was dated November 30, 1921.

Admiral's Sensational Evidence.

Feb. 2.

Startling testimony was heard at to-day's session of the House of Representatives Naval Committee, which is inquiring into the matter of the oil leases. Rear-Admiral Robison, Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, stated that it was the possibility of Japan, perhaps in conjunction with Britain, invading the Pacific Coast of the United States that prompted the Navy Department to arrange with the Doheny interests for the construction of fuel tanks at Pearl Harbour, Hawaii. The Admiral pointed out that the contract with Mr. Doheny was negotiated prior to the abrogation of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and therefore before the Washington Disarmament Conference, which removed many causes of friction in the Pacific. Rear-Admiral Robison, emphatically banging his fist on the table, added "If we hold a base near Honolulu, no enemy will conquer the West coast."

Mr. Fall Refusing Answers.

Mr. Fall was brought before the Senate investigating committee to-day in spite of the protests of his medico-legal advisers. He refused to reply to questions concerning the oil leases or his relations with Messrs. Sinclair and Doheny. He gave as his reasons, firstly, that the authority of the investigating committee had expired, and, secondly, that in view of Congress directing the instituting of a court action, any answers might tend to incriminate him. The Committee then adjourned.

Mr. McAdoo's Repudiation.

Los Angeles, Feb. 2.

Mr. McAdoo, who is proceeding to Washington to the bedside of his father-in-law, ex-President Wilson, has requested permission to testify before the investigating committee. He declares that he was never employed or consulted regarding oil leases in the United States. His advice to the Doheny companies solely related to their Mexican business.—Reuter's American Service.

A Correction

Washington, Feb. 2.

The statement issued by the White House withdrew not Rear-Admiral Gregory but Mr. Thomas W. Gregory, Attorney-General in President Wilson's Cabinet, as one of the prosecuting counsel named by President Coolidge in the oil cases in consequence of a statement by Mr. Doheny to the Senate Committee that Mr. Gregory had been employed with the oil companies. The White House statement said that in view of Mr. Doheny's evidence the employment of Mr. Thomas W. Gregory as a Government counsel in the oil cases "might be an embarrassment to Mr. Gregory and perhaps be otherwise improper."

NEW U. S. AMBASSADOR IN LONDON

Distinguished Company at Pilgrims' Dinner: Anglo-American Duties

London, Feb. 1.

The Prince of Wales, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, the Prime Minister, and Mr. J. H. Thomas, Secretary of State for the Colonies, were amongst the distinguished personages attending the Pilgrims' dinner, presided over by Lord Desborough, in honour of the new American Ambassador, Mr. F. B. Kellogg, and the newly-appointed British Ambassador in Washington, Sir Esme Howard.

His Majesty in a message acknowledging greetings trusted that the occasion might prove another happy link between the two great English-speaking nations.

Mr. Macdonald, proposing the health of Mr. Kellogg, declared that the whole nation was standing with held breath, awaiting further news of ex-President Wilson. He said that relations between the United States and Britain had never been better and he prayed that they would long continue so. America and Britain wanted no alliance, no documents. They were prepared to stand side by side not in political alliance but in human fellowship to help each other and to advance the cause of humanity (cheers). The Prime Minister declared that the category of Ambassadors was magnificently and worthily represented in the person of His Royal Highness (prolonged cheers).

Mr. Kellogg, responding, said that he believed that one of the greatest services the United States and the British Empire could perform for the world was to set an example of fair and broad-minded statesmanship in international dealings and to maintain the sacredness and inviolability of treaties. He said that he would do everything possible to maintain the closest and most friendly relations with His Majesty's Government and the English people.—Reuter.

IMMIGRANTS TO U. S

Further Drastic Restriction: Total Exclusion for Some, Including Japanese

Washington, Feb. 1.

The House of Representatives Immigration Committee has voted a report in favour of an immigration bill to restrict the annual number of immigrants from any country to two per cent. of the number of its nationals in the United States at the time of the 1890 census and also to provide for the examination of immigrants at ports of embarkation. These proposals would limit the total of annual immigrants to 169,000 instead of the present 357,000.

The Bill provides for the exclusion of persons ineligible for American citizenship. This would affect the people of the East, including the Japanese.—Reuter's American Service.

Lock-out Declared on Strikers: Disorderly Scenes: Police Patrolling in Strength

Bombay, Feb. 4.

The situation in Bombay in consequence of the mill strike is assuming a serious aspect. The men did not return but showed their resentment by stoning motor-cars and trains, many persons being slightly injured. An honorary magistrate was stoned and fired a revolver in the air. The strikers tried to surround the car but the driver made a spurt and escaped. Mounted police are patrolling the streets and the military are ready.—Reuter.

NORTH IRELAND BOUNDARY

Free State and Ulster Meeting to Discuss Rectification

London, Feb. 1.

An important conference to discuss the North Ireland boundary question, attended by the President of South Ireland, Mr. William Cosgrave, and the Premier of North Ireland, Sir James Craig, and other representatives, was opened at the Colonial Office this afternoon by a speech by Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, after which the Colonial Secretary, Mr. J. H. Thomas, presided at a four-hour sitting. The whole situation was discussed and the conference was adjourned until to-morrow morning. The delegates appeared in high spirits as they left.—Reuter.

...ary. President Wilson decided himself to go to Paris. He won an early victory when he persuaded the Conference to accept the principles of the League of Nations as the basis of peace, and when, on February 14, 1919, he [illegible] of the preliminary draft of the covenant. On returning to America, however, he found Republican opposition to the League strongly manifested in the Senate. Going back to Paris in March, he was able to secure the insertion in the convenant of certain amendments required by American sentiment and the approval by the Conference of the final draft.

Republican opposition in the Senate, however, developed rapidly upon his presentation of the treaty. In the hope of winning popular support, the President set forth upon a tour of the country, but this effort overtaxed his strength and he was compelled to return to Washington, where he suffered a complete nervous collapse. His system had provided for no understudy and the administration was left without a leader. Mr. Wilson's illness led directly to the defeat of the treaty, which the Senate refused to ratify.

In the autumn Presidential election in 1920, he was decisively defeated by the late President Harding. Since that time he had led on the whole a retired life.

As Man and Politician.

In private intercourse Mr. Wilson displayed a personal magnetism, a breadth of culture, and a genial cordiality that are amply attested by his intimates. But in public life he proved unable to capitalize such advantages. In the formation of his policies he isolated himself and was unable to establish close relations with Congressional leaders. In matters of what he regarded as principle he was adamant, and he distrusted the judgment of those whose basic point of view was different from his own; but the evidence of those who worked with him is almost unanimous to the effect that he was anxious to secure advice, was tolerant of opinions, and glad to delegate responsibility.

THE RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

Soviet Invited to Send Plenipotentiaries to Discuss All Outstanding Questions: Cessation of Propaganda Essential

London, Feb. 1.

Britain has recognized Soviet Russia.—Reuter.

Later.

The British Government to-day despatched a Note to the Russian Government inviting the Soviet to send to London as early as possible representatives armed with full powers to discuss matters like existing treaties, settlement of mutual claims, restoration of Russia's credit and the propaganda question and to draft the preliminary basis of a complete treaty to settle all outstanding questions.

Treaties Follow Recognition.

The text of the Note, which was communicated to the Russian Government by the British Trade Representative, Mr. R. M. Hodgson, declares:—

I have the honour by the direction of my Government to inform Your Excellency that they recognize the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics as the de jure rulers of those territories of the old Russian Empire which acknowledge their authority. In order, however, to create normal conditions of complete friendly recognize the Union of Socialist intercourse, it will be necessary to conclude definite practical agreements on a variety of matters, some of which have no direct connexion with the question of recognition and some of which, on the other hand, are intimately bound up in the fact of recognition.

In the latter category may be cited the question of existing treaties. His Majesty's Government are advised that recognition of the Soviet Government of Russia will, according to the accepted principles of international law, automatically bring into force all treaties concluded between the two countries previous to the Russian revolution, except where these have been denounced or have otherwise juridically lapsed. It is obviously to the advantage of both countries that the position with regard to these treaties should be regularized simultaneously with recognition.

The Question of Propaganda.

Not technically connected with recognition but clearly of the utmost importance are the problems of settlement of existing claims by the Government and nationals of one party against the other and the restoration of Russia's credit. It is also manifest that genuinely friendly relations cannot be said to be completely established so long as either party has reason to suspect the other of carrying on propaganda against its interests and directed to overthrow its institutions.

In these circumstances His Majesty's Government invite the Russian Government to send to London as early as possible representatives armed with full powers to discuss these matters and draw up preliminary bases for a complete treaty to settle all questions outstanding between the two countries. In the meantime I have been given the status of Chargé d'Affaires pending the appointment of an Ambassador and His Majesty's Government will be glad similarly to receive a Russian Chargé d'Affaires representing the Government of the Union at the Court of St. James.

Diplomatic Caution.

Feb. 2.

The Government's Note to Russia is regarded as bearing an impress of diplomatic cautiousness and at best is only meeting the Bolsheviks half-way. It is considered that recognition will amount to little or nothing of value to Russia unless subsequent negotiations can be concluded whereby money credit may be obtained. It is recognized that the Government is likely to insist on the carrying out of due obligations by the Bolsheviks.

Russo-British Trade.

Mr. E. F. Wise, a former Civil Servant and now Economic Adviser in respect of foreign trade to the Central Union of Soviet Russian Co-operative Societies, who largely negotiated the original Anglo-Russian trade agreement, in the course of an interview said that there was already a big trade between Russia and Britain. Some 80 to 100 ships were regularly carrying grain from Russia to Britain and West Europe. The establishment of a new atmosphere of friendliness would enable a big increase in Anglo-Russian trade, giving Britain big advantages over her rivals.—Reuter.

French Approval.

Paris, Feb. 3.

The "Temps," as an example of moderate political opinion, regards the British Note to Russia as proof of continuity of the British policy and the truly national character of Mr. Macdonald's Cabinet. The journal hopes that the subsequent negotiations will succeed because of the very favourable repercussive effects they will have for France. The papers do not lose sight of the unwritten conditions embraced in the Note.—Reuter.

Soviet's Satisfaction: Hand of Fraternal Greeting to the British People

London, Feb. 3.

The Russian Telegraph Agency in London has received a message from the Soviet Commissariat of Foreign Affairs giving the text of a resolution adopted by the Second Congress of the Soviets after M. Litvinoff's report of the de jure recognition of the Soviet by Britain.

The resolution expresses satisfaction at Britain's recognition and declares that co-operation between the peoples of Britain and Russia remains one of the first cares of the Soviet, which, in accordance with its policy of peace, will make every effort to settle all disputed questions and to understanding and develop and consolidate economic relations.

"The Congress," the resolution declares, "stretches out the hand of fraternal greeting to the British people."—Reuter.

London, Feb. 2.

A commercial treaty between Italy and Russia is on the point of signature accompanied by Italy's de jure recognition of the Soviet Government.—Reuter.

The Russo-Italian Agreements.

Rome, Feb. 3.

The newspapers say that the Italo-Russian agreements will be signed to-day. They comprise a treaty of commerce and navigation and a Customs agreement, with supplementary agreements embracing two protocols consisting of 80 articles.

The treaty contains explicit de jure recognition of the Soviet Government and provides for delivery to Italy by Russia of a large quantity of corn. A percentage of the price of the deliveries will be assigned for the purchase of goods in Italy. A considerable reduction in the Customs tariffs of Russia will be conceded to Italy.

It is stated that the Italian Government has also obtained petroleum and coal concessions and that Italy will appoint an Ambassador at Moscow and Russia an Ambassador at Rome.—Reuter.

American Press Criticism of Britain Action.

London, Feb. 4.

The political observer of the "Daily Telegraph" says that the British Note to Russia was only presented after the Soviet had accepted the principle of membership of the League of Nations, for which it will apply as early as possible, and had promised complete cessation of propaganda in India and China.—Reuter.

Moscow, Feb. 4.

Apart from a slight reshuffling of portfolios, the Cabinet is practically unchanged in consequence of M. Lenin's death, M. Chicherin remaining Commissary for Foreign Affairs, M. Trotsky Commissary for War and M. Krassin Commissary for Trade.

The new Government has not yet had time to reply to Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's Note, but the newspapers welcome recognition by Britain.

The "Isvestia" dwells upon the necessity of introducing international relationships going beyond the framework of pre-revolutionary diplomacy and states, for example, that Britain would not care to recognize the Soviet claims to the control of the Dardanelles and Gallipoli in accordance with pre-Revolution arrangements.—Reuter.

Tokio, Feb. 4.

Britain's recognition of Russia, which is intensely interesting to Japan, is freely commented on by the morning papers, which express the opinion that the British action will be quickly imitated by other European nations. The journals urge the wisdom of Japan reconsidering her attitude towards Russia.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Russia and League of Nations.

London, Feb. 6.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, in an interview, declared that Russia's entry into the League of Nations was attended with difficulty, but that Germany's inclusion must be insisted upon.

Referring to the misunderstandings between Britain and France, the Prime Minister declared that Britain was no longer content to sit and watch events. The new attitude was apparently succeeding beyond expectation. Reuter.

Geneva, Feb. 6.

M. Chicherin has notified the League of Nations Secretariat that the Soviet Government have agreed to the place and date of the meeting of the naval disarmament committee, namely at Rome on February 14. Admiral Behrens will represent Russia.—Reuter.

American Press Criticism.

New York, Feb. 4.

The "New York Tribune," dealing with the British recognition of Russia, says that the Soviets desire foreign loans and credit and regard Mr. Ramsay Macdonald as a kindly and trustful benefactor. "We can wait until Red Russia is ready to return to civilized standards before resuming diplomatic relations with her."

The "New York Herald" says: "There is a danger of Governments stampeding to recognize Russia, but there is no reason why the American Government should shake hands with murder."

The "New York Times" affirms that Britain's recognition of Russia will unquestionably help the Soviet, but, if the negotiations for which Mr. Macdonald has asked are unduly prolonged, the actual profits of the recognition will be found disappointing at Moscow.—Reuter's American Service.

The Italian Agreement.

Rome, Feb. 4.

Owing to the appointment of M. Rykoff as Chairman of the Soviet People's Commissars in succession to M. Lenin, it has been necessary to send to Moscow the text of the Italo-Russian Treaty, which has already been printed and approved by the Italian and Russian delegrates here. A courier conveying the document left for Moscow yesterday evening.—Reuter.

Holland's Hesitation.

Amsterdam, Feb. 6.

The "Telegraaf" learns that the Government is seriously considering resumption of diplomatic relations with Russia.—Reuter.

Franco-Russian Trade.

Paris, Feb. 6

M. Skobeleff, the Soviet Commercial Agent in France, is leaving for London with his staff this afternoon, having completed the liquidation of the Agency owing to the decision of the Seine Tribunal that trade between France and Russia, although legal, must be undertaken at the trader's own risk and cannot enjoy the protection of the French Courts as long as the French Government have not recognized the Soviet Government.—Reuter.

RUSSIAN ARMY IN REVOLT

Threatened Rising in South-West Provinces and Anti-Semitic Campaign

London, Feb. 6.

The Riga correspondent of the "Daily Mail" claims to have learned from an authentic source that the real Russian Divisions of the Red Army led by Tsarist officers are planning an offensive against the Government of Moscow from the South early in April. The Government is rapidly moving Tartar and Mongolian Divisions to Moscow. The rebellious garrisons refuse to obey orders transferring them to Siberia and the Caucasus.

A simultaneous revolt of the Ural garrisons and a rising at Kronstadt are to be expected.

The garrisons in revolt are co-operating with the Ukrainian troops, who are planning a reign of terror in South-West Russia by the slaughter of Jews. Correspondents of Baltic newspapers already report serious anti-Semitic risings in the Kharkoff districts and elsewhere, while Odessa newspapers report many arrests and assert that the situation is dangerous.—Reuter.

Riga, Feb. 6.

Serious disturbances are reported in the Kharkoff district. A Commissar with a considerable number of troops is said to be supporting the insurgents.

A fire, followed by explosions, has destroyed a considerable part of the big munitions factory at Tula.

Heavy Sentences at Chita.

Later.

Moscow messages report that the revolutionary military tribunal at Chita has sentenced General Pepelaieff and 20 of his adherents to death, 45 others to 10 years' imprisonment and 11 to five years' imprisonment.

General Pepelaieff, after the collapse of Koltchak's army, led various operations in Siberia. He was taken prisoner last summer. Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 2. Spain has agreed to sign the Tangier Agreement, thus ending the hitch in the negotiations.—Reuter.

MR. MACDONALD AND M. POINCARE

Amicable Sentiments Expressed in Exchange of Letters Between Premiers

London, Feb. 3.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's letter to M. Poincaré says:—

"Our two countries have come through such trying times side by side and have made such sacrifices together for the common cause that on coming into office I address you a personal note, not only to inform you of the change, but to send greetings and good wishes. I grieve to find so many unsettled points causing us trouble and concern, and assure you that it will be my daily endeavour to help to settle them to our mutual benefit. You have your public opinion and I mine. You have your national interests to conserve and protect and I mine. Sometimes, at first, they may conflict, but I am sure that by strenuous action and goodwill, conflicts can be settled and policies devised, in pursuit of which France and Britain can remain in hearty co-operation. We can be frank without being hostile and defend our countries' interests without enmity. Thus the Entente will be much more than nominal and France and Britain can advance together to establish the peace and security of Europe."

M. Poincaré's Reply.

M. Poincaré replied:—

"I am much touched by your kind letter and hope wholeheartedly that your efforts for the welfare of your country will be successful. You may be sure that the memory of the times of common trial and sacrifice, when the bonds uniting your country and mine were knit together, are ever present in my mind. I deeply regret that several questions, important to our two countries, are not yet settled and, like you, I will do my utmost to solve them by friendly agreement to our mutual advantage. If we have to take into account the public opinion of our respective countries and safeguard national interests, I am confident that in applying, each in his own sphere, vigorous action and goodwill to the settlement of the problems arising between us, we shall solve them in such a manner as to maintain between France and Britain the policy of co-operation essential to our two countries and the tranquillity of the world. My own frankness will be no less than yours and, if in defence of French interests I show the same fervour as you in defence of British interests, you may be sure that nothing will ever change the cordiality of my deep-rooted feelings. It is impossible that, animated as we both are by such sentiments, we should fail to make the Entente effective and fruitful of the results it can and ought to bear in order that the whole of Europe may find again peace and security, freedom and work.—Reuter.

MR. LL. GEORGE AND THE PEACE TREATY

Serious Allegations as to Connivance Between France and America

London, Feb. 6.

An allegation that a secret compact with regard to the occupation of German territory was made between ex-President Wilson and M. Clemenceau in March, 1919, during Mr. Lloyd George's absence from Paris, is made in an interview with Mr. Lloyd George published in the "New York World."

Mr. Lloyd George says that he was called to London at a critical moment in the negotiation by the famous attack in the House of Commons organized by Lord Northcliffe's telegram. When he returned to Paris he found that ex-President Wilson had surrendered to M. Clemenceau. Thus the French gained the right to occupy the Rhine country which was finally included in the Treaty. He had only recently discovered that during his absence in London M.

20,000 People Faced with Starvation in Western Highlands: Failure of Crops and Fishing: Only 20 Dry Days Since May

From Our Own Correspondent.

Edinburgh, Dec. 19.

A grave condition of affairs prevails in the Highlands and Western Islands. The experiences of the crofters and fishermen in the spring, summer, and autumn have been little short of calamitous. The potato crop, the hay, and the harvest have been ruined by persistent rains. Even the peat is reduced to a sodden mass which will not burn; and coal they cannot afford to buy. The profits of the fishing industry, gravely hampered by illegal trawling within the three-mile limit, grow steadily less. There is hardly any work to be had, only a little money comes from outside in the shape of old age and war pensions; very few of these Lewis men are eligible for unemployment benefit, and malnutrition has seriously affected the general standard of health of the children. One authoritative report states that many districts have known neither summer nor autumn. There have been only 20 dry days since May, lately broken by snow and frost. Potatoes are as small as marbles, or large, soapy, and diseased. It is computed that 20,000 people are face to face with starvation.

Steps are already being taken to cope with the emergency; there will be a central committee composed of men of the highest standing, with local committees in the distressed areas. It is proposed that measures should be taken to safeguard the morale of the people. Relief must not be gratuitous. Labour or money should be exacted from those supplied with food. No person receiving relief should be, so far as employment could be obtained, allowed to remain idle or unemployed. Care must be taken that, in the mere saving of life, irretrievable harm was not done to the moral character of the people.

RAMSAY MACDONALD.

Ramsay Macdonald is one of the Men of the Time. Is he not the strongest and best of the Leaders of the Labour Opposition, and is not still a higher position open to him in the immediate future? For the present, freed from the cares and responsibilities of political activity, this dominant Scot is holidaying in the North, breathing his "native gurms" in the quaint old town of Lossiemouth, on the Moray Firth. Indeed he is living in the very cottage in which he was born; he has enlarged it, and given it a name, "The Hillocks," from the sand-hills in front, "just as if it was the villa of some bourgeoise grocer," as one of his labour rivals recently muttered in disgust.

In addition to being fishing centre, Lossiemouth has some fame as a golfing resort. Ramsay Macdonald, however, does not now play golf upon that course, and thereby hangs a tale. He was a member of the local club for a number of years, but, in consequence of the strong views he expressed during the war, he was requested to resign upon a requisition by certain members. Circumstances have changed since then, and the club has made it known that it would now be very glad to rescind the resolution excluding Mr. Macdonald if he would let bygones be bygones. He has replied that he bears the members who took this action no ill-will, and that he regards the incident as closed, but himself as still excluded.

SCOTTISH TEMPERANCE POLLS.

The polls under the Scottish Temperance Act of 1913 give little hope of a solution of the great problem of intemperance. Districts are dry, and yet on a subject like this, where feeling runs high on both sides, they are the only things to which we can safely appeal. What do they show? They show that the "No-Licence" party have not carried a single district which did not go "dry" in 1920. They have maintained their ground in 18 "dry" areas, but they have lost 5.

In regard to "Limitation," which means the reduction of licences in a district by one-fourth, they have had both losses and gains; but on balance they are 4 down, although the loss here is partially off-set by the fact that two of the "Limitation" areas have gone one more step towards "No-Licence."

Looked at from the other side, the results show that there are now 216 "wet" areas—excluding 20 districts with "Limitation"—out of 254 areas polled; three years ago in the same districts there were 207 "wet" areas, so that the net gain to the "wets" and the net loss to the "drys" has been nine. Put in another way, about 40 per cent. of the total votes cast was given for "No-Licence," "Continuance of No-Licence," and "Limitation" while roughly 60 per cent. was cast for "No Change," "Repeal of No-Licence," and "Repeal of Limitation." This leaves out of account the large unpolled vote, which may fairly be set down as anti-extremist, or moderate.

What is the way out of this deadlock? The desire for reform in the provision of drinking facilities is practically universal, and various schemes are being ventilated, none of them, however, receiving any general support. As I have already written you, a way out may be found in a new "option," and the framing of it may be left to a Royal Commission. The wording of such an option will be a very difficult matter, and is certain to rouse a bitter controversy.

THE GOVERNMENT OF GOLF.

There is evidence that golfers throughout the country are keenly interested in the future control of the game. The desire is to make the government of golf more representative of the widespread character that the game has now assumed than is the case at the present time, but no attempt is being made to undermine or to usurp the place so long and honourably occupied by the Royal and Ancient Club of St. Andrews. We in Scotland—and the feeling will be shared by golfers generally throughout the kingdom—have no desire to see the headquarters of the game removed from St. Andrews to London, and any attempt would be vigorously opposed. But with the desire for a more representative control of the game there will be a large amount of sympathy. The Scottish Union movement, working in harmony with the R. and A., and loyally acknowledging its supreme position in the game, has been of great service in many ways, notably on the question of national handicapping. The ruling authority has readily admitted the services which the Union has been able to perform, and as an earnest of its desire to secure further co-operation with the Union has agreed to convene a conference on this question.

This marks an important stage in the government of the game, and the attitude of the Championship Committee goes to show that it is anxious to avail itself of the assistance of those who are closely in touch with golfing opinion throughout the country. The conference should be mutually helpful in the investigation of a question that is of particular importance to the golfing world to-day. The methods of St. Andrews in former days have not escaped criticism, a good deal of which was not without foundation. The step now taken by the R. and A. will not diminish its prestige, but will go to show that it is amenable to modern opinion when that is in the best interests of the game. It may be that as the result of the conference there will be created a permanent consultative council which would voice the views of Scottish golfers. This is an interesting proposal, and, should it be carried into effect, the R. and A. would stand to gain in many ways.

GOLFERS' SERMONS.

Which of our Scotch churches situated near golf courses where Sunday golf is played will be first to follow the example of St. Nicholas's, Wallasey, near Liverpool? A series of 20 minutes' services for players has been arranged, and is being well attended. Larger congregations are the rule weekly, but that might be only "a local rule" that would not hold good in Scotland. There should be no difficulty in finding texts for golfers. A very appropriate start might be made with the first ten words of Philippians 1 and 27.

STORIES ABOUT LOUIS GREIG.

The famous W. J. A. Davis, captain of the England XV. 1920-3, has published a book on "Rugby Football and How to Play it," and the lighter side of the game is by no means neglected. Some of the best stories centre about Wing-Commander Louis Greig, who was famous for his language on the field. Two ladies were standing outside the Services ground at Portsmouth. "What shall we do this afternoon?" said one. "Let's go and hear Louis Greig play Rugby," was the other's laconic reply. This Scottish International, when playing scrum-half, exclaimed to his partner, who kept dropping his passes: "Heavens! you'd drop it if I handed it to you on a plate."

EN PASSANT.

The Duke of Atholl complains that the Duchess having been elected the first woman M.P. for Scotland, his own politics nowadays were staying at home and minding the teapot.

Remarking upon the experiences of Parliamentary candidates, Sheriff Jameson, at a gathering in Edinburgh, said that sometimes they were welcomed to constituencies in terms that were a little embarrassing. He recalled an instance when a friend of his, after nomination for a constituency, was encouraged by a shepherd with the remark—"Oh, you are a far better candidate than the last man we had." And then added—"You see he was far too honest and far too much of a gentleman."

The engagement is announced of Neva Anthony, second daughter of Geo. G. Duncan, of 5 Ravelston Place, Edinburgh, and Harold Green, J.P., Hongkong. The marriage will take place shortly.

Ship Scuttled by Chief Engineer: A Huge Shipping Swindle: The New Premier

Dec. 26.

A judgment which is perhaps the most important of the year, in view of its consequential effects, has been pronounced by the Second Division of the Court of Session in the actions by Glasgow shipbrokers and commission agents against certain well-known insurance companies for recovery of moneys under sea policies over the hull, cargo, etc., of the str. Spathari, which foundered off the Portuguese coast in April, 1921, while on a voyage to Greece.

The Court found that the ship had been scuttled by the chief engineer for the benefit and by the directions of the shipbrokers and commission agents—two of them Greeks and one of them a Scotsman.

It seems that H. Demetriades purchased the vessel with the professional help of a friend, Mr. Borthwick, for £3,000; and the funds for the purchase were obtained by mortgages for £7,500. Then Demetriades set about getting cargo for Greece. To some extent the venture was intended to be philanthropic towards his friends in the Levant. It was projected, too, that these friends might purchase the vessel for £9,000 or more with a view to its occupation in Levantine trading. Indeed, Borthwick was under agreement to deliver the vessel in Greece to Demetriades for £9,000 against his re-selling it! With the aid of the practised eye of another friend and countryman, Cambitsis, of no capital but "with some maritime antecedents" and "fish and chip shop experience," or, as he called himself, a "restaurateur," Demetriades was very lucky in "spotting" in Leith some rejected dried Labrador codfish of "pre-war strength." It was said to be none the worse of having lain for some years in Iceland before its importation in December, 1920, to Scotland, by the str. Noah. Lord Sands tells us, however, it would be a mistake to connect this consignment in any way with the Flood. Cambitsis was successful in securing 60 tons of this cargo for certain other friends at the not over stiff price of 19s. per ton, and still more successful in turning it over to a Levantine purchaser at the moderate figure of £60 per ton, he, the buyer, paying in addition the freight! It should not be omitted from the story that some 30 tons of the same codfish were bought by other people for manure. Prudent ship owners and merchants, Greek or otherwise, insure their ventures. So, by the agency of Demetriades, Borthwick insured on time or voyage policies the hull of the Spathari for £9,000, and Cambitsis and others interested covered the codfish, and some other cargo, with freight, disbursements, and stores, to the extent of other £18,000. The vessel duly sailed, and, as has been said, sank off Portugal.

The Scottish Judges had no difficulty in pronouncing judgment against the swindlers and in favour of the underwriters. But many people are wondering how they accepted the risks, not very heavy, it is true, as marine risks go, without making the least inquiry into the mercantile reputation of the proposed insurers. If they had done so, more of the dried codfish at least might have been put to better use in this country as a fertilizing agency instead of slowly rotting in Portuguese waters.

FUTURE OF TEMPERATURE ACT.

During the General Election a considerable number of the Scottish members, irrespective of party, stated that, while they could not support the suggested repeal of the Scottish Temperance Act, they were willing to consider any scheme of amendment, and also any sound proposal for the reform of the licensed houses. This course will be resisted by extremists on both sides, by the Trade and by the Prohibitionists, but the Scottish members interested feel that the great bulk of public feeling will be against deadlock. It is significant that certain of the Scottish Socialist members, who generally hold temperance views, are of this opinion now, and that they have been strengthened in their attitude by the request of considerable numbers of working men, who, while against no-licence, urge that at present many of the houses are in a thoroughly unsatisfactory condition. With the prospect that the next Government, whatever it it is scarcely likely that there is, will not be long in power, will be immediate legislation, but that some amendment of the present Temperance Act will eventually be carried may be predicted with every confidence.

RAMSAY MACDONALD'S APPRENTICESHIP.

A Lossiemouth man has been giving some reminiscences of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's early association with the place. One of the most interesting related to a man called Jimmie Alexander, a well-known character at Lossiemouth. He kept a tinsmith's shop, and was familiarly known as "Tinnie." He was a man of superior education, and his shop was the resort of all the ardent politicians. Every important question of the day was thrashed out at this local parliament "Tinnie" himself was a crusted old Tory, but every shade of opinion was represented, and many distinguished visitors took part in the discussions. The late Mr. J. E. Sutherland, M.P. for Elgin Burghs, and Sir Archibald Williamson, M.P. for Elgin and Nairn (now Lord Forres), when they had other members visiting their constituencies used to bring them along to "Tinnie's" shop.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, who was a keen Radical in his 'teens, used to take an active share in these debates, and acquired there much of the skill of which he has made such good use at Westminster. "Tinnie," who, alas! has passed away, always took a great interest in the career of the Socialist leader, who had served his political apprenticeship in his shop, but he always declared that Ramsay Macdonald was a bigger man up in London than he was in Lossiemouth.

HIS MOUSTACHE.

Ramsay Macdonald's large moustache is prominent in the pictorial press now-a-days. The cartoonists see to that. And it has come to be peculiarly identified with the man. It is not quite so black as it used to be; it retains a curl and an elegance reminiscent of the 'nineties, carrying some consolation thereby to old-fashioned folk. In picture groups of the Labour Party it adds a distinction for the most part lacking in the assemblage of unassuming faces. He lets the adornment grow venerably white. Disraeli defied nature and bought a bottle of dye. But a Labourist has to scorn such aids in case the fierce limelight of the day brought that tell-tale purplish gleam to view and wrecked a career. Ramsay Macdonald has always worn it of the same florid size and shape—as if to typify a permanency of character and outlook. Lloyd George allowed his hirsute protection to flourish erratically like a tropical plant with the fluctuations of power. Mr. Asquith grew locks in rivalry. Then recall if you can the German Emperor's moustache. Common gossip knew that that monumental aspect of the Chief of Hohenzollerns was not Nature's fine unaided experiment. Even beyond the barbers it was known that Wilhelm slept with his moustache in elastic bandages or something of the sort. With royalty gone, the necessity for a martial assumption swept from his life, Wilhelm reverted not to barbarism but simply to a beard. His moustache was permitted to fall limp. For the first time in 40 years he lay no his pillow in comfort. Ramsay Macdonald's moustache, however, has never changed, and people say that this typifies a certain conservatism of temperament! It is curious, when one thinks of it, that to the Man in the Street Ramsay Macdonald is always identified with this florid moustache, as part and parcel of his principles. Truly; great is the power of the political cartoonist.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's late uncle was for many years a well-known guard on the Highland Railway. He was a small, pawky, and unassuming man, and a general favourite. When questioned about his nephew, all he would say was—"Imphm! Ramsay was aye a clever like chiel." Then he would smile and inquire if you had got all your luggage.

GERMAN SEAMEN'S STRIKE

Sympathetic Attitude of British Transport Workers

London, Feb. 2.

The transport workers' and stevedores' unions have decided to refuse to unload or touch German ships in British ports on the ground of the German shipowners failing to negotiate a settlement of the German seamen's strike and in consequence taking ships to sea undermanned and endeavouring to import blackleg labour.

The National Union of Railwaymen have promised the Transport and General Workers' Union their support in the event of a dockers' strike.—Reuter.

DEATH OF A FRENCH ROYALIST EDITOR

Paris, Feb. 2.

The death is announced of M. Arthur Meyer Director of the "Gaulois," at the age of 78.—Reuter.

 The late Arthur Meyer was well known as a leading exponent of monarchism in France, which his paper consistently preached, being regarded as the chief organ of the Royalist party. This, however, did not prevent divers misunderstandings between M. Meyer and the Duc d'Orléans, exiled heir to the French crown and it is permissible to think that M. Meyer's politics were rather a case of opposition to the existing, than sympathy with a potential Government. But it is not for foreigners to estimate the exact feelings of French politicians. In the Dreyfus affair, M. Meyer was of course violently Clericalist and anti-Dreyfusard. In the course of his long life he was on intimate terms with all the distinguished or eccentric personages of the day and among his publications the reminiscences contained in "Ce que mes yeux ont vu" are most entertaining. He married a grand-daughter of the Duke de Fitz-James, Mlle. Marguerite de Turenne.

SOVIET PROPAGANDA IN INDIA AND CHINA

Riga, Feb. 2.

Addressing the Soviet Congress at Moscow, M. Zinovieff exhorted the delegates to spread the light of communism among the hundreds of millions of Orientals, especially those of China and India whom M. Lenin's deputy previously called Soviet Russia's heavy reserves.—Reuter.

FATALITIES ON THE U. S. CRUISER TACOMA

Charlestown, S. Car., Feb. 3.

The repair-ship Prometheus has arrived with the bodies of Captain Sparrow and one of the radio operators of the cruiser Tacoma, who perished in a storm after the grounding of the Tacoma off the coast of Mexico. The bodies of the two other wireless operators have not been recovered.

It appears that, after the Tacoma was piled up on the reef, Captain Sparrow went with the operators to the wireless cabin and sent out the S.O.S. When the ship began to break up under the pounding of the waves, the men left the cabin to their work until they were standing waist high in water. Becoming exhausted, they made a last desperate effort to get below and join the remainder of the ship's company, but were suddenly caught by a giant combine and swept overboard.—Reuter's American Service.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS AND HOURS OF LABOUR

Paris, Feb. 2.

The Chilean Minister, who is a member of the League of Nations Council, in the course of an interview with a representative from Geneva, stressed that the decisions of the Washington Conference in regard to the Eight Hours Day had not been carried out by the majority of the countries concerned. Many of these countries had not even ratified the Convention. Meanwhile, the Council of the League of Nations was powerless to enforce the decisions of the Washington Conference. Mr. Edwards mentioned that the British Government had ratified the Convention.

M. LENIN'S SUCCESSOR

Riga, Feb. 3.

M. Rykov has been officially elected M. Lenin's successor as Chairman of the Soviet People's Commissars.

M. Rykov is a Russian peasant by origin, aged 43, and an engineer by profession. He was arrested in 1900 at Archangel, but escaped and was re-arrested and banished to Siberia in 1911. He became Commissary of Home Affairs in 1918 and has been head of the Council of National Economy since 1919. He became prominent by very able management of supplies during the civil war.—Reuter.

INDUSTRIAL UPHEAVAL IN NORWAY

Christiania, Feb. 6.

A dock strike against a reduction in wages which has been proceeding for the past fortnight has developed seriously, the employers deciding on a lock-out affecting 36,000 men. They threaten to look out a further 24,000 if an agreement is not reached within a week.

The National Association of Trade Unions has retaliated by proclaiming a strike in the paper pulp and celluloid industries.—Reuter.

Terrible Accident on American Railway

Fort Wayne, Ind., Feb. 2.

Harrowing scenes are said to have followed a collision between two electric trains here yesterday when 17 lives were lost. The wood immediately caught fire. Many persons are pinned beneath the wreckage and cannot approach the blaze. As the flames creep nearer the screams of the victims are heart-rending, helpless to aid the victims.—Reuter's American Service.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

MR. LLOYD GEORGE'S ALLEGATIONS

French Press Indignant: M. Clemenceau's Flat Denial of Any Pact: Journalist's Acceptance of Responsibility for Publication of Statement

Paris, Feb. 7.

The press is indignant at Mr. Lloyd George's statement and dwells on the fact that the accusations were made just when ex-President Wilson died. The "Matin" says that it knew that Mr. Lloyd George is capable of treating historical veracity with the utmost fantasy, but it has never thought that he would go so far as to imagine a secret treaty which does not exist merely in order to flatter the Labour Party. The "Petit Parisien" asserts that Mr. Lloyd George's calumny by its very gravity excludes all probability. The "Gaulois" says that once again Mr. Lloyd George has been taken in the very act of uttering incorrect statements.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 7.

Mr. Harold Spender, the writer of the article in the "New York World" containing Mr. Lloyd George's allegations, states that the article was the outcome of a visit he paid to Mr. Lloyd George during the last week-end. Mr. Lloyd George was not aware that he intended to use his (Mr. Lloyd George's) observations in the article. "Mr. Lloyd George did not authorize the statements and if I have been indiscreet I take the whole of the blame."—Reuter.

M. Clemenceau's Denial.

Paris, Feb. 7.

Interviewed by the "Intransigeant" with regard to the Lloyd George incident, M. Clemenceau laconically remarked: "Show me a secret treaty signed by Dr. Wilson and me and I undertake to pay the total reparations."—Reuter.

London, Feb. 7.

It is understood that, besides instructing the Marquess of Crewe to call on Mr. Poincaré this morning, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald has communicated personally with the French Premier with regard to the Lloyd George incident.

It appears that there was only one set of proofs of the documents at the Foreign Office and, as these were sent to Mr. Lloyd George, the Prime Minister has not yet seen them.

Mr. Ll. George's Explanation

Later.

In an article in the "Daily Chronicle," Mr. Lloyd George states that he is unable to accept the views attributed to him in the "New York World" article as accurately setting out the facts of what happened at a critical moment of the Peace Conference. He declares that when he returned to Paris from London in April, 1919, he found that an agreement had been reached between President Wilson and M. Clemenceau on two very important issues, firstly, the military occupation of the Rhine and, secondly, the American guarantees of the French frontier against German aggression. "To describe the agreement as a secret compact between President Wilson and M. Clemenceau is ridiculous. President Wilson acted in perfect loyalty and blame cannot be imputed to either President Wilson or M. Clemenceau that I was called to England when grave matters were under discussion. The fact that President Wilson and M. Clemenceau had reached agreement was communicated to me upon my return and the agreement regarding the occupation of the Rhineland was after some modification ultimately incorporated in the Peace Treaty."

The Delay in Reply.

Mr. Lloyd George says that the documents when published will tell their own tale. He expresses regret for his delay in replying to the Foreign Office letter, which was due to the fact that the letter was not signed. He expresses the opinion that it would have been fairer if Mr. Ramsay Macdonald had waited to hear his explanation before making a statement to the press.

In conclusion, Mr. Lloyd George says that Mr. Macdonald will probably find that most, if not all, of these documents have been already published by M. Tardieu in France and Mr. Baker in America. "Both these gentlemen between them have published most of the secret documents of the Paris Conference."—Reuter.

BRITAIN'S RELATIONS WITH FRANCE

Premiers on Friendly Terms: Report on Reparations to Preface Pending Meeting: British Policy of Sympathy Combined with Firmness: France's Debt to Britain

London, Feb. 7.

Reuter's Agency understands that the Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, learned of the alleged interview with Mr. Lloyd George in the "New York World" yesterday at noon, half an hour after he had received a report from Paris with which he was very pleased, because it showed how well things had gone since the Labour Government had come into office. On inquiry, Mr. Macdonald learned that the French Ambassador had called on the Foreign Office on January 2 and that the Foreign Office had had under careful consideration hitherto secret documents for several days. As Mr. Lloyd George had not yet returned the documents, which were the Foreign Office's only copy, it was impossible to say what they contained.

It is understood that the incident is a great blow to M. Poincaré, with whom the Labour Government have been getting on very well and with whom important arrangements had been made with regard to the Palatinate. Obviously M. Poincaré might suppose that action had been taken behind his back and the British Ambassador at Paris, the Marquess of Crewe, was instructed to call on the French Premier in the morning and explain the whole situation.

Relations between Britain and France have not been so cordial for some time as they are now. M. Poincaré and Mr. Macdonald are on very friendly terms, though no meeting has yet been arranged between them. It is understood that the Prime Minister is anxious that the meeting, when held, shall deal with definite propositions based on the reports of the two committees of experts on the subject of reparations, which can be expected shortly.

The view of the British Government is that, unless something new and unexpected occurs, the British policy now in process of formulation will be acceptable to Paris. It is a policy of sympathy, but also of great firmness in protecting Britain's legitimate interests. It will be impossible to deal with the question of the French debt to Great Britain until the Government receives the reparations reports. The Government does not intend to regard the French debt as a separate issue, but rather as a negotiable asset in conjunction with other outstanding questions.

Mr. Macdonald, it is understood, is very anxious for an agreement between the French and British Governments, upon a policy which will be a real and effective contribution to the peace of Europe. He is anxious to invite the co-operation of the United States and to secure the sympathy and interest of the smaller European nations.

Outstanding Problems.

The Government hopes that its formal recognition of Russia will be the first step towards the accomplishment of much practical work through the operation of several commissions, which will be established to deal with outstanding problems, including debts. It is the intention of the Government to establish machinery to deal with the important question of anti-British propaganda which must be settled.

Reuter also understands that the Cabinet is unanimous in the belief that the effectiveness of the League of Nations is conditional upon the accession of Germany and Russia.—Reuter.

PRINCE OF WALES INJURED

Collar-bone Broken While Jumping His Hunter

London, Feb. 8.

It is officially stated that the collar-bone of the Prince of Wales is broken and that he is slightly injured. His Royal Highness is returning to London at noon.

Later.

The Prince of Wales broke his collar-bone while exercising a hunter this morning at Billington Manor near Ascott. He spent the night at Mentmore Mansions with Lord Dalmeny prior to the meet of the Whaddon Chase hounds at Ascott. Early in the morning the Prince took his hunters to Billington Manor, the residence of Sir Richard Cooper, and was jumping a fence when his horse fell. The Prince was pitched on to his shoulder but immediately rose, and tried to remount. His equerry said: "I believe that you have broken your collar-bone." The Prince replied: "Yes, have me taken to Leighton Buzzard." The Prince of Wales was medically treated and was subsequently driven back to Mentmore Mansions. His shoulder was bandaged, but he was smiling.—Reuter.

GERMAN SEPARATIST MOVEMENT

A Note of Protest to France: Allegation of Support: The French Reply

Berlin, Feb. 5.

In a new Note to France, the German Government declares that French support of the Separatists has seriously infringed German sovereignty in the Palatinate and has resulted in the oppression of 760,000 defenceless people.

The German Government requests restoration of conditions in accordance with the Treaty of Versailles, disarmament of the separatists, unrestricted restoration of activities by the German authorities and non-interference in future in German domestic and political affairs.—Reuter.

Paris, Feb. 7.

M. Poincaré, replying to the German Note of February 5 with regard to the Separatist movement in the Palatinate, says that the fresh calumnies of the Reich are not supported by anything like proof, and in conclusion affirms that the French Government is scrupulously observant of treaties and remains determined not to intervene in German internal quarrels. It will therefore not enter into conversations with the German Government as regards domestic affairs.—Reuter.

AMERICAN OIL SCANDAL

Washington, Feb. 7.

The Senate has passed a resolution directing the Department of the Interior to move for the recovery of the Elk Hill naval oil reserves held by the California Standard Oil Company.

In consideration of the fact that ex-Secretary Fall has refused to answer questions on the ground that to do so might incriminate him, the Senate committee investigating the oil scandal has voted in favour of relieving him from further attendance.—Reuter's American Service.

EINSTEIN'S THIRD PREDICTION

Verification Established: Theory of Relativity Beyond Doubt

Einstein's theory demanded the existence of three phenomena which could not be explained by Newtonian gravitation: a slow evolution in the orbit of Mercury; an apparent displacement of the stars in the vicinity of the eclipsed sun and a shift in the spectral lines of the sun and stars. The existence of the first had been known, but not explained, since the middle of the 19th century; the second was looked for and demonstrated beyond all doubt in [illegible] 1922; but the third was long sought for in vain. The results of different observers were completely contradictory. At last, however, the discordances have been removed: and the consensus of opinion is that the so-called Einstein shift has a real existence.

The spectrum of an arc-lamp is a continuous band of "rainbow" colours stretching from red at one end to violet at the other. The introduction into the arc of a chemical element produces a line, or group lines crossing the band transversely and occupying positions which are always constant for the same element under the same conditions. Certain things produce slight changes in the positions of the lines. Thus a continuous motion to or away from the observer of the source emitting the lines produces a shift, which is towards the violet if the source is approaching, and towards the red if it is receding. This phenomenon, known as the Doppler effect, does not occur if the source is travelling at right angles to the line joining it to the observer; if, that is to say, it is neither approaching nor receding. The amount of the shift gives a measure of the velocity of approach or recession. A shift towards the red is also produced by high pressures.

SHIFT TO THE RED.

According to Einstein, the spectral lines of the sun and stars should show a displacement to the red, in addition to any that may be due to motion or pressure. His theory requires that the lines of an element should be shifted more and more to the red as the gravitational field surrounding the element increases. Thus in a massive body like the sun, where the gravitational field is instense, the lines should be shifted to the red as compared with the same lines produced in the laboratory. The amount of this shift can be calculated.

The problem of deciding whether this shift is, or is not, present in the solar spectrum is greatly complicated by the presence of other factors, which can give rise to shifts of doubtful amounts. The two astronomers who have done most towards the deciding of this question are Mr. Evershed, director of the Kodaikanal Observatory, and Dr. St. John, of Mount Wilson.

Several years ago Mr. Evershed found that the iron lines in the sun were shifted towards the red by an amount which increased as one passed from the centre of the sun's disc towards the edge. He found, moreover, at the centre of the disc that the lines emitted gases at a high level in the sun's atmosphere gave a larger displacement than those emitted at low levels. The difference in shift in the high and low level lines could be explained by vertical convection currents in the solar gases; for since these currents, at the centre of the disc, would be moving directly to or away from the earth they would necessarily give rise to Doppler effects. It would, however, be expected that, whereas the cooler, high level gases having a downward current would give a shift to the red, the hotter, low level gases having an upward current, would, on the contrary, give a shift to the violet.

THE UNKNOWN FACTOR.

To explain the observations, it was thus necessary to assume that there was superimposed upon these current shifts a larger, additional shift to the red, due to an unknown factor which affected high and low level lines equally. This assumed combination of shifts would give rise to a tively large shift to the red in the high level lines, and to a smaller shift to the red in the low level lines in complete accordance with observation. Mr. Evershed convinced himself that the unknown factor, whatever it was, was not a high pressure in the sun; for careful investigations had shown him that pressure in the solar atmosphere was quite negligible.

A possible explanation was that the earth itself excited a repelling force upon the solar gases, driving them in a direction away from it, thus giving a Doppler shift to the red. To decide this point he examined the spectrum of the side of the sun turned away from the earth by the ingenious method of photographing the spectrum of Venus (which shines by reflected sunlight), while it was on the far side of the sun. His results showed that the lines from the other side of the sun gave the same shift to the red. If the earth excited a repelling action on the gases, the spectrum obtained in this way would have shown a shift to the violet, for the gases which were moving away from the earth would have been moving towards Venus. The earth effect was thus disposed of, and the only explanation left was the Einstein shift, which must be the same on both sides of the sun. Furthermore, the amount of shift which had to be accounted for corresponded with the amount predicted by Einstein.

REAL EXPLANATION.

At the edge of the disc the excess of the observed shift over the Einstein shift could not be explained by convection currents; for since these currents are vertical they must, at the edge of the disc, be at right angles to the line joining the earth and sun, and so cannot give rise to Doppler effects. Mr. Evershed found that the real explanation was that the shift was an apparent one produced by the scattering of light in the sun's atmosphere; at the centre of the disc the scattering was negligible, but it became appreciable at the edge, where a ray of light coming towards the earth had to traverse a much greater thickness of the solar gases.

Mr. Evershed also studied the sodium lines and found them to be shifted equally all over the sun's disc by the exact amount predicted by Einstein. Probably because of their very high levels these lines are not affected by currents or scattering.

Now Dr. St. John had concluded some years ago, contrary to Mr. Evershed, that the pressure in the solar atmosphere was large, and produced considerable and indeterminable spectral shifts. He confined his conclusions therefore to his measurements of the cyanogen lines, which alone were uninfluenced by pressure. He is now, however convinced, by a recent investigation, that the pressure in the solar gases is, after all, negligible; and that the cyanogen lines were, for certain reasons, unfrustworthy. With the removal of the pressure complication his results fall into accordance with those of Mr. Evershed. Dr. St. John is now convinced of the existence of the Einstein shift.

We may thus conclude that the third prediction of Einstein has been verified with a very considerable degree of certainty; and that this, taken in conjunction with the absolute verification of the two other predictions, has placed the generalized theory of relativity beyond all reasonable doubt.

OPEN AIR CHESS

Clapham Common Play in all Weather

Men have been known to finish a game of chess in a burning building. Soldiers played it in the trenches.

Arctic explorers and shipwrecked mariners have cried "Check" to one another in the hours of privation and loneliness. But for sheer pertinacity and enthusiasm no chess players can compare with the member of the Clapham Common Open Air Chess Club.

In the twilight writes a "Daily News" man I came across two muffled men crouching over a chess board in the middle of Clapham Common. They sat on collapsible campstools in the lee of a tennis butt which they use as a lock-up for the chessmen and boards.

AUDIENCE OF THREE.

The sun had disappeared behind cloud banks. The nursemaids and the children had gone home. A solitary lamplighter was going on his rounds.

Hungry seagulls swooped over head, and the young ducks on the pond, catching the spirit of the game, cried "Check, check." The only spectators of this open-air game, played in a bitter east wind, were a park-keeper, a policeman, and myself.

"Your king's in danger," said one of the muffled men, moving a bishop with his gloved hand and stamping his cold feet on the gravel.

"Mate!" cried his opponent in the gathering gloor. Then darkness fell.

"CHESS FOR KEEPING FIT."

"Winter and summer we play in all weathers," said Mr. J. Coombs, one of the club founders, who happened to be one of the two players. "When it rains we play under umbrellas, and when it snows or hails or sleets we just go on as if the summer sun were shining. Last year I only missed one day, and this winter I have been absent only twice.

"Our membership is about 100, and we send out challenges to other clubs from time to time. The club has been established about two years. I used to suffer from bronchitis before I took to alfresco chess, but now I am almost free from it, and it is all due to open air chess."

Chess for keeping fit. Chess for bronchitis. Chess for Christmas. There's nothing like chess. In a few years the "Father" of the Clapham Common Open-Air Chess Club will be a centenarian.

IN MONTANA

Much of the January number of Harriet Monroe's "Poetry" (Chicago) is filled with vers libre. But there is some real poetry too, as under.

EXOTIC

Her frightened soul shrank
When she saw
The bitter crumbling hills of shale.
And the high cutbank,
Gashed and raw,
Struck her eyes like the wall of a jail.

The years ran by Indifferent,
And she never grew used to unfenced land,
Nor dust blown high,
Nor scrub pines bent
In the midst of shuffling wastes of sand.

When her years were told
Her voice was sour
And her eyes were as hard as small black beads.
Her mouth was cold
And twisted and dour,
For her soul had withered like last year's weeds.

THE WIND

The cabin sits alone far up a hill
Where all the year the mournful wind blows shrill.

She used to tell him sometimes: "No one knows
How hard it is to listen while it blows."

He never touched a plow again, they say,
After he found her dead, but went away.

And tenants wouldn't live upon the place
Because, the neighbors said, they saw her face

Pressed close against the little window-pane
Watching the twisting storm-clouds in the rain;

And in the night-time they could hear her cry
And moan and whimper if the gale was high.

They said she had no cause to die but still
The wind was always blowing on the hill.

"PU-LAI-TUN"

Or Brighton: A Chinese Impression of London by the Sea in 1871

The following description of Brighton was written by Li Shu-ch'ang, secretary to the first Chinese ambassador in London. It is printed in the 11th section of the "Small Square Cup" geographical miscellany.

Pu-lai-tun is a place famous for its beauty. It is in Europe, on the coast of the land of Ying. It is about 160 leagues south of Lun-tun and can be reached by coach in two hours. The people of the Capital go there for sport or repose. Landwards, a ridge of low hills girds the town, while towards the sea is a steep and rocky cliff that men of taste have hollowed out into a vast chamber, where rare and marvellous fish from every quarter of the world are kept in tanks of glass through which perpetual waters flow. There is, indeed, no ocean-creature that cannot here be viewed.

Here too is a bridge, set upon wooden piers, that goes out several thousand feet into the sea, so built that wanderers, climbing to a height, may lean and gaze afar; and at the end of the bridge there is a music-room.

For the rest, there is short grass along the downs, flat sands along the shore, green windows and gay roofs in the town, and in company with these the sea, a mighty vision, now dark, now dazzling, stretches for ever and ever its vast expanse of grey.

The people of the Capital in their hundreds of thousands live close-packed as the teeth of a comb; their streets and markets intersect, covering each day a huge space, and where there should be a view of dancing waters, only the sails and masts of merchant-ships are seen. Even the lively clatter of hand-weavers and craftsmen is lacking, and all is merged in dusty squalor.

It is then for the quietness and cleanness of his place that each year, when the Hall of Meeting is closed, holiday-makers with one accord come hither to take their rest. Its winds are mild, its weather, clear. At its horizon sky and ocean meet. The fine ladies of the land go walking happy, sleeve to sleeve, in coats and skirts of diverse cut, trailing by like clouds. Sometimes a boat or two will pass, dipping its small oars into the empty darkness of the sea. The rich and powerful drive by in spotless coaches, their fiery horses racing neck to neck, to distant picnics and carousals.

Dusk thickens, the lamps are lit, a row of flames darts up along the shore. The music, played above waters, is caught up and cast back again by wind and tide, faltering in wafts of dim, mysterious sound, as though it floated from another world.

A month after I reached Lun-tun a well-to-do gentleman named A-shih-pe-li (Ashberry) brought me to the place and I was quick to admire its matchless beauty. Afterwards I returned many times, and each time with equal delight. Since then, years have passed and I have visited famous places in many lands; but never on any day has Pu-lai-tun been absent from my thoughts, such power does this place hold over the affections of all who have beheld it.

The Land of Ying is famous chiefly for her giant strength and vast prosperity, and men have judged her only by the toughness of her ships, the hugeness of her cannons, by her swift progress in the race for gain, and they know that by these she has got her will between the Four Seas. But such people do not know that for sport and recreation, for ease and comfort she has such places as this pleasant town.

In ancient days the philosopher Hsun Tzu spoke of the evils which come when lands think only of strength and security. But Luan Chen, when he appeared before the Baron of Ch'u, spoke first of the right ordering of the multitude and next in praise of leisure. It seems, however, it is strength and security which breed good order and leisure, and by the possession of a Pu-lai-tun a country's might may well be judged.—Translated by Arthur Waley.

NEW LAND LEVELS

Remarkable Effects of the Earthquake: Sea Bottom Drops 1,500 Ft.

If the undersea changes in the earth's surface produced by the great earthquake were visible on the surface they would be the marvel of our time. According to a report from naval survey ships, the sea bed at one point 5,000 metres north of Okinoshima subsided 253 fathoms—1,518 ft. Whether this is simply a deep crack or a subsidence of a considerable area is not stated, but in some parts as much as 50 acres has dropped to a great depth, while in other places the sea bottom has risen to the height that would make a considerable hill. An upheaval from 25 to 113 fathoms was discerned in the centre of Sagami Bay. The middle region between Oshima, Hatsushima, and Okinoshima dropped from nine to 50 fathoms.

Several minor changes in the land levels are also recorded in the reports sent to the Kure naval station from the Yamato, Koshu, Matsuye, and Musashi stations. The special service ships engaged in surveying the land levels and sea bed found that Yokosuka was elevated by two ft. Uraga 29 inches, Kensaki 12 inches, Misaki five ft. Kamakura from one to eight ft. Enoshima two ft. and Manazurasaki eight ft. Atami, Shin-inetori and Shimoda subsided one foot. The eastern coast of the Izu peninsula dropped by 15 inches on the average.

Nojima Point on Boso peninsula rose five ft., Sunosaki four ft., Tateyama from four to five ft., Ukishima four ft., and Minato two ft. The Miura peninsula was elevated about four ft., and the western coast of the Boso peninsula five ft.—"Japan Chronicle."

PRINCE GEORGE'S COMING OF AGE

Garter Honour Conferrd

Prince George, the fourth son of the King and Queen, on December 21 celebrated the twenty-first anniversary of his birth. Throughout the day messages of congratulation were received at Buckingham Palace and at the Naval School at Greenwich, where the Prince is at present serving. During the morning his Royal Highness came up to Buckingham Palace from Greenwich to see their Majesties, and was invested by the King with the insignia of a Knight Companion of the Most Noble Order of the Garter.

The Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, and Prince Henry are already Knights of the Order.

Prince George was the recipient of messages of congratulation from all the members of the Royal Family, from foreign Sovereigns, from personal friends and public bodies in all parts of the United Kingdom, as well as from the Dominions Overseas and the Colonies. In the West End of London flags were flying from all the public buildings and from numerous large business establishments.

At Buckingham Palace a small family luncheon party was held but no special festivities took place. The real celebration of the event among the Royal Family was to take place at Sandringham during the Christmas house-party at York Cottage.

MESSAGE TO CITIZENS OF LONDON.

The Lord Mayor, on behalf of the citizens of London, conveyed to Prince George their congratulations and good wishes, and expressed the hope that in the near future his Royal Highness would honour them by taking up the Freedom of the City, to which he was entitled by patrimony.

To this message Prince George repied:

I thank you, my Lord Mayor and citizens of London, for your message of congratulation on my coming of age, which I much appreciate. I am greatly touched by your kind intention to honour me in the near future.

OUR PARIS LETTERS

Daudet Mystery Deepens: No Evidence of Anarchist Plot: Unrest in the Capital

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Dec. 14.

No one can accuse the police of not trying to throw light on the death of Philippe Daudet, or the Press of not seconding the efforts of the police.

The most interesting part of the information collected is that which relates to the anarchists among whom the unfortunate youth spent his last days. It may seem strange that the police should allow anarchists to preach their doctrines openly and even to publish such an organ as the "Libertaire," but when one comes to realize the nature of Anarchy, with a big A, as it is in the present year of grace, one begins to understand this official tolerance.

Anarchism is very different from what it was in the days of Vaillant and Emile Henri. It has ceased to throw bombs, and relies exclusively on propaganda. It is a form of dilletantism for disgruntled members of the bourgeoisie.

The "Libertaire," is run by a handful of long-haired youths who call themselves "companions" and bear a strong family resemblance to Mr. Simon Tappertit. They all emphatically disclaim having given Philippe Daudet any encouragement when he talked about "suppressing" anyone. So far, we have no evidence whatever that they plotted to turn Philippe against his father and friends. For the present, his departure from home, his wanderings and his sudden assumption of ideas in complete opposition to those with which he was brought up can only be considered as the freaks of a disordered brain. It is a painful incident in family life, but not in politics.

POLICE DEMONSTRATE.

The continued rise in the prices of necessaries has brought out an unusually serious symptom of discontent in Paris.

About 800 policemen in plain clothes assembled on Tuesday in front of the Hotel de Ville and sent a deputation to the Municipal Council asking for an increase of allowances. As the representatives of the Council naturally declined to have their hand forced in such a way, they refused, and the dissatisfied policemen became noisy. The heads of the force were hurriedly sent for. They harangued their subordinates, but in vain; there was a scuffle, and the head of the police, M. Guichard, was knocked down. His leg was hurt, and his clothes were spoilt.

The crowd then decided to "manifest" in front of the Chamber of Deputies. Uniformed police were sent in motor lorries to cut them off. They reached the Pont de la Concorde just in time to form a cordon, but it was too weak to resist the pressure, and was giving way when reinforcements arrived, and the malcontents were driven back and eventually dispersed after another scuffle, in which another police official was knocked down and an officer of the Republican Guard—the semi-military, semi-police force which assists in maintaining order in the capital—received a punch in the face from a malcontent, who was immediately arrested. Seven others were also taken into custody, but were released, and escaped with disciplinary punishments. The man who used his fists is to be prosecuted for assault. Fifteen other men, all young members of the force, have been suspended.

ALLOWANCES FOR DEAR LIVING.

There is no reason to suppose that this sudden and unexpected incident indicates a general weakening of discipline among the Paris police. It springs from the conviction, which is widespread in France, that patience and forbearance are useless when one has a grievance, and that the only way of obtaining satisfaction is to threaten and make a noise. The Paris policemen are only a section of the vast body of public officials who are agitating for a yearly allowance of Frs. 1,800 in addition to their salaries, which were fixed long before the cost of living reached its present figure. Allowances for dear living, residence and children already exist, but, in the vast majority of cases, they do not amount to anything like Frs. 1,800. Two days before the police incident, meetings of officials were held all over France, and resolutions demanding the Frs. 1,800 were voted.

In Paris, the meeting was followed by an attempt to march to the boulevards, and the police had to charge the crowd several times before it could be dispersed. Some years ago the Government of the day—very unwisely, in the opinion of many responsible people—allowed public officials to form associations, which are really trade unions, and this has encouraged them to bring pressure to bear on the authorities.

The Minister of Finance has now proposed increases, ranging from 33 to 50 per cent, in allowances, thus implicitly acknowledging the strength of the officials' associations, making further taxation almost inevitable, and adding to the cost of living which the Government is supposed to be trying to keep down. It remains to be seen whether the Government will have sufficient courage to cut down the great army of functionaries so that it can pay the survivors a living wage without overstraining the already embarrassed national finances.

ACTRESS'S SUIT AGAINST COMEDIE FRANCAISE.

Mme. Silvain, of the Comédie Francaise, is bringing a curious action against M. Emile Fabre, the official who acts as director of this celebrated theatre.

It was recently announced in the newspapers that the committee of members of the Comédie had decided to ask three members to retire at the end of 1924. These three were Mme. Silvain and her husband, and M. Duflos. Mme. Silvain considers that the announcement is calculated to damage her credit, and, not being able to tackle the entire Press she is trying to fasten the responsibility of the disclosure on M. Fabre, who had nothing to do with the decision and had no interest whatever in making it public. It is of course an unpleasant business for M. and Mme Silvain, who naturally decline to admit that their powers are on the wane, but, if the older members are to be allowed to go on until they lag superfluous on the stage, how is the troupe to be rejuvenated?

The Comédie Francaise is in reality an association of actors who own a theatre and a repertoire and work them under the control of the Ministry of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, which also provides them with a subsidy. As the members are not numerous enough to keep the theatre going, they engage outsiders, known as pensioners, who, after a year's trial, may become members. The latter receive a fixed salary, a small fee every time they play, and a share in the profits. The shares are divided into twelfths, and the members decide among themselves how many twelfths each is to receive.

At present only ten have twelve twelfths, that is to say, one full share. Newly elected members usually begin with three twelfths. An increase in any member's share of course means so much less for someone else, and those at the top must go if new recruits are to paid. The earnings of the leading members now amount to about Frs. 60,0000 a year—very little in comparison with the salaries of artistes of the same rank in England and the United States.

Trial of Girl Anarchist for Political Murder: Professional Witness No More

Dec. 21.

The trial of Germaine Berton, the anarchist girl who went to the office of the "Action Francaise," the Royalist organization, and shot the secretary, M. Marius Plateau, "to encourage the others," was not likely to take place in an atmosphere of judicial calm, and, so far, it has quite fulfilled expectations. Counsel for the defence and counsel for the dead man's relatives have waged war politely but unceasingly over every scrap of testimony, raising such clamour in court, where the fiery spirits of both camps sit cheek by jowl glaring ferociously at one another and only waiting for the opportunity to let off steam, that the presiding judge has several times been compelled to put on his toque and withdraw with his assessors. In a British court of justice, it is customary for the people who make the noise to be put out, but we manage things differently in France.

In the course of five days we have heard so much about politics and plots, and what magistrates think about prisoners they have examined, and what the royalists think about the police, that we have rather lost sight of the leading figure in the drama—the slip of a girl who, when placed in the dock, calmly took off her hat and coat and proceeded to "make up" her face. One wonders what expression that face wore when she was emptying her revolver into the man who had his back turned to her! She says that she felt qualms, but M. Plateau had laughed at the proletariat and made fun of their misery, and as she could not get at M. Léon Daudet, whom she regarded as the chief offender, she considered that his lieutenant must be made to pay for him. She maintains that she acted entirely on her own initiative, and the prosecution has certainly not brought forward any evidence of participation by Red extremists, or, in fact, any sign of the existence of a malevolent organization which, if we may believe the Royalists, is ever on the look-out to slay M. Léon Daudet, M. Charles Maurras and other apostles of the creed represented by that remarkably unobtrusive pretender the Duke of Orleans.

A VERY PLACID PLOTTER.

One of the witnesses was M. Maurice Pujo, of the "Action Francaise," who is supposed to be the organizer of Royalist "manifestations" in Paris. He turned out to be a remarkably placid personage, who stroked his beard thoughtfully and held forth at length on the philosophic vicissitudes of his youth, his dissatisfaction with the established order of things, his conviction that democracy is all rubbish, and his final evolution as a Royalist. The strangest witness of all was a detective named Chassigneux, who calmly asserted that he overheard a telephone conversation between two police chiefs, M. Guichard and Ducrocq, in which one of these officials recommended the other to make some alterations in a report on the Berton case, and to say nothing about it to the Prefect of Police. The two officials, who are furious, affirm that their conversation has been utterly misunderstood. Counsel for the prisoner inquired sarcastically how it came about that "Action Francaise" spies were to be found even in the telephone service of the Prefecture of Police itself. We shall probably never know whether Chassigneux testified in good faith or was merely put up by the Royalists to annoy the police chiefs and damage their credit. The Royalists are certainly quite alive to the possibilities presented by the Seine Assize Court.

THE PROFESSIONAL WITNESS.

If the Senate agrees with the Chamber, the days of the professional witness are numbered. As the law stands at present, the declaration of a birth or death cannot be registered unless two témoins patentés certify the identity of the declarer. The legislator's idea no doubt was that anyone who pays the patente, or trade tax, is ipso facto a responsible citizen and therefore eminently suitable to prove that M. Durand, who comes more or less gleefully to announce that a baby has been born to him, really is the person he pretends to be. In theory, M. Durand should ask his grocer or his baker to accompany him to the registry office, but he is quite aware that neither of these citizens would receive with favour the proposal that they should leave their business to attend to his. In practice, the witnesses are a few small tradesmen who live near the registry office, and make a business of solemnly certifying complete strangers.

These professional witnesses are never asked if they know the declarer: their signatures are supposed to be enough. Not long ago an altercation took place outside a Paris registry office between a happy father and his witnesses, to whom he had offered three francs apiece. They told him that five francs was the recognized fee, and when the clerk in charge scolded them and threatened to refuse their signatures in future, they complained bitterly that he was taking the bread out of their mouths! They had gone on so long giving these farcical attestations that they had come to look upon themselves as semi-official personages! A Bill to amend the Civil Code, so that witnesses will no longer be required for the registration of births and deaths, has been adopted without debate by the Chamber and is now before the Senate.

ROUND THE THEATRES.

The theatrical output of Paris is as luxuriant as ever. In spite of all we hear about the difficulty of running theatres and the heavy taxation imposed on them, somebody who has made money in some other form of enterprise always seems to come forward to finance the production of new plays. "J'ai une idée," an adaptation of "Tons of Money," has begun well, thanks to the inimitable Max Dearly, who almost makes French spectators forget that the typical English farcical comedy is scarcely entitled to be called a play at all but rather a collection of absurdities. A new piece of a very different type is "La Maison Natale," by M. Jacques Copeau, at the Théâtre du Vieux Colombier, a remarkable theatre which has given great encouragement to dramatic pioneers and is recognized as having a place of its own. Three strongly marked characters—a youth of eighteen, his father and his grandfather—are painted with great sobriety and skill by M. Copeau, who himself plays the grandfather. The Grand Guignol's latest hair-raiser, "Les Damnés," brings in a new stage effect. A man is thrown out of a window into a street through which a horde of wild Spanish bulls is being stampeded. The sounds of the maddened animals' hoofs, the shouts of the men who goad them on with lances and flaming torches, and the atmosphere of terror and anticipation prevailing in the town are very well reproduced.

BOLSHEVIKS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Moscow's Latest Move

Johannesburg. Dec. 12.—Information has reached the police that an attempt is being made in Communist circles at Johannesburg to inaugurate an "International Red Aid Fund," with the aim of amassing contributions to be devoted to securing the release of the Communists now imprisoned. The word for this amazing movement has been given to the Rand from Moscow, and is regarded as a further attempt to subvert the authority of existing Governments and prepare the way for general anarchy as a prelude to a world-revolution. Funds from Russia for the purpose have already been sent to Poland, Lithuania, Italy, Turkey, Esthonia, Roumania, Jugo-Slavia, China, and Bulgaria, to help in the "great work" of freeing burglars, robbers, and murderers, who have all sinned against the laws of decent conduct. The Rand Bolsheviks are asking for funds in the following terms: "Fellow workers of South Africa, what are you prepared to do? Follow the line of international solidarity, join the International Red Aid, and make your contributions, however small, in aid of the great work undertaken by the international proletariat."

THE detailed boredom of official red tape in certain circles came to light the other day, when a motor-car representative applied to a local consulate and invoiced a shipment of 10 Ford cars to Japan. The irony of it all lay in the fee of £4 for the certification of the fact that these cars had been made in America and not in China.

NEW POISON GAS

Remains Operative in One Place Seven Days

A poison gas which when released will remain operative in one place for several days has been discovered by Mr. F. N. Pickett, an engineer engaged on breaking up dumps of war material in France.

"In the war," he said to a "Daily News" representative, "there were two main gases—lethal gas, which affected the heart and the lungs, and which dispersed rather quickly, and irritant gas, which affected the eyes and remained operative for some time. Commercially I examined these gases, and many thousand canisters of poison gas have been put to commercial use. A scientific interest led me to experiment and I discovered a lethal gas which will persist for seven or eight days.

"No mask yet invented would be able to withstand it, and I am now trying to find an antidote."

A VIENNA POISON DRAMA

Woman Secretary's Amazing Crime

Vienna, Dec. 16.—Milica Vukobrankovics, formerly a schoolmistress here, whose ancestors sat on the Throne of Serbia in the Fifteenth Century, who was accused of an attempt at murder by poison, was sentenced yesterday to three and a half years imprisonment with hard labour for causing grievous bodily harm. The five days' trial of this beautiful and highly-intelligent woman of 29 caused considerable sensation, as this was the second time that she had been accused of having attempted to poison the wife of a man she loved in order to marry the widower. The first case occurred five years ago, when Vukobrankovics made a futile attempt to kill by arsenic the wife of the school inspector, Piffl. She was acquitted of attempted murder at that time, as an insufficient number of the members of the jury found her guilty of that crime, and she was only sentenced to two years for libel, as she had thrown false suspicion on Piffl's adopted son.

This time Vukobrankovics was accused of having attempted to murder the wife and two sons of a bookseller, Stülpnagel, by mixing a considerable quantity of white lead among flour and powdered sugar bought for them. Shortly after serving the first sentence she obtained a post in the office of Stülpnagel, to whom her past was unknown, and soon became his secretary, thanks to her zeal and intelligence. Subsequently there were also illicit relations between her employer and herself, and, expecting the birth of a child, she desired Stülpnagel to divorce his wife and marry her.

As Stülpnagel refused, she conceived the plan to make away with his wife and two sons by poison, and all the members of the family fell seriously sick. When the doctor recognized the cause of the disease, and when an analysis of the foodstuffs in the store-room was imminent, Vukobrankovics confessed her deed to her lover, asking him to remove the poisoned food; but no fewer than 15 packages containing poisoned flour and sugar were seized by the police.

The prisoner, jeering at the presiding Judge and the medical experts, defended herself extremely cleverly. She tried to convince the jury that she was temporarily insane at a critical time, while the Medical Faculty of the University declared her sane, though hysterical and degenerate. The jury, impressed by her and by the counsel for the defence, found her only guilty of causing bodily harm and not of attempted murder. "Morning Post."

DOING THE WILL OF GOD

A Sermon preached by the Rev. A. N. Rowland in Union Church, Shanghai, on January 27, 1924

"Doing the will of God." Eph. VI. 6.

According to my faint recollection of the book of Euclid, it consists of theorems and problems. Theorems to be demonstrated or explained and problems to be done. The Will of God has often been treated as a theorem to be explained by theologians, and there is an illustration of this in the Epistle to the Romans, whose famous chapters 9-11 were once taken as the pivot of the Christian faith. But in the rest of the New Testament the Will of God is something to be done, as when our Lord taught his disciples to pray "Thy Will be done on earth as it is in heaven," or when he was not ashamed to call them brethren "Whosoever doeth the Will of my Father the same is my brother and sister and mother," or again when he was addressing those who put their traditions above his truth "If any man will do His Will he shall know of the doctrine." Gospels and Epistles are full of this fundamental Christian thought

THE INSCRUTABLE POWER.

This standpoint, however, has been very reluctantly admitted by the Church of Christ. Many thinkers have identified the Will of God with the Power that works above our heads and aside from our hearts, without consideration for us or co-operation from us. Such was the view of the Calvinists who so long swayed the mind of Western Europe and the Puritan States of America. It was a tonic doctrine for the few, but it meant laissez faire for the average man. Besides those who have thought on the matter the man in the street, and many an old woman in her cottage, has hastily identified the Will of God with every misfortune and disaster, and the references to it in our popular hymns are invariably melancholy. There is of course much evidence in favour of these views, for events do happen that contradict our best desires and our wisest judgment—things that seem to our short-sightedness unfair and intolerable. But whether we believe with the Calvinist that this inscrutable Power works out to noble ends or accept the supposition of the unbeliever that it drifts on an undirected tide; it is more putalistic than Christian. For, according to the mind of Christ the Will of God is above all something to be done, a Power with which we are called to co-operate, if not with an enlightened understanding, at least with a educated will

HOW ST. FRANCIS SAW IT.

In the 12th century in Italy there was a Christian Exodus to the fastnesses of Calabria from the fear of Corsairs and the general unsettlement. There they lived as hermits in a solitude between two seas and the Will of God to them was a theorem. But before that generation passed Francis of Assisi organized his grey friars into a society for compassionate service where the need was greatest and took up the Will of God as something to be done in the spirit of Christ. And I put it to you that it is a more solemn and inspiring view of life to believe that God's will is to be thought of not as the pressure upon us but rather as the persuasion within us, that it does not ask for our mere resignation but rather for our response with all that is within us.

THE CHOLERA IN OXFORD.

It was just 70 years ago, in 1854, that cholera broke out in the city of Oxford, and according to the prevailing belief it was described as the Will of God which, most of the clergy said, caused the question. But Henry Acland, whose venerable figure I well remember, was then Professor of medicine, and he led a crusade against the evil on the ground that the Will of God might be read in the book of Leviticus with its laws of health and sanitation, and still more clearly in the word of our Lord. "It is the Will of your Father in heaven that not one of these little ones should perish." His life long friend John Ruskin said, "Physiology was to him an entrusted gospel of which he was the solitary preacher to the heathen." By the spirit of his endeavour be helped to make a revolution in theology. And was he not right? Was he not in accord with the revelation in the New Testament? There was a mystery of God's Will in the cross, but there was a manifestation of that Will in Christ who, as we believe, conquered the cross, by winning good from it for all the world. There will always remain an aspect of the divine Will which cannot be understood, but as Christians we are to focus that Will as something to be done. The thought is expressed in

THE PRAYER OF PARACELSUS.

"Dost thou intend
To work man's welfare through my weak endeavour,
To crown my mortal forehead with a beam
From Thine own blinding crown, to smile, and guide
This puny hand and let the work so wrought
Be styled my work?"

If that is true let us not identify the Will of God with any disquieting or destructive event until we have put the courage and patience of our faith against it. God's Will has not been finally expressed until our effort has been given to make the very best of things. In his admirable book on Robert Louis Stevenson, Dr. John Kelman said: "Destiny was always present to his imagination, yet its effect was always bracing and tonic. His motto was to waylay destiny and bid him stand and deliver." There are many who dwell on the element of destiny in the Will of God and sit down resignedly, as the three friends of Job counselled him to do, but with a grand faith he anticipated the day of Christ, believing there was a means of fellowship with the eternal behind the stroke of fate, and saints, apostles, prophets, martyrs have confirmed his instinct that the Will of God is not indifferent to our partnership, but is perfected in what we are given grace to do.

WAYLAYING DESTINY.

Take for instance such an event as the earthquake in Japan. The cause of so much sorrow is a mystery: "clouds and darkness are round about Him." But we are not to identify the Will of God with that mystery prematurely, for the divine Will has first to be operated through His children along lines of character in the footsteps of Christ. All that was called forth of fortitude and of compassion, that was the real manifestation of God's Will, and by that means it is still being done.

Take again the case of a riot in a city or a revolution in the state. Is that to be regarded as the Will of God? It would be fatal to the human commonwealth to do so. It must first be met in the name of justice and wisdom, in the spirit of loyalty and comradeship. The result may be that the event changes its complexion, is exposed as an evil. Only then when our human best has been done can we know the Will of God.

Once more in the case of bereavement, when some mother or wife is left to mourn, is the divine Will to be read only in the bitter loss? Surely that would be looking in the wrong direction, for it is rather shown when the mourner puts her faith firmly in Christ, leans her weight trustfully on God. Then indeed God's Will is done: it is shown not so much in her burden as in her bravery, not at all in her collapse but in her courage.

FREEDOM AND THE MOUNTAINS.

Mr. G. K. Chesterton was once showing that physical conditions do not fix a nation's fate, and pointed out that if people attributed the freedom of the Swiss to their mountains it would be hard to account for the equal freedom of the Dutch. The Will of God is not to be read in the mountains that confront a people or defend them but in the freedom they achieve.

When will this truth be frankly acknowledged and freely acted on in the church? There is surely a leaven of Paganism or Mohammedanism when we identify God's Will with what oppresses, hurts or saddens us, and read it only in life's misfortune and misadventures. The real Will of God as we know it in Christ is expressed in the measure of character that is called forth in response. It never merely happens; we cannot be sure of it until it is done.

How do you read the Will of God in your life? Only in the happenings and events? That may easily leave us discontented, cynical and hard. But since the Incarnation it is impossible for a Christian to think of God only acting from outside us or in any way at our expense. We prove our Christian faith by realizing that the Will of God is fulfilled in the believing and faithful response we make, in the good will we manifest with all our strength, "Work out therefore your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God who worketh in you both to will and do of His good pleasure and ye have need of patience that after ye have done the Will of God ye might receive the promises."

A LORD IN THE LOCK-UP

Poet Versus Politician: The Case of Lord Alfred Douglas

From Our Manchester Correspondent.

Lord Alfred Douglas is a poet, an undischarged bankrupt, an ex-editor of the "Academy," and the eldest surviving son of the 8th Marquess of Queensberry. The casual reader might infer from this that there is something Byronic about his Lordship. There isn't, although like Byron he is also an ardent politician. His troublous career commenced with a close association with Oscar Wilde. After Wilde's downfall he became his most bitter enemy and attacked that gentleman's apologist in "The Rossiad." In 1907 he became the editor of the "Academy" until then an exclusively literary paper. For three years he made it the vehicle of scurrilous attacks on everyone he disagreed with, from Messrs. W. H. Smith, the railway bookstall owners, to Mr. Lloyd George. His editorship ceased in 1910, and was succeeded by a series of bitter quarrels with his father-in-law and wife, culminating in a famous law suit. He was declared bankrupt in 1913, and towards the end of the war he became active in the "Hidden Hand" controversies. It may be remembered that there were two wings to that alarmist agitation. One ascribed every disaster to the Germans, who were supposed to be still active in our midst. This had most popularity among the most ignorant of the working classes and had Bottomley and Pemberton Billing for its prophets. The other ascribed every British war catastrophe to the Jews; had its supporters in a higher strata of society; its press in the "Morning Post," and its prophets in people like Lord Alfred Douglas.

In 1921 Lord Alfred Douglas was editor of an obscure alarmist periodical "Plain English," financed by a wealthy Scotchman. It was anti-Semitic, anti-Bolshevik, anti-prohibitionist, and its two particular stunts were "facts" proving that Lord Kitchener was murdered, and that the accounts of the Battle of Jutland were manipulated to enable Jewish financiers to bring off a great financial coup. In regard to the latter it published an article on January 1, 1921, entitled "More Jutland Revelations." It was there alleged that the late Sir Ernest Cassel, a German born in Germany, had corspired with Mr. Winston Churchill to issue a false account of the Battle of Jutland, the effect of which would depress British stocks on neutral markets. As a result of this false report it was alleged that the syndicate with which Sir Ernest Cassel was connected made £53,000,000, Sir Ernest Cassel was alleged to have given Mr. Winston Churchill £40,000 worth of furniture for his assistance in the plot.

WILDER AND WILDER STILL.

Mr. Churchill drew the attention of the Attorney General to these allegations, but was advised not to prosecute, as it was sometimes not advisable to give that publicity to the baseless charges of an unscrupulous individual they would otherwise not receive. Mr. Churchill now believes that this course played into the hands of his political opponents during the 1922 General Election at Dundee, for the Communists in that town made great use of the fact that these assertions went uncontradicted. Immunity from prosecution certainly made Lord Alfred Douglas bolder, and in the present trial he informed the judge that he considered he "had a prescriptive right to repeat these assertions as they were uncontradicted," a point of view that throws an illuminating sidelight on his mentality. To some extent the "Morning Post" agreed with him, but they printed a letter from a correspondent protesting against the lies Lord Alfred was inventing about the Jews. For doing this he prosecuted them for libel. At the trial Lord Balfour and Mr. Winston Churchill denied on oath the stories Lord Alfred Douglas was circulating, and he was awarded a farthing damages and ordered to pay his own costs.

Shortly after this trial Lord Alfred made a speech in London in which he repeated all his previous charges against Mr. Churchill. It was reported in a Galashiels newspaper, and he bought 30,000 copies of the issue and gave them the widest circulation. Mr. Churchill communicated with the Attorney General again, and Lord Alfred Douglas was arrested and charged with publishing a malicious and defamatory libel on him. He was tried last week at the Old Bailey and pleaded justification. The trial excited enormous interest in Great Britain and gave newspaper readers a not unwelcome change from their recent surfeit of political and election news.

LEGAL ABUSE.

A notable feature of the case was the unmeasured abuse of Mr. Churchill by Mr. Cecil Hayes, the counsel for the defendant. This vituperative attack on a famous man is said to be unprecedented in the annals of the law courts, and it is expected that the Law Society will take the matter up.

Lord Balfour was called as a witness by the prosecution. He stated that he was responsible for drawing up and circulating the official report on the Battle of Jutland. Later he received a telegram from the Commander-in-Chief and he drew up a further report in his own handwriting embodying the information given in the Admiral's communiqué Mr. Churchill had nothing whatever to do with the document.

In his evidence Mr. Churchill described how he came to write the appreciation of the Battle of Jutland for the neutral press. Lord Balfour asked him to do so, and he had no choice, nor any other inclination but to do it. He denied that he stayed at Sir Ernest Cassel's house the weekend before the communiqué was published. He stayed there on June 17, (a fortnight later). His early books and Boer war correspondence brought him in from eight to 10,000 pounds. Of this he gave Sir Ernest Cassel £6,000 to invest for him. In 1905 he received £8,000 for his father's biography and gave another £6,000 to Sir Ernest Cassel to invest. In 1905 Sir Ernest Cassel furnished his library for him in South Molton Street, and three years later gave him £500 for a wedding present. Apart from this he had received nothing from him. His recent war book had brought him £15,000. Sir Ernest Cassel had never tried to influence him in political matters or in the discharge of his official duties.

A DOUBTFUL HELP.

The chief witness for the defendant was "Captain" Harold Spencer, a gentleman with a very dubious reputation. He had been twice convicted by the civil powers, and had been deprived of his title of "Captain" through being sent to prison. He had also been certified as suffering from delusional insanity and had been confined to hospital in Salonika for mental trouble. He was made editor of "Plain English" after Lord Alfred Douglas had relinquished that post. He stated at the trial that he saw Winston Churchill at a banquet at Dundee and said to him, "Your Jutland report was a bit thick wasn't it?" and Churchill replied, "What do you care? We did it to get money out of the Yanks." Spencer also said that he dined with Sir Edward Pack on June 2, 1916, and Sir Edward told him that the communiqué was "Winston's work."

This not very relevant evidence was all the defence put forward in support of their plea of justification. The rest of their case consisted of innuendo and abuse. Lord Alfred's counsel appealed to the jury not to be led away by the charm of Mr. Churchill's manner. "He is nothing stripped of the kudos of the right honourable and such things." "He is a professional politician, and a professional politician may be defined as a man with a hide like a rhinoceros, a skin like a chameleon, a short memory, and the cheek of the devil." "I do not suppose if we live for 100 years we should find a Minister with the ability of Mr. Churchill or a man of the financial genius of Sir Ernest Cassel. You could never prove a case against them unless you had an intellect equal to theirs." "You do not suppose they would leave tracks behind them like some of the unfortunate people who come to the Old Bailey." "Either a rising financier had need of a rising Cabinet Minister, or a rising Cabinet Minister had need of a rising financier. One had brains and the other had money." "Had the Gallipoli adventure succeeded Mr. Churchill would have taken the glory for it." "It was a most extraordinary thing that Lord Balfour, who was a master of the English language and one of our ablest writers, should have called in Mr. Churchill to compose this short and simple document." "Mr. Churchill's book admitted 100 times more than Lord Alfred Douglas accused him of." Thus Mr. Hayes.

JUDGE'S SEVERE COMMENT.

Lord Alfred Douglas's evidence was characterized by wild abuse of a similar type, interspersed with petulant outbreaks of temper when the judge attempted to bring him back to the point. In summing up Mr. Justice Avory described Mr. Cecil Hayes' speech in defence of Lord Douglas as "a diatribe on politicians and vituperative abuse of Mr. Churchill," and said that in his long experience of the Bar and on the Bench he did not believe that any counsel in any court of law had ever been allowed greater latitude than had been allowed to Mr. Cecil Hayes in this case. After recounting Lord Alfred Douglas's previous conviction for libel, and his subsequent re-arrest for contempt of court, he sentenced him to six months' imprisonment in the second division, and ordered that at the expiration of that time if Lord Alfred could not find surety of £100 to keep the peace, especially in reference to Mr. Churchill, he should go to prison again for an additional six months.

Now the trial is over it is easy to see how good was the advice that the Attorney General gave Mr. Winston Churchill when he said that it was sometimes better to ignore the libels of unscrupulous persons than give them the publicity of prosecution. To anyone capable of weighing the pros and cons of evidence it is clear that there was no shadow of truth in the libels of Lord Alfred Douglas. But it is also true that the average popular newspaper reader has been so industriously spoon-fed by the great syndicated press with stunts and scurrility that he has now lost most of his old power of coolly judging evidence on its merits. And so one finds that the average man who had never heard of the obscure periodical "Plain English," and who was

[illegible] Policy: "The Next War"

By Brig.-Gen. C. B. Thomson.

[illegible] war days, was not only a great moving international highway; it [illegible] waters brought prosperity to many [illegible] serene and splendid, though awe-[illegible] even where it formed a frontier [illegible] empty. During a two-day journey made last August from Giurgiu, in Roumania, up stream through the Iron Gate to Belgrade, only three ships were passed. In every river port vessels were lying idle, with hundreds of empty or half-empty lighters. On the railway sidings at the Iron Gate sheep were grazing between the rails; a dozen locomotives stood there like melancholy symbols of decay, ren-[illegible] cranks and pistons.

An old [illegible] experience of the Danube, expressed the opinion that the stagnation of trade in this part of Europe had become more marked since the French occupation of the Ruhr. [illegible] typically cosmopolitan; it consisted traders, journalists, and [illegible] adians and Americans, and they greeted this remark with muttered maledictions on the French and all their ways.

"THE TAINT OF ARMAMENTS."

The episode was curious and significant. Officially, Roumania, Jugo-Slavia, and even Bulgaria were and still are pro-French; the two former because France poses as the sole champion of the Treaties to which they owe so much. [illegible] Bulgaria; it takes full advantage of the inertia of the British, and so far has outdone in publicity and push the more subtle but less energetic methods of the Italians. This calculation overlooks a [illegible] which need not necessarily involve [illegible] especially in England, people are tempted not to face it or to dis-[illegible] horror. While travelling from Eastern into Western Europe, the [illegible] French Government persists in its present course, a renewal of the conflict is inevitable. And with this conviction goes another—that so far as their Eastern Allies are concerned, the French will fight alone. The system of alliances in Eastern Europe, on which France relies, is a crazy structure, whose architects have taken their ambitions and desires for realities: in will dissolve at the first shock of war, and is already being disintegrated by cross currents of race, religion, and vocation.

In the Balkans, for example, radical changes must occur as the result of Russian influence. The informed Frenchman has written recently: "The Serbs will understand, or Russia will make them, that the future of Slavdom demands their descending in company with the Bulgars to one of the seas from which British policy has always shut out their race. They will march on Salonika while the subjects of Tsar Boris descend from the Rhodopes, where they are held by artificial Treaties, to install themselves at Kavalla. . . . A Jugo-Slavia thus engaged, and with one eye on Italy, would neither be inclined nor able to fight the battles of France.

[illegible] further north, the same French writer states: "The Little Entente will break up. . . . Poland will die, this time a tragic death, or else return to a Slav policy and federation with the Russian State. . . ." Soviet Russia has small reason to be France's friend; whereas, in certain eventualities, Germany might be able to count on her support. There remains Roumania as France's ally in Eastern Europe. In the circumstances of such a war, the position of this country would be one of utter helplessness; her army would be even more isolated and in the air than it was in the World War.

"THE GREAT GREEN UNION."

Again, there is in Central and Eastern Europe a new movement which cuts athwart both politics and nationalities, and which is at once vocational and religious. It [illegible] called the "Great Green [illegible] organize the peasants in these regions under the ægis of the Roman Catholic Church. The progress of this movement will be slow and tentative; but its tendencies will be pacific rather than warlike, and it may in time become a potent and restraining force. AMERICA'S CAPITAL SHIPS

Increasing Their Gunnery Range: Official Propaganda

[illegible] Mr. Denby, Secretary of the discussion of the question of the elevation of the guns in some of the American battleships, was the [illegible] appropriation in that matter.

It will be remembered that last [illegible] the Navy [illegible] to Congress that the guns of some of the British battleships had been elevated, this increasing their range, and, therefore, disturbing the 5-5-3 ratio laid down by the Washington Naval Agreement. It was maintained that it was necessary for the Navy Department to take similar measures to preserve the ratio intact. On this representation Congress made an appropriation of $6,500,000.

When this was done, representations were made by the British Embassy to the State Department, showing that the information of the Navy Department was incorrect, that none of the guns in any British battleship had been touched, nor was there any intention of altering them and thus increasing their range. If the American Navy increased the range of guns, it was pointed out, it would be contrary to the spirit of the Agreement, as the British Navy would be compelled to follow suit, and, in spite of the purpose of the Agreement being to limit competitive naval strength, there would again be competition in naval armaments.

MR. HARDING'S DECISION.

On the strength of these representations, the late President refused to allow the money appropriated to be used, or permit anything to be done that could in any way be regarded as even technically infringing the Treaty. The Navy Department, however, has always protested against Mr. Harding's decision, and for many months has kept up active propaganda through the Press to impress upon the country and Congress the superiority of the British Fleet over the American, and the inferior range of the American capital ships as compared with the British. As a matter of fact, the American Navy possesses three battleships —the Colorado, West Virginia, and Maryland—now in commission, which carry heavier batteries, and whose guns have a greater range than any ship in the British Navy.

Mr. Denby has asked that the $6,500,000 appropriated last year be re-appropriated for the purpose originally intended, and presents an argument purporting to show that this would not contravene the spirit or letter of the Treaty. The Secretary's report having only been laid before Congress yesterday, it is, of course, too early to say what action Congress will take, or whether President Coolidge will sanction the expenditure, or, like his predecessor, take the view that it would be contrary to the intent of the Agreement.

[illegible] It is true that the Government has [illegible] the Hypothec Bank and the Industrial Bank of Japan to advance building funds on easy terms (states the Japan Advertiser") but then, the Engineers' Association insists, is not sufficient, and if a repetition of the recent disaster is to be forestalled, they say, Japan should learn to the formation of a corporation which would make it its [illegible] The statement of the Engineers' Association, which is a fairly lengthy one, goes on to say that, [illegible] fire, Tokio was full of small houses, and the presence of crowded small houses in the city defeated every effort to introduce sanitation and order. If house-[illegible] their houses separately and without any proper and expert direction, they maintain, it is certain that similar small houses in large numbers will spring up again. Only a strongly-financed and efficiently-managed building corporation, which is given authority to give guidance to householders, can prevent this and instead of numerous small houses improved and more sanitary habitations would be the result, they say.

If the corporation has control of all building enterprises in Tokio it can easily introduce standardization in building and obtain the fruits of quantity production. This is believed by the association to go a long way in lowering the cost of building and in lightening the burden of the afflicted people.

The association adds that this new recommendation to the general public and Government is made because the public does not attach proper importance to its recent recommendation and the matter is being almost forgotten.

AT THE KAISER'S COURT

Ex-Chamberlain's Revelations

By C. H. Clarke.

Count Zedlitz Trutzschler's book, "Twelve Years at the German Imperial Court," which has just appeared in Berlin, falls like a blight on the hopes of all German nationalists and Royalists, and destroys the dreams they may have entertained of a return of the "good old times." Its author has been repudiated by all societies of former officers, both of the Army and the Navy. The German Association of Noblemen have excluded him from their ranks, and the head of his own family, Eberhard Freiherr you Zedlitz Neukirch, formerly Colonel in the Royal Army of Prussia, turns with publicly expressed words of disgust and indignation from his relation. The reason for this excess of condemnation is that there can be no doubt as to the accuracy and veracity of the picture drawn by Count Zedlitz Trützschler of the Kaiser's Court during the 12 years 1898 to 1910, in which he occupied the office of Court Chamberlain to William II., a position which offered opportunities to observe both the private and public life of the Sovereign enjoyed by no other official, either military or political.

Count Zedlitz Trützschler's own plea of justification is that Germany's catastrophe is the logical consequence of submitting to a system of personal government, and that only the recognition of this fact can guarantee the nation from similar errors and their dire consequences in the future.

THE COURT FOOL.

The picture unrolled by the late Chamberlain is certainly of a nature to surprise even those who knew that there was "something rotten in the state of Denmark." The scenes of Court life recall German courts of the 17th Century, in which the Court fool occupied a prominent position, and it is difficult to realize that some of the events related and some of the utterances attributed to the Kaiser date back but a few years in our present century.

The weird story of the death of the Kaiser's Chief of the Military Cabinet, Count Hüslen, who collapsed suddenly at the Castle of Donaueschingen on February 8, 1909, after having delighted his Majesty and the Court by the execution of a solo dance, dressed as a balleteuse, shows that the [illegible] Court [illegible] had been [illegible] by high military [illegible] to the [illegible] of the Head of the State. We have the Kaiser's own word for it that he disliked dry, formal reports, and on his appointment as Chief of the Military Cabinet begged General Freiherr von Lyncker to [illegible] dotes, the ex-Chamberlain explains, smacked more of buffoonery than of true humour. [illegible] Kaiser until they palled even on the most hardened and complished courtier.

ABSOLUTE AUTOCRACY.

No man, Count Trützschler says, was ever more ignorant of his surroundings than William II., and he was purposely kept in this ignorance by those who wished to derive advantage from it. He considered himself "a chosen instrument of God," and argued that as such he could do no wrong, as otherwise the responsibility would recoil upon the Deity. In this, Count Trützschler adds, he found the support of the Court clergy.

He boasted that he had never read the Constitution and knew nothing about it. "My subjects should simply do as I tell them. But they always want to think for themselves and make a mess of everything," he says to a professor who most heartily agrees with him. If his intentions were at variance with the laws of the land, then the laws must be changed immediately. "Newspapers," he is reported to have said, "I never read. What these donkeys say is a matter of indifference to me; if they continue to say things I do not like, I shall send an adjutant and have one or two editors shot." The Reichstag, he maintained, was only there to pay, and it was his intention to make them pay till they were "blue in the face." The only Minister who ever gained his wholehearted approbation was Kultusminister Studt, of whom the ex-Kaiser used to say: "He, at least, carries out all my orders exactly and cares about nothing else." In military and naval matters he set up his own opinion against that of the most experienced experts and railed at the Minister of War and the Chief of his Military Cabinet: "You old donkeys think you know better than I, because you are older!"

The book is full of Imperial sayings of this nature, and may rightly be described as one of the greatest indictments of personal government that has ever been published. It explains how a great nation fell from the height of power and ambition to the abject position now held by the German State.

THE BRITISH LABOUR GOVERNMENT AND ITS POLICY TO CHINA

A Great Chance to Be Grasped by the Chinese of National Recovery

By George E. Sokolsky.

Historically, the accession of the Labour Party to power will be noted as a bloodless revolution, as an event equalling in its significance to Bolshevik revolution in Russia. For with it, rises to power a new class, a new force, with ideals and experiences differing radically from those heretofore dominating British national and international politics. Whether the Labour cabinet remains in power for decades or months, British history will be different than it might have been had the control of power remained vested in the landed and capitalist classes.

The Labour party recognizes the condition and immediately proceeds to select in crucial positions men of international reputation in their particular fields of endeavour. In a word, it does not trust its own experience alone to carry it through, but rushes to experts originating largely in the aristocracy and the middle class, functioning previously under the system the Labourites plan to dethrone, expressing themselves rather in ideas than in actions but withal, undoubtedly competent to handle their work. In taking this step the Labour party has followed the Russian precedent, for when the Bolsheviks rose to power they utilized every group in the community capable of doing a job. But the Labourites differ from the Bolsheviks in what might perhaps be the essential difference between British and Russian character: The British found peaceful and constitutional methods of obtaining the assistance of men of other classes and other groups, while The Russians impressed those whom they needed into their service.

HINA HER OWN ENEMY.

Much will probably be written about this revolution of a speculative character as this year 1924 moves along. But to the person in China, British or otherwise, the accession of the Labour Party is a matter of the greatest moment, since it not only presages a new British, and therefore Anglo-American policy, toward China, but also sets an example to Young China for political conduct and the achievement of their ideals.

When one suggests that the Labour Party will adopt a new policy toward China, one overlooks that British policy is ever-developing and that whatever new policy is adopted can only be a still stronger expression of Lord Balfour's address on the return of Weihaiwei. At the Washington Conference, Great Britain placed herself on record definitely as opposing territorial aggrandizement in China and as favouring the Powers of the world giving China every opportunity to work out her national salvation unmolested by foreign interference. That China has not received the full measure of benefits as a result of the Washington Conference is due to the inability of the government in Peking to protect China's national interests. Had no bandit outrages taken place, had nine foreigners not been killed since the Lincheng incident, had the government in Peking shown a power and a disposition to control the intransigeant provinces which break treaties and the national law of China, another conference would have been held by now, in Peking, and at that conference it is more than probable that China would have made gains which would have equalled if not exceeded those made at Washington. Throwing the entire blame for the failure of the Tariff Conference to take place upon France's non-ratification of the agreement is evading fact. France might have been influenced to ratify had China not given her friends so hard a task by her own lack of seriousness.

A SORRY SPECTACLE.

For the government in Peking was hopelessly embroiled in a personal squabble with regard to the Presidency, an office which now brings with it only a little "face," no power, no control, no ability to serve the country. The younger men, those who are most virulent in their attacks upon friendly foreign critics of their country, were not checking the tide of military usurpation of authority, nor were they calling the attention of their own people to the fact that the world at large was regarding the spectacle, not of banditry in China, which is not so important, as of China frittering away her opportunities which is always tragic. In the South, Sun Yat-sen was attempting to establish another government, perhaps justifiably so, but ill-timed in view of the international position of his country. Wu Pei-fu did nothing to save the prestige of his government, the bandits in Honan being more active than others, the irresponsibility of government in his lands being more apparent than elsewhere. The Christian general appeared in the ugly light of a palace revolutionist, making and unmaking presidents, not for principle but at a price. It is true that this picture is frightful only to the ill-informed, that students of history may conjure up even uglier scenes in the stories of now-powerful nations, of the Cromwellian revolution and the aftermath of the Stuarts, in the beginning of Republican France, in America at several periods in her history, in Russia between Tsarism and Bolshevism, in South America for a century, in the Balkans since their independence. The tragedy is however that so logical a people as the Chinese will not learn, that they must gain knowledge by trial and error even as a baby learns to walk and that there is in the land a resistance to accepting the experience of history.

CHINA'S USUAL LUCK.

China's good luck, however, has not deserted her. The advent of the Labour Party to power encourages one to believe that at Downing Street China will now have a sympathetic ear, since the Labour Party will, for a time, surely renounce a "strong" attitude and will show toward weak and small nations an unusual leniency and friendship. Sun Yat-sen's message to the Labour Party was designed more to announce his knowledge of this possibility than to expect immediate support. It is however not to be overlooked that the actual management of the foreign office will probably be in the hands of Mr. Ponsonby, who was trained under Earl Grey of Falodon, then Mr. Grey, and that however liberal his views, he will protect British trade and commerce, upon which rests the strength of the Empire. Ramsay Macdonald, Arthur Henderson Viscount Haldane, and Phillip Snowden may be radicals, but they will probably experience the same awakening nationality in power as Lenin and Trotsky, who commenced their careers denouncing imperialism and publishing secret treaties and finally evolved a programme of world-wide imperialistic aspirations with a view toward the strengthening of their own country. Whatever a man's political views, in power he becomes the steward of national interests and it sobers him.

AN OPPORTUNITY TO GRASP.

China then will have to meet the Labour Party half way to maintain its sympathy and friendship. If, the Year of the Pig being over, the Chinese people buck up and take the situation in hand, if banditry ceases to the extent that it becomes personal as in most countries and not political as it has been in China; if flouting treaties ceases and instead a constructive effort is made to handle China's international difficulties by conference and agreement; if a real effort is made to organize power whether nationally or federatively so that life and property is protected, Downing Street will vie with Washington and the Asiatic Bureau in Tokio in championing China's cause. If, however, British life is lost in China through the fault of the Chinese government, it is building castles in the air to presume that any British government, however radical, will be quiescent. This is a thought for Young China, for here is an another opportunity which ought not to be missed.

AS OTHERS SEE SHANGHAI

Tribute to Immensity of Wayfoong's Building and to Its Great Enterprise

In its issue of December 13 "Fairplay" says:—

In days such as these, when ill-feeling in Europe still runs high and British prestige is, perhaps, not all it might be, a good tonic for the national spirits is being dispensed in the Far East, where the British banks, by their splendid work, have done much, not only to maintain that prestige, but to enhance it. Nowhere can this better be illustrated than in Shanghai, by the progress that this international, but still dominantly British, settlement has made under their influence during the past three or four years. Anyone familiar with the place as it was in 1919, what time peace, and its attendant chaos was being introduced to a gory Europe, would return in this present year of grace to find his recollections of the city so much scrap. He would look in vain for the Customs clock tower, whose office it was formerly, by virtue of superior inches, to welcome the traveller up the River Whangpoo from the draughty port of Woosung. The tower is there all right, but it has lost all its pristine individually beside a massive, domed silhouette, that has reared itself up king of a new landscape, out of which other lesser silhouettes, courtiers of the new dynasty, hold candles of lesser magnitude to the present Lord of the Bund—the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank building.

The approaching completion of this magnificent edifice, and the consequent acquisition by Shanghai of a bunch of feathers in its architectual cap, worthy of a Redskin chief, marks the culminating point—at any rate, for the time being—in a record of progress probably without equal in the history of banking. Founded in 1868, 14 years after the pioneer Mercantile Bank of India, and some 10 years after the Chartered Bank of I., A. and C. (speaking of the Far East, of course) the position now held by "Way Foong," as the Chinese call it, meaning Prosperity and Credit, of being the foremost banking institution in the Orient, is due to two circumstances, which explain, without in any way discrediting, the more leisurely rate of progress of its seniors. The first of these is its essentially Far Eastern origin, and the control of its policy by Far Eastern business men, the second is the genius of those men, who, aided by the first have guided that policy with a sureness of touch only possible to the man on the spot. Neither the Chartered nor the Mercantile Bank enjoy that advantage, and their advance has been, therefore, more cautious, but apart from that, as regards the esteem and confidence they inspire, there is nothing to choose between them, and the increasing prosperity of Shanghai and the Far East is the result.

WAYFOONG'S FAITH IN CHINA'S FUTURE.

Nothing could better illustrate the fearless and farseeing policy of the directors of "Way Foong," and their faith in China's future, than a recollection of the financial and industrial chaos which has attended the three years' growth of the new building—colossally expensive growth at that. It cannot be urged that the war in the West left the East untouched. Financially and commercially, as a review of the state of trade generally during the past few years will show, the East has by no means escaped the blight; morally, perhaps, the effect has been vague, the semi-finished state of Shanghai's war memorial, the fund that is not yet half-raised, show that the pocket of the Far East has suffered infinitely more severely than its heart. But even without this, one would imagine that the unwholesome state of China's internal economy, the fighting, the corruption, the banditry, and all the other devils that have long possessed this masquerade of a republic, would have had a stunting effect on the growing plumage of our Oofbird. This has not been the case; on the contrary, at a time when the foundations of things seemed to be crumbling, the Hongkong Bank rose serenely skyward, a monument to the business acumen of its guiding spirits, and of the power of its own brawny back to carry the majority of the great business hongs here through a depression which they could never have weathered alone.

Nowadays the helping hand is not quite so badly needed, and the time is surely coming when the development of China's trading possibilities is going to justify to the hilt the broad-minded policy that has made the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, ably seconded by the Mercantile, the Chartered, and the P. and O., such a tower of strength in a dark hour. From the beginning, the brains of "Way Foong" have recognized that the welfare of China is, and always will be, closely bound up with their own interests, and China in the end will find herself willy-nilly, reaping the benefit of an influence that has been consistently exerted for her good. A process of improvement that is not of their own originating is not going to appeal to the Chinese straight away, and a great deal of patient work has yet to be done before the bogey of "infringement of China's Sovereign Rights" is properly laid. But there can be no doubt that the good name of "Way Foong" is carrying daily more weight with the Oriental mind, and, though the student class may denounce the bank's sterling work as that of a bloodsucking octopus that is gripping their land, yet it is better that the vast untapped resources of that land should be sucked, even by an octopus, than that they should never be sucked at all. The present prosperity of Shanghai is sufficient proof of the good that will accrue, not only to China, but to the rest of the world as well, when she finally allows the bandage to be taken off her eyes.

THE LAMENT OF FONG CHUN

Even as the snow-flakes fall
Heavy, cold, shivering,
So may my curses light
On your roof-tops detestable.

As I have come wandering
(Over rivers, over mountains,
Just a poor relative unhonoured)
So may your prayers reach the stars unheard.

As I stand here
And plead for a sight of my beloved,
So may your heart stand lonely,
Shunned by caresses.

Robbers are plentiful,
Robbers, they say, are full of covetousness,
But a thousand times more covetous
Are the rich and the proud of heart.

You, O Aunt,
In your strength, your power and your riches,
Should not stand thus—
Uncaring whether we poor ones live or die.

We poor have only our bodies,
The flesh and blood of our fathers,
Whilst you, the rich, in your satins,
Your silks and your flowers abound.

Far is my mother's dwelling,
A long way distant is the well-spring of my village—
Here at your gate
I ponder alone and unheeded.

Wait—ye that have made me wait!
Cold to the wanderer,
Cold in your words, in your welcome—
Cold in your benches, your porridge, cold in the very lintel of your doorstep,

Wait—and graceless may ye pray for grace!
Alone under Heaven stand the poor of this world,
But riches that honour the rich
Endanger the heart.

So, finished with pleading for the hand of my dear one,
I, the beloved of my cousin,
I, Fong Chun, beseech the impatience of Heaven—
Your triumph shall mock you!

THE WOMAN'S PAGE

THE CHINA NEW YEAR SPIRIT

Doubts as to the Bliss of Benevolence

We say so at Christmas. Yes, not only in pulpits and to our dependents who cannot help themselves, but even to each other. We have even caught sensible people proclaiming the preposterous belief that it is more blessed to give than to receive. We talk largely of the jovial, sentimental Yuletide of the deplorable barter and exchange of Christmas presents, of the sad tendency toward the "swop" idea, and on every lip is heard the platitude: "Of course the presents one really loves to give are to the poor and to little children."

Of course we have the best of authority for the blessedness of giving, and we have all but persuaded ourselves into believing it. Still I venture to say that if statistics were to be taken at China New Year's among the housekeepers with a large retinue of servants, the employers of tremendous native staffs, even the ordinary residents with at least a boy or two and perhaps a private rickshaw dependent upon them for meals, the result would show a leaded scepticism as to the superior blessedness of giving.

ROMANCE-ATTRACTERS

There Are More Things Seen by Tourists, Horatio

Dear, dear, what terrors are at our doorsteps, or at least just round the corner from us, and still we do not know it! Some people do seem to have all the luck: I suppose we might go on visiting the Lama Temple in Pekin indefinitely with no more exciting experiences than to be held up for tips; but when Mrs. Helen Fitzgerald, of New York, who has just returned from China to her home, so the San Francisco "Chronicle" informs us, went to the "evil shrine of the Devil Dancers," she barely escaped with her life from the "Torture Temple of the Lamas, where no other white woman had ever penetrated."

We quote in part Mrs. Fitzgerald's own dramatic version of her adventures:

When I reached the Forbidden City on my world pilgrimage the one admonition impressed on me was:

"Do not go to the Lama Temple! No white woman dares to trust herself there alone! It would mean death—or worse!"

My curiosity was piqued. What were the terrors that caused even the Oriental cheek to blanch at mention of a name? I wished above all things to see infamous Yung Ho Kung. No one would go with me so I slipped outside the house one morning and called my ricsha boy.

"The Lama Temple," I ordered.

"No can go!" he explained in a choked whisper. Then he drew a trembling yellow finger sharply across his throat as if it were a knife. "Devils!" he breathed.

I knew the superstitions of the coolies, so I smiled, and insisted. A few moments later I stepped from the ricsha an confidently knocked at the gate. In a moment a swarthy, slant-eyed individual with shaven head appeared and after I had explained by word and pantomime what I wanted he smiled blandly and opened the gate. I went in, my backward glance aware of the terror in my ricsha boy's eyes.

Straight along a splended avenue I walked with my guide, past two colossal bronze lions, through pavilions of heavily perfumed incense, the floors rich with rare carpets, woven in wild and remote Ninghasia beyond the Gobi. Then came dark and repellent buildings honeycombed with cells whence issued strange muffled sounds as of human beings moaning in agony.

This feeling of terror was abruptly emphasized by the sudden blare of unseen horns, the shuddering shrill treble of flutes, the throb of strange, savage drums. And hardly knowing what I was doing I followed my guide into the largest building of all, the temple of terrors.

Suddenly I realized that my guide had vanished! I was alone in that temple of death, whose mazes were cryptic, and there was no way of escape: Alone in a place whence legend said no woman, yellow or white, came out alive!

There was a rustling of the great draperies, ominous, sinister in its deadly softness. I looked around wildly and pressed my hands hard against my cold cheeks. Standing before me was a monstrous figure, robed in the yellow vestments of a priest, but with the face of a demon.

Desperate and hysterical I sprang forward and tore the Devil's Mask from his face. As it thudded to the floor I saw the dark, angry eyes of a high priest I had noticed outside.

I felt his hissing breath, saw the insane anger of those terrible eyes. With incredible swiftness he had stooped, picked up his mask and adjusted it, and now as the mask came toward me again he drew his sword from the folds of his robe.

It was the end, I thought, but desperately I seized his sword wrist, struck at the mask repeatedly and screamed in frenzy. My screams were drowned; outside was the growing clamor of unearthly sounds, the light patter of feet.

I do not know how it happened. The devil priest was stronger, but I was mad with fear. His foot had caught in his robe, he was falling. I had turned like a flash, darted through the draperies, raced down the corridors. I stumbled, fell, rose and fled on. Then——

I saw the sunlight, the stately avenue, deserted save for the distant figure of a priest moving along quietly as if nothing had happened. Behind me the blare of horns grew fainter.

Then the yellow gate appeared and I was outside—safe! My ricsha boy had fled, but the city of Peking stretched before me graceful, immutable. I looked down and saw that the knuckles of my hand were bleeding!

Alackday, all we can say is that Mrs. Fitzgerald, who lectured to Shanghai people last June about her experiences with the Blackfeet Indians, has had much better luck in her search for copy than was ever ours. We can hardly help wondering whether her initiation into the tribal mysteries of the Sun Dance of the Indians was an event on the same order. Romance certainly goes hunting for some people.

MME. SZE ON AMERICAN HUSBANDS

Chinese Diplomat's Wife Expresses Her Opinions in First American Interview

Mme. Alfred Sze, the wife of the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States from China has been talking to the reporter of the San Francisco "Chronicle" about American husbands. She approves of them, we are happy to state. In fact, when seen by the indefatigable newsgatherer at Margate, just outside Atlantic City, she said:

"No, I do not believe the American husband spoils his wife with too much freedom, as it is said sometimes. I believe the American husband treats his wife better than any other in the world.

"In other countries there is the word obey—even in England. Men like to be the masters. But here the wife is treated as a companion, and as an equal. And that, I believe, is the way it ought to be.

"Oh, I am a great believer in this modern woman. I like the women to vote and to take part in the affairs of their country."

What would the Sunday Supplements of America do without China to supply them with excitement?

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN ACTRESSES

Or Paying the Penalty for Getting Art Entangled with the Best People

Sheer admiration for an American actress performing in London in an outrageously unladylike part stirred up British critics of the stage a little while back to reproachful observations about their native-grown stage women. These critics dared to say that when it came to plays in which untamed (or unbrided) nature was exposed to public view an inhibiting quality of ladylikeness entangled the British actress and straightlaced her art.

Is it true that the stage of Shakespeare and Nell Gwynne is suffering from an affected daintiness of walk and conversation fearfully assuming, in our late day, to express what Jane Austen called "the delicacy of the elegant female"? Is this a part of a general resurgence of Victorianism which some pretend to view with alarming complacency, or is it something else—or at all?

A STAGE PREPARATION FOR MARRIAGE.

By some the hope springing perennial in the footlight favourite's breast—the hope of marrying a peer—was urged as explanation or excuse. Out of that hope (it was said) grew such sedulous aping of the elegant attitudes, clipped syllables and admired intonations of high society that expression of the cruder emotions was hampered—simulation of the common behaviour of low persons bereft of conviction and authority. The Gaiety Girl who might so possibly become Lady by marriage set betimes about creating the rôle for herself, so as to be ready to face the dowager and down the dowdies—who had been born ladies and thus (thanks to their mothers' marriages) did not have to act the part.

The Gaiety Girl might, also, like Mrs. Mabel Russell Phillipson, become a member of Parliament. Her task and privilege, then, to match in the Commons her self-made poise with that of Lady Astor, born in Virginia, and supported by the aristocratic prestige of two continents. Something surely not to be faced without preparation.

If the British actress were not a Gaiety Girl, but a more serious performer, her chances of marrying [illegible] Parliament, would be sensibly reduced. But in that case she might be a leading lady married to an actor-manager who was a knight—or who might, upon any King's birthday distribution of honours, have glittering equestrian rank thrust upon him.

Still further: acting has become hereditary in many British families. In that enlivening overseas publication called "Who's Who in the Theatre" these elect families are listed. And it is a long list. There are 78 names in it, including Barrymore, Drew, Lyceum and Sothern, which may now be counted American or partly so. Other names, certainly not American, are Bancroft, Boucicault, Buckstone, Compton, du Maurier, Farren, Forbes-Robertson, Grossmith, Huntley, Irving, Jerrold, Kemble, Kendall, Macready, Maude, Monckton, Neilson, Quartermaine, Saker, Terry, Titheradge, Tree and Wyndham.

Each hereditary theatrical family has a family tree spread out on a page showing descent and relationship. It thus appears that many younger British actresses are daughters of actor managers who by royal warrant write Sir in front of their Christian and other given names. These must be ladies in spite of being mere Miss or Mrs.

POLITE DRAMA.

Every King's birthday sees more actors made knights and more wives, daughters, nieces, sisters, cousins and aunts stamped vicariously with the royal stamp of gentility. Quaintly this happens when really polite comedy and full-dress society drama are not in nearly such high favour as in the '80s. and '90s. of the last century they used to be. Never mind. So much the worse for plays that persist in not being polite. Such plays—omitting a few from the pen of the American Eugene O'Neill—are mostly anyway imported from the Continent of Europe. And though, regrettably, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero is contributing very little to the stage nowadays, there is still the hope of doing a delicate bit in something by Sir James Matthew Barrie, Bart., O.M. However lowly born and humbly placed the character, Sir James always makes her such that a lady can play her. His Cinderella really is a fairy princess in spite of her assumption of a 'cockney accent.

Nor must it be forgotten that a surprising number of British actresses (like Violet and Irene Vanbrugh) are daughters of clergymen of the Established Church. Nor that many others have as fathers civil or military officers in the Colonial or Indian service of the empire. Such is Mrs. Patrick Campbell, for instance, who eventually married into a family accustomed to mating with Dukes. One British actress, at least, Miss Colette O'Neil, is the doughter of an untheatrical Earl, the fifth of his noble line, which means that she has four other Earls in coroneted processional behind her. Hrr brother is likewise an Earl. Nobody is allowed to forget that Lady Diana Manners, daughter of the Duke of Rutland, is in the movies—but perhaps that does not quite count. Lady Diana is not listed in "Who's Who in the Theatre."

TEMPTATIONS TO RESPECTABILITY.

In such company (with or without Lady Diana) airs of gentility are, if not obligatory, at least appropriate and becoming to even the least member of a calling any member of which the King may delight to honour. If play acting in England has not quite been raised to the peerage of professions the very exercise of which confers title to gentility—the army, the navy, the Church, the bar—indisputably it is an art to these privileged proessions near allied. So that English player folk are hedged about with temptations to respectability hardly inferior to those which beset barons, barristers and Bishops. Their conventions necessarily are less and less those of Bohemia and more and more those of Belgravia or Mayfair.

In such circumstances to play a low part furnished with vulgar language and rude gestures becomes more and more difficult, ascendingly distasteful. Presently it may be necessary for the British stage to import cultivated actresses—Italians, Russians, Americans—to play all ungenteel parts.

COURT RECOGNITION.

The truth is that, except in the musical comedy sphere, a stage career in either England or America does not create [illegible] exposure to a noble marriage. So that this factor is of much less importance in accounting for the ladylikeness of British actresses than are other factors less accidental. What is not accidental is that the British stage is now an accepted part of British society. As such it is recognized at Court. The American stage except for a few families of hereditary stage people, like the Barrymores, is still outside society. Partly, perhaps, because there is no recognized authority in a democracy to let it inside.

At all events, Miss Pauline Lord, sent over to London with Eugene O'Neill's "Anna Christie," was able with her whisky voice and her low language of a low bargeman's daughter, to make the London critics sit up and take notice of what they were missing in the ladies of their own theatres. In order to get an idea of what they missed, let's take a sample of the British actress as we see her.

Take Miss Violet Kemble Cooper, for instance, a distinguished younger member of one of the very best hereditary stage families listed in that British stage book. We may have seen this accomplished fine lady actress play the wanton most wantonly as we did, a couple of years back, see her do it with the assembled Barrymores in "Clair de Lune." But it was a fine lady wilfully and wickedly wanton. There was nothing low about it except the deep abyss of wantonness. Not conceivably could Miss Kemble Cooper with her high air and cool voice descend to playing a bargeman's daughter who has peddled her love in the streets and repented. Or any sort of bargeman's daughter, good or bad.

What the British critics scolded their actresses for is, after all, the penalty the artist who is an aristocrat even in her art must pay for getting art entangled with our very best people.

IMPRESSIONS

By Wilbert Snow.

These entered into me and shaped my dreams:
The full, triumphant buoyance of flood tide;
A wooded cove streaked with the low moon's beams,
A little island where white seagulls cried
My drowsiness astir, and perched to ride
With schooners that indulged the wind's desire;
Calm spots on choppy seas, an ocean-wide
Northcaster rousing moods that issued higher
Than pushing waves; the reminiscent fire
In eyes of sailors who had ploughed the main
On full-rigged ships where [illegible]
Atlantic gales from Montreal to Spain
Had filled them with adventure glowing bright
As brass rings through their ears in sunset light.

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

[illegible] reading characteristics which grew during the [illegible] the pages. The [illegible] of Wild West" stories, most of them done in America, some of them manufactured in England, has almost abated. Mr. Zane Grey a romancer worthy of acceptance as a quite certain "packet to the Islands of the Blest," is no longer at the head of our "best sellers." He and a group of "happy ending" writers consoled us thereby when we greatly needed an hour of forgetfulness. They did their job neatly, we were grateful to them, and now the "Wild West" has gone home again, though not, of course, altogether, for the romance of the plains will always capture maidens and young men.

Once more we have "old familiar faces" in the ascendant, and when you find that it shows settling back to type. True, we have had a burst in desert fiction, but it has not hit us half so hard as it hit our historic cousins, the Americans. We have read the tales of "The Sheik" school, though often it has been hard going, and the Americans have devoured them. We were bidden to fold our tents and silently steal away with the Arabs, but our instinctive reading world has been more sober, less romantic. Also there has been no reversion to the "problem novel," for the simple reason that nowadays its excursions and alarms have been gathered into the general body of fiction, and it no more shows a red light.

How fortunate is the lady whom we know as Miss Ethel M. Dell, but about whom, thanks to her modesty, we know little more. How fortunate is Sir Hall Caine, about whom we at least know something, thanks to his unvarying courtesy that way. They divide, between them, the glory of having written the two "best-sellers," stories of the sea. Miss Dell's is called "Tetherstones," and Sir Hall Caine's is called "The Woman of Knockaloe." After those works there would come, perhaps, Mr. W.J. Locke's "Mecrdius & Co." and Mrs. Maud Diver's "Lonely Furrow." To make one's choice six, one would add Mr. Arnold Bennett's "Riceyman Steps" and Miss Kaye-Smith's House of 'Alard," but they are another story.

Mr. N. M. Penzer has brought together in his volume of "Selected Papers on Anthropology, Travel and Exploration," by Sir Richard Burton (Philpot. 15s.), some things which are hard to come by. "The Guide-Book to Mecca," for instance, is not represented in the British Museum, and only six copies are known to exist. Although it contains less information than the "Pilgrimage," its fine nervous phrasing gives it a value of its own. The same may be said of "A Trip to Harar," originally published in the Geographical Society's "Journal" [illegible] years ago, which sparkles with Burton's characteristic [illegible]. "Generally in the East a man expects to be defrauded by the civil power, but he is morally certain of being stopped by the minutest of rogues." A postscript to "Falconry in the Valley of the Indus" is of interest, as Mr. Penzer says, because it supplies the only information to possess of Burton's early days with the Indian Army, and also fragments gathered here are his "Notes on Scinde," "Notes on Rome," and "Spiritualism in Eastern Lands." None of them are negligible, and some of them illustrate well the writer's personality.

We may trust that Mr. Cecil Torr is in error when he describes his latest instalment of "Small Talk at Wreyland" (Cambridge University Press, 7s. 6d.) as the "third (and final) volume." Like its predecessors, it offers a couple of hours' retreat from a busy world, a place "full of sweet dreams and health and quiet breathing." Its catholicity is like that of Praed's "Vicar," who, while familiar with "the laws that keep the planets in their radiant courses," could nevertheless evolve "some precept deep for dressing eels or skinning horses." Mr. Torr can be with equal facility personal and impersonal, and no question of history or manners comes amiss to him. Other writers have produced such Miscellanies, but Mr. Torr's has the lure of finished writing which never attempts to be "fine." The penetrating journalist will recognize that the paragraphs which embody his self-effacing art are perfect models.

THE TWELVE STONE LOOK

Scientific Advice for Corpulent Ladies and Gentlemen

"WHY BE FAT?." By Cecil Webb-Johnson, M.B., CH.B. 5/- net, Mills & Boon, London.

The dangers of obesity, how it may be prevented, and modern methods of reducing weight are taken up by Dr. Webb-Johnson in scientific fashion yet a style which makes the book readable as well as informing. The æsthetic as well as the hygienic drawbacks of corpulence are plainly set forth, and the author sternly states that the average man and woman in England eat about three times as much solid and liquid food as the body requires. His strictures upon the excesses of Shanghai would doubtless be even more severe. "It is a well-known fact that many more people die of over-eating than of over-drinking," he adds.

Dr. Webb-Johnson discusses various treatments for this "inconvenient, humiliating, and dangerous complaint," warns against quack "reducers," and gives not only practicable menus but recipes. Breakfast must go if obesity is to be overcome and the author says:—

[illegible]

It seems to be the general impression—to judge by people's actions—that taking a night's sleep is a most tiring and exhausting process. The labours of the day cannot be faced until the weary frame, after the strenuous toil of sleeping for seven or eight hours, is recruited with eggs and bacon, fish, sausages, and the usual concomitants of the British breakfast! To some people [illegible] is the most important meal of the day; and the average Briton is under the spell of such deceptive and misleading slogans as "Lay a good foundation" and "Nothing can hurt the man who starts the day with a jolly good breakfast." Those who have broken away from the breakfast habit and have abstained from food till midday have been as surprised as delighted with the marked and almost instant improvement in their health.

BEWARE OF MILK.

"Drink as little as possible" is another rule laid down, and this authority prohibits any drinking with meals at all—a dictum at which many will rebel. Milk is also absolutely forbidden, Dr. Webb-Johnson objecting to its [illegible]. He recognizes the opposition to this position but outlines the [illegible]

(1) Milk makes no demand upon the complicted mechanico-physio-[illegible] (2) within the alimentary canal it coagulates, causing lactic acid fermentation, leading to indigestion, etc.: (3) it is too bulky a diet for an adult and contains too much albumen and too little carbohydrate and organic salts; (4) vitamines [illegible] milk in [illegible]; (5) the quality of cow's milk is [illegible], (6) milk gives cause foul mouth, coated tongue and [illegible] (7) it is the [illegible] cause of dental caries and pyorrhœa; (8) [illegible] diseases [illegible] by milk; (9) only the digestive [illegible] of an infant is adapted for the proper digestion of milk; (10) it is the chief cause of cancer of the stomach.

Whether these conclusions are accepted or not, the main premises of the book are certainly indisputable and their vigorous presentation will do much to shame the corpulent into reforming their figures.

REBUILDING CHINA

[illegible]

This study of the present developments in China and the Christian contribution to the new needs thus discovered was written primarily for mission study classes with the hope that its contents would be suggestive in helping readers unfamiliar with China better to appreciate the conditions here and the challenge they offer to Christian statesman. The appeal of the book will, however, be much larger, and many residents of China will be glad to have this little book which is written by one well acquainted with the facts of the case and who presents them in a broad-minded spirit and in interesting fashion.

The first part of the book, entitled "China's Need" gives a clear and concise account of the old-world outlook and the present social and political status. In the second part, which shows the Christian contribution, the work of the evangelist, teacher, healer and church is explained. The index and bibliography add to the value of the book, as do the six illustrations. In a forthcoming edition the frontispiece will doubtless be correctly entitled the "temple of Heaven" instead of the "altar" as it is now styled.

CHINA IN PICTURES

PICTURESQUE CHINA—A Journey through Twelve Provinces. By Ernst Boerschmann. Fisher Unwin, London. Chinese American Publishing Co., Shanghai.

This very beautiful book should equally be in the hands of those who know something of China and those who do not. The writer's travels have taken him through large spaces of the north, through Szechuan and the little known Kuangsi as well as the coastal and chief central provinces. The book consists, in the main, of photographs of what he has seen, very excellently reproduced in soft sepia tones and with a short description under each (in five languages). All the pictures, of which there are nearly 300, are carefully indexed with brief notes on the originals; and there is also an introduction in which the author discourses pleasantly on forms of Chinese architecture, the importance in religious practice, of pagodas, and the immense veneration of Chinese for the earth. The whole volume constitutes a very delightful guide to the principal places of artistic and historic interest in the provinces visited, which must make every reader long to go and do likewise.

And furthermore it reinforces and confirms a feeling which has been growing very prevalent recently, that, as J. O. P. Bland and one or two others have never ceased to emphasize, the real China has remained quite unchanged by imported ideas of democracy. Even Young China itself, frightened by the excesses of the monster it has brought into existence, would seem to think that there is more in the old than was once supposed and that if the nation is to pull itself together the standards and ideas of the past must not be excluded. The unsurpassable dignity of the scenery and buildings depicted in Mr. Boerschmann's book is a true expression of the nature of the Chinese people themselves who, when untainted by foreign, that is unfamiliar and un-native, artificialities, are surely among the most dignified creatures on earth. In one respect the book is not quite true to life the vast majority of Chinese temples and buildings are not nearly so well kept up as those selected for reproduction. Grass grows among pavements, cornices fall off and are not replaced, and the most stately temples are thick in dust and matter in the wrong place. These things grieve us all wherever we go a-sight seeing, and it is a pleasure to find from Mr. Boerschmann's book that such carelessness is not universal. But from that neglect, where it is found, one might deduce two morals: first, that Chinese civilization does not trouble itself with many trifles which to the West appear insupportable: secondly, that that civilization is getting a little frayed at the edges. The question of repair is exercising us all nowadays. Meanwhile, Mr. Boerschmann's book is an illustration of China as she has been and still would be, over which we may all ponder with pleasure and profit.

ALL ABOUT PEKING

GUIDE TO PEKING, by Fei Shi, published by the Tientsin Press.

The author, who has also written "A Trip into Anhui," "Through the Silk and Tea Districts of Kiang-nan and Chê-kiang" and "The Trans-Siberian Route," has assembled in compact form an interesting and useful assortment of facts about Peking and its environs, together with illustrative pictures and maps. The book, while containing much valuable information for the resident of China, is designed especially for the tourist and with this in mind a guide to 10 short excursions is given early in the book. The settlement itself is fully described and then the Chinese, Manchu, and the Forbidden Cities with the other quarters and sights in the neighbourhood of Peking, the trip to the Great Wall, Ming Tombs and historic temples.

The section on travel in the interior contains much practical advice and the descriptions of excursions along the Mongolian Border has material not easily found elsewhere. The index assists readers to find answers to queries constantly arising, while some 46 illustrations and seven maps and sketches will be often consulted.

VICTORIAN INNOCENCE

"THE SHORELESS SEA." By Mollie Panter-Downes. John Murray, London.

Recently a psychological investigator discovered and announced that the average mental age of Americans is just 14 years. If it is safe to hazard that the other branch of the English-speaking group of mankind is not far from the same standard, then this book ought to attain an immense popularity with the reading public on several continents and islands. It is the day dream of an adolescent, set down with complete naiveté by a girl of sixteen. The publisher's advertisement states the novelist's age as the remarkable fact about the novel. I have long cultivated the habit of taking well-seasoned with the salt of incredulity all statements in book advertisements. But in this case it is a fact that I was moved to remark in irritation, when half way down the fourth page of "The Shoreless Sea, "This sounds exactly like a sixteen-year-old's writing." Whereupon, I turned the volume over to peruse jacket advertisements for a moment's respite, and came upon the selfsame announcement by the publisher. When I say that the girl writer sets down with complete naiveté her day dreams, I should add that she is an English girl, brought up amid all the nice restraints of Anglo-Saxondom. Freud and Jung would find no material for their neurotic revelations here. It is not definitely stated, but the authoress and the heroine probably both still believe literally in fairies and Santa Claus, and that babies arrive in the world on storks' backs. It is refreshing to find such Victorian innocence even amidst cigarette smoking girls and picnics without chaperons.

Deirdre is in conflict with her mother, a selfish beast, who wears beautiful clothes, and is jealous of the beauty of her daughter, while Deirdre goes about like a veritable Cinderella. Secretly, Deirdre meets a prince—not a mere titled prince, but one of the real princely nature. Eventually, she marries a duke (or perhaps it is only a lord) through the sort of mistake that occurs in romantic fiction frequently, only to discover too late the prince's love for her. He has, in the meantime, disappeared, only to reappear, pathetically faithful to his love. Finally, [illegible] one one must not give away the ending. Any of us at sixteen has dreamed out just such a perfect tragedy of love and devotion.

Seriously, however, the child who wrote this book may have some day to be reckoned with. Having read widely of good, bad and indifferent poetry, romance and fiction, she sometimes puzzles one to know what is her own and what a composite of her reading. Yet there are passages of original beauty and genuine and sensitive reactions to observation. Her characters, while full of the unconscious comic quality of the child's description of grown-ups, are, most of them, alive and distinct. And sometimes the characterizations are deliciously touched with satire, as when she relates how the two dowagers became fond of each other through swapping their fat—reducing recipes. If Molly Panter-Downes lives vitally, she may write a powerful novel at 26 or 30. Let us hope that she is not merely one of that phenomenon—so disagreeable outside the family circle—the child prodigy.

OLIVIA PRICE.

VERY QUIET FUN

"THE RICHEST MAN." By Edward Shanks. (Collins. 7s. 6d.)

Mr. Shanks, one need not say, has abundant humour of an implicit kind—the kind that need never surge up into a positive joke, but simply keeps the reader aware that his formal matter is not to be taken seriously and that the author is only amusing himself with a human type or a popular conception. There are probably people who will go steadily through this book without being aware of any such reservations—who will take it as a real romance of the "Hidden Hand" in international politics—and they will, we fear, set it down as a little lacking in what they call grip. Williams, the super-millionaire who feels himself the real ruler of the world and conducts himself towards its interests in a truly paternal spirit, is, of course, without any of the cinema qualities. Mr. Shanks has tried to picture for himself what the effect of environment would be in such a case, and makes the figure a little dehumanised, with rather naive relapses into the primitive. The simple-minded passion of Williams for the Italian peasant-girl is obviously merely sketched in, with no attempt at verisimilitude. But the adventurer Hollis, with his ultra-modern lack of all moral tradition, is quite racy and well-savoured. And the exterior setting of Cambridge society gives the needful antithesis. Mr. Shanks will entertain the intelligent as much as he has evidently entertained himself.

MR. BARING

"THE TRIANGLE." By Maurice Baring. Heinemann. 6s.

Mr. Baring's methods, practised here with remarkable success, of telling his story through three persons, has, of course, been used before. But Wilkie Collins and others used it only in order to give the reader different views about facts. Mr. Baring uses it in this way, but his main purpose is to give different views of the truth. His narrators in this tragedy of marriage are Gilbert Bray, a solicitor, Dr. Langthorne and Father Rushby, S.J.

The best section of the book is the doctor's: Mr. Baring has caught admirably the mixture of professional complacency and personal kindness and interest. These three persons are all concerned in the problem of Dennis Peynet and his wife, Eileen, and the interaction of their tragic comedy with that of Patrick Haslam, the great portrait painter, and David Aston and his wife. The story is told with great economy, and the little vignettes of minor characters are extremely brilliant. Mr. Baring is more successful with his men than with his women neither Eileen Peynet nor Agatha Aston is quite right, though old Miss Aston and Eliza, the servant, are good. It is in his delineation of passion that Mr. Baring is weakest.

CAN IT BE DONE BY MANDATE?

President Tsao Kun has issued a mandate lamenting unemployment and banditry and forecasting industrial and agricultural reform

SINEWS OF A LOCAL WAR

A Loan of $200,000 from Lu Yung-hsiang to Tan Yen-kai and its Probable Meaning

THE IMMOBILIZATION OF NANKING

Native bankers of Shanghai are reported to be somewhat more than curious concerning a loan made just before the China New Year by General Lu Yung-hsiang of Hangchow to General Tan Yen-kai, and the account that is given of it is certainly worthy of attention.

In circles intimately associated with local politics this loan is said to be a preliminary step in displacing Tsao Kun from the Presidency and in securing the position for Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, and the method of carrying this through, details of which are given, are of considerable interest. As belonging to the old Anfu Party Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, now a resident of Tientsin, and General Lu Yung-hsiang of Hangchow are still affiliated and in opposition to Tsao Kun. The Nanking Tuchun, Marshal Chi Hsieh-yuan, is one of Tsao Kun's men, and, so long as he is in power in Nanking, acts as a buffer for the President to any enterprise which may be conceived by General Lu of Hangchow. The object of the latest move is to place the Nanking Tuchun in such a position of danger that Tsao Kun's party will be compelled to move to his assistance and it is hoped that this will form a convenient opportunity for Marshal Tuan to assume the Presidency.

The present weakness of Chi Hsieh-yuan's position lies in the extended territory of which he is now in control. Formerly he could confine his attention to the province of Kiangsu, but to-day he is Governor-General not only of Kiangsu but of Anhui and Kiangsi as well. The scheme set on foot is to attack him through the Kiangsi or Anhui frontier first, thus compelling him to move his troops thither, and when in this position a second attack from Hangchow would eventuate and the Nanking general would of necessity find himself in a parlous state. The Presidents' divisions would consequently be called to his aid, and once troop-movements in the north had started other events would occur. It is hoped that Chang Tso-lin would intervene to assist in ousting Tsao Kun once the latter had dispersed his strength from the vicinity of the Capital and then that Marshal Tuan might ascend the Presidential throne. This scheme does not take into consideration Chang Tso-lin's personal ambitions, but the promoters of the idea seem to think that they will remain in abeyance for another year by which time they will be altered.

As explained, the first step is the attack on the Kiangsi or Anhui border, and this is to be General Tan Yen-kai's part of the operations. He has his Hunanese troops in Kuangtung where they have helped to immobilize both Dr. Sun Yat-sen and General Chen Chiung-ming, and the belief is that he will be now in a position to march them to the Kiangsi or Anhui border and there start an invasion. If he can do so, the rest would follow as sketched above.

The scheme is a far-reaching one, and is believed locally to be the reason for the China New Year loan mentioned.

Rumours of Important Discussions Between Hangchow, Mukden and Canton

Peking, Feb. 11.

Peking is full of rumours of impending trouble in the regions near Shanghai, and there seems to be every reason to believe that important discussions are taking place between Mukden, Hangchow and Canton.

Political circles in Peking do not believe that Marshal Tuan will allow himself to be drawn into these intrigues, although General Lu Yung-hsiang is known to be endeavouring to persuade Marshal Tuan to become the leader of a movement, aimed at weakening the power of the Chihli faction.

The armistice arranged between Kiangsu and Chêkiang a month ago is no longer considered a guarantee of peace, judging by foreign official telegrams reaching Peking, which express considerable anxiety regarding the future outlook.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING'S OVERTURES TO CHANG TSO-LIN

An Equivocal Reply

Peking, Feb. 8.

The Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, recently sent Mr. Sun Hung-yao, a Cabinet Counsellor, to Mukden to interview Marshal Chang Tso-lin with regard to reunification.

Marshal Chang gave the delegate a good reception, saying that he would be happy to see unification but that the attitude of the Manchurian provinces in that connexion would be determined by the people.

NORTHERN SUCCESSES IN SZECHUAN

Peking, Feb. 7.

The Chinese New Year as usual was marked by an absence of political developments, but to-day attention is being given to movements in which many Chinese see reason for forecasting the despatch of a Northern expedition against Canton. It is stated that General Yuan Tsu-ming, the Kueichow leader who is with the Northern forces in Szechuan, will return to Kueichow, leaving the work of rehabilitation in the hands of General Liu Hsiang, while bandit suppression in eastern and southern Szechuan will be carried out by General Yang Sen. General Fang Peng-jen, leaders of the Northern forces co-operating with General Chao Heng-ti, is marching on Shokuan, where one of his detachments has already arrived. General Mo Chi and General Shen Hung-yin, are also reported to be marching on Shokuan, which is near the Kuangtung border of Hunan.

Although General Chao Heng-ti has not cancelled the autonomy of Hunan, it is said that he is co-operating loyally with the Northern troops in these movements. Meanwhile General Lu Yung-ting is said to be consolidating his position in Kuangsi, and has sent General Heng, his Chief-of-Staff, to Peking to consult with the Government authorities. With the end of hostilities in Shechuan in sight, it is expected that some of the Northern troops there will be available to strengthen the forces gathering together on the northern boundaries of Kuangtung.

CHENGTU NOT YET TAKEN.

According to foreign official telegrams the Chinese reports of the capture of Chêngtu by the Northern troops were premature. One foreign telegram, dated January 28, says that General Hsiong Keh-wu was then being surrounded by the Northern forces at Tungchuan, 80 miles northeast of Chengtu, while another telegram, dated February 2, says that General Liu Cheng-hsun was still in command at Chêngtu. According to the Chinese telegrams Chêngtu was captured on January 27. There seems to be no doubt that efforts were being made to capture Chêngtu before the Chinese New Year and establish good grounds for an immediate remittance from Peking to pay the Northern troops.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A NEW CAMPAIGN IN KUANGTUNG

Hunanese and Yunnanese Troops Concentrating to Attack Gen. Chen's Forces

Canton, Feb. 13.

Canton is full of troops, for the Hunanese are joining the Yunnanese in the projected attack against Gen. Chen Chiung-ming's forces in the East River district of Kuangtung, and all are concentrating in Canton.

Severe fighting in the east is expected, while the Cantonese are very worried over the shortage of food. The unloading of cargo is difficult because of the strike of the transportation and rice coolies.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SHANGHAI'S SOCIAL EVIL AND THE PHYSICIANS

Feb. 11.

WHEN careful investigation is made it will probably be found that the social evil in Shanghai is no worse than in any other large cosmopolitan sea-port and not as bad as in many large cities in China wholly under native administration. In any discussion of the subject there should be no exaggeration, and on the other hand no attempt to palliate or minimize the evil. Indeed, it is so grave and menacing as to justify the demand that all good people here should be united in the campaign against it. Unfortunately, even among ardent reformers, this unity does not exist On the one side are those who, deeply impressed by the strength of ineradicable instincts and the infirmity of human nature, can only hope to reduce the evil; therefore they doubt the wisdom and practicability of measures of reform proposed by those, on the other side, who insist that it must be at once totally suppressed. So there is endless discussion which occasionally tends to be acrimonious. The cause of reform is thereby weakened because most of the ratepayers and other members of the community are perplexed, or believe that the problem is insoluble, or grimly remark that those who take foolish risks should be prepared to suffer the consequenoes. The subject is gruesome and repellent, and we scarcely blame the mid-Victorians who either ignored it or mentioned it with bated breath. We refer to it now as there has just been issued an important report by a committtee of leading physicians appointed by the Shanghai Medical Society. Much time and thought has been given to its preparation, and it should be read carefully and impartially by all who are interested in the reclamation of the underworld.

Beginning with the year 1869, when the Settlement was very small and much more controllable than it is now, the report first gives an historical survevey of the various attempts made by successive Municipal Councils to deal with the evil. In common with the experience of every other community, ancient and modern, it is a history of conflicting opinions, fruitless experiments, cross-purposes, indecision and failure. It is all summed up in a quotation from the Encylopædia Britannica:

"In different countries and ages it (the social evil) has in turn been patronized and prohibited, ignored, recognized, tolerated and condemned, regulated and let alone, flaunted and concealed. Christianity, the greatest moral force in the history of mankind, has repeatedly and systematically attacked it with a scourge in one hand and balm in the other, but the effect has been trifling or transient."

In view of this pessimistic conclusion what does the Shanghai committee suggest? Its recommendations in full will be found on another page. Briefly, it advocates concentration of effort to protect the public health; for instance, it suggests that the Municipality should give every facility for the prevention of infection and for the efficient treatment of the actually diseased. At the same time there should be educational propaganda, rescue work, and attempts should be made to remove or improve the social conditions which foster the evil. It is opposed to any official system or supervision of prostitution. Brothels should not be officially sanctioned, but they are not to be interfered with by the police unless there is public disorder, nor by the medical department unless the inmates are diseased.

With much of the report nearly all will agree. The principal remaining contention will probably centre on the continued existence, the apparent toleration of brothels. Some reformers will argue passionately that all these establishments should be closed and if this means the driving of the inmates to neighbouring settlements—well, it is regrettable, but the reputation of the International Settlement will be clean. This raises an ethical question; the altruism of such a course is dubious. If a man finds something obnoxious in his garden should he get rid of it by throwing it over the wall into his neighbour's garden? If neighbouring settlements in the interests of morality were to drive their unfortunates into the International Settlement these reformers would be the first to complain. Again, and here we express our own opinion, boys and girls who are ignorant and foolish should somehow or other be prevented from entering bad houses. Still, it seems impossible to win complete victory by a single frontal attack. We earnestly advise the members of the Moral Welfare League and others to accept this report. In line with the Trevethin Report it outlines a working compromise, which has harmonized the efforts of reformers in England. As indicated in the Shanghai report, it is still open to moral reformers, among their other activities, to conduct a vigorous educational propaganda against the evil itself, and to win the whole-hearted sympathy of the community with further measures of reform when the time is ripe; to co-operate with the Chinese in the suppression of kidnapping, the sale of little girls, and of the white slave traffic; to obtain generous financial and other assistance for all agencies engaged in rescue work; to investigate thoroughly the conditions, foreign and Chinese, which directly or indirectly, foster prostitution; to gather and publish accurate and full information on the whole subject; and to engage in all forms of work which have for their object the spiritual as well as the physical redemption of the men, women and children who are the unfortunate victims of the evil. If the Moral Welfare League can win the sympathy and practical support of the bulk of the community, there is no reason why Shanghai in time should not become, in every sense of the term, a Model Settlement.

THE RUSSIAN BONDS OF 1913 LOAN

Feb. 12.

CONSIDERABLE and, it must be added, inexcusable hardship continues to be inflicted on holders of portions of the Russian issue of the Chinese Reorganization Loan of 1913, on which the Chinese Government continues to withhold interest, even where the bondholders can prove a perfectly clear title. To go back, once again, briefly into the cause of dispute, when the war broke out, not all the bonds of the 1913 Loan had been printed, among them the Russian issue; and purchasers of this portion were given certificates in lieu. By the time the printing was done, the war made it impossible to get into touch with all holders of the Russian issue, so as to exchange bonds for certificates; and the bonds were accordingly deposited in the Russo-Asiatic Bank at Petrograd. In November, 1917, the Bolsheviks overthrew the Kerensky Government and some five weeks later they stole these bonds, with other securities, sent them abroad and sold a number of them, principally in America, before the theft could be discovered. There was thus a double set of holders of some of the Russian issue of the C.R.L. and in May, 1922, the Chinese Government announced that unless holders of the Russian issue could prove that they had held their bonds since before December, 1917, it intended to withhold payment until the number of bonds and certificates should have been compared in Paris and sure information could be obtained as to the rightful owners. At no time has the Chinese Government suggested anything like repudiation: it only withheld payment until it could be sure it was paying to rightful owners. It is to be emphasized, however, that although the theft occurred in December, 1917, the Chinese Government did nothing until May, 1922, to warn intending purchasers against the Russian issue. Even then, the notification of the withholding of interest was made privately; it was not advertised publicly until the following December.

Here, now, is one case to our knowledge of the unjustifiable hardship mentioned. Where there is one, we may be sure there will be others. The gentleman in question purchased, through a Shanghai broker, a number of bonds of the Russian issue of the 1913 Reorganization Loan, in November, 1920. There was at this time, as pointed out above, absolutely nothing to warn him not to do so. According to Article xv of the Reorganization Agreement, owners of bonds which have been lost, stolen or destroyed are obliged to publish the fact and in due course duplicates will be issued. No such notification has ever been published in respect of the amount of the loan purchased by the bondholder whose case we are considering. In May, 1922, came the intimation to him that the Chinese Government was temporarily withholding payment of dividends in the manner described. The bondholder in question immediately set about investigating the history of his bonds and was able to prove that they had been bought by the merchant (a well known resident of Harbin) from whom he obtained them at the time of the original issue in 1913; while reference to the list drawn up by the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank in London proves that the coupons had been cashed prior to December, 1917. It is, therefore, perfectly clear that, whatever bonds the Bolsheviks stole, it was not these, the history of which is clear and consecutive. Nevertheless, the Chinese delegate in Paris refuses to exchange the bonds unless the holder of them gives a guarantee that he will refund their value in the remote event of the bonds having been stolen. Although there appears no possibility of this, the bondholder, quite rightly we think, refuses to accept any such responsibility, when the action of the Chinese Government, in depriving him of the enjoyment of the bonds and coupons, without there being any flaw in his title, is clearly illegal. With curious inconsistency the agent in Paris has paid one dividend (an obvious confession) but refuses to pay arrears or to exchange the bonds for the recognized ones.

It is open to question whether the Chinese Government was ever within its legal rights in refusing to pay over the dividends, even when the theft was discovered. What it might well have done—we may say ought to have done—was to publish an early notification in all countries requesting holders of the certificates issued before their bonds were printed to send the numbers of them to Paris or London, when it would have been easy to ascertain what bonds were missing. But if there may be two points of view on this question, there can be only one as to what is the position of a bondholder who can prove his title and the record of his bonds as clearly as the gentleman whose unfortunate experience has been described. That is, that the bonds are every whit as good as those of the British or French issue. The injustice done to this bondholder, who is certainly not the only one in a like plight, is reprehensible on all counts, and does gratuitous damage to China's good name and credit abroad.

BRITISH CHAMBERS' CONFERENCE

Feb. 13.

IF members of the British Chambers approach the conference they begin to-day in some dejection, who shall be surprised? For all the work they and especially their active and untiring secretary have done—and the British business community all over China would be thankless indeed if it did not think gratefully of their efforts at least—there is but little fruit to show. And on the eve of the conference comes the bitter news that the Diplomatic Body have practically given away the Chambers' whole case in respect of the Trademark Law. The current number of the British Chamber of Commerce Journal opens with an article headed "The Passing of the Mackay Treaty." It is no unjustified title. Article VII of that Treaty says quite plainly that offices for the registration of trademarks shall be established "under control of the Imperial Maritime Customs." The Chinese Trademark Law puts these offices wholly in Chinese control, with no appeal to it except in Chinese Courts; and the Diplomatic Body according to Reuter, whose information on the subject is not likely to be inaccurate, is prepared to accept this flat violation of the Mackay Treaty, on three essential conditions, which in no way alter the Chinese control of registration, and with the "suggestion" only that "foreign expert assistance" be engaged, which the Chinese are neither obliged to accept nor to listen to, if they do the Diplomatic Body the favour of accepting it. The latter's position has certainly been affected by the fact of some German and Japanese firms having already registered. But if the foreign Ministers are able to make "essential conditions" of any kind, why not make such as would prove of essential value to the protection of property worth incalculable millions of taels? The debate of the Chambers on this point will be watched with extreme interest and if they can find any way of snatching victory out of defeat at the last moment, they may well be reconciled to many other disappointments.

On another subject also one awaits the Chambers' views with lively anticipation—namely, the famous two-and-a-half per cent. surtax. For there appears every reason to think that since a year ago those views have undergone a marked change. In the preliminary notice of subjects of discussion which we published yesterday it was stated that "although last year the Associated Chambers took up a very definite line on the subject of the surtax, conditions now are not the same as they were then, and it is essential to form a definite policy. The conditions of China are only not the same as they were last year in the sense in which a grown man is not dimensionally what he was as a boy. There has been no moral change in those conditions, merely development. For further evidence that the Chambers are preparing to tear up last year's resolution on the surtax we read in the "Journal" that on January 14 Mr. H. E. Arnhold gave a dinner at the Shanghai Club to the Committees of the Chamber and the China Association, at which he made a speech in which, among other subjects,

He dealt with the proposed 2½ per cent. surtax, with breaches of the Treaties and with extraterritoriality, expressing the view that the surtax ought not to become operative until there is a central government capable of enforcing its will in the provinces.

Without wishing to reopen old controversies, we cannot refrain from pointing out that this is practically identical with the view taken by the "North-China Daily News" last year, for upholding which we got into so much hot water with the Chamber; furthermore that when we pointed out that the Washington resolution carefully included a time clause for the surtax coming into operation ("from such date as the conference may determine") we were told emphatically that this meant nothing and that Washington did not mean what it said. Other quotations might be given from the "Journal" showing a change in the wind, particularly as to how Canton and the provinces might regard a loan secured on a surtax, which they would be paying, for the benefit of Peking. These questions were fully discussed in the "North-China Daily News" and the only possible answer to them supplied a year ago; and there is not a whit more reason for taking them into careful consideration now than there was then.

But when loans are being can-

THE GOLD FRANC QUESTION

Ministers of the Eight Powers Signatory to the 1901 Protocol Reply to Peking French View Supported in Full

Peking, Feb. 12.

The Ministrs of the eight Powers signatory to the Protocol of 1901 yesterday sent a collective reply to the Chinese Note of December 26.

The Ministers conclude from the Chinese Note that China claims the right to pay the arrears of the indemnity at the rate of what it calls the current exchange of each one of the currencies inscribed upon the national bonds belonging to each of the signatory Powers. China bases its claim on the definition it gives the words "in gold" in the letters of July 2, 1905, cited by the signatories in the Notes of February 24 and November 5, 1923, "for each Haikuan tael due to each of the Powers China must pay 'in gold' the sum indicated in Article 6 of the final protocol as the equivalent of the tael." According to China's contention, the words "in gold" have been used in this sentence to distinguish the gold standard monetary systems of the signatories from the silver standard monetary system to which belongs the Haikuan tael, the currency in which the total indemnity has been expressed.

China bases her claim in an equal measure on the manner of payment of the indemnity, which, according to China, is definitely fixed by Section 3 of the letters aforesaid, this method of payment (telegraphic transfer) appearing to China as solely devoted to the exchange of national currencies customarily used in international exchanges.

A QUESTION OZ WEIGHT

The eight Ministers ought not to conceal from China that the study of the latter's Note has not altered the opinion expressed by the Ministers in the previous Notes. The sentence taken from the letters of July 2, 1905, seems perfectly clear. It means that for each Haikuan tael due to the Powers China must pay in gold the sum indicated in Article 6 of the Protocol or the equivalent of the tael in conformity with the respective weights and legal standards of each of the eight gold currencies mentioned in Article 6. In other words, in so far as the franc is concerned, for each tael owed to Belgium, Spain, France and Italy China must pay 3.75 francs in gold or 3.75 multiplied by 0.290,322 grains of fine gold.

In support of its definition of the words "in gold" the Chinese Note does not present any argument except the assertion that it is known that the reports of the discussions between the signatories, leading up to the final [illegible] China's contentions. The eight Ministers are in a position to state that the reports of these discussions show the unanimous desire of the signatories to give the words "in gold" the sense which is set forth in the preceding paragraph. This is confirmed, moreover, by the documents pertaining to this matter. It will suffice to call to mind the principal ones. China having accepted the principle of the indemnity on October 20, 1900, the Powers concerned themselves, on the one hand, with making separate estimations of the sums to which each was entitled under this count and, on the other hand, with fixing the total sum China could pay without hampering the progress, government and development of the country. The sum was fixed on May 7, 1901, at 450,000,000 taels by a letter from the Dean to China. This was less than the total individual indemnities which were finally reduced.

WHY THE GOLD BASIS.

The Ministers explain why the signatories adopted gold as the basis of their calculations in regard to payments and the Note goes on to say that they decided and China agreed that the indemnity though expressed in Haikuan taels was an indemnity to be paid in gold and that the rate in gold should be fixed on a definite day. This decision was transmitted to China on July 30, 1901, in the following terms: 'The sum of Haikuan Tls. 450,000,000 payable in gold at the rate of exchange on April 1, 1901, with four per cent. interest, represents the grand total of the indemnity.' The rate of exchange on the date specified was inserted in Article 6 of the final Protocol. The Note then reproduces the said article, after which it explains that in it the Powers were careful to define the meaning that they intended to give, and that China had agreed to give, to the words "in gold."

The Note mentions that the Belgian, French, Spanish and Italian currencies were then almost alike but even if they differ their gold coinage is legally the same in weight and denomination, and it was to represent this weight aforementioned of fine gold to the franc that these four Powers adopted the same rate of exchange, viz., 3.75 francs to the Haikuan Tael.

CURRENCIES NOT CONSIDERED.

The signatories as well as China in using the words "the rate of the tael to the gold currency of each currency" excluded from the measures aimed at by Article 6 every evaluation of the tael in relation to the currencies of each country other than their gold currency. They have the right to refuse payment of the tael in their silver currency, their fiduciary money and their exchange currencies etc.

The measures which the interested Powers took in the final Protocol were confirmed by China in the text of her letters of July 2, 1905, as well as in the wording of the bonds delivered to each Power and in the coupons attached to these payments because payment in gold was the procedure they had adopted in order to assure distribution of the total indemnity in the proportions agreed upon by them.

The Ministers then insist that China must pay for each tael she owes gold value in conformity with the weight and legal standard of each currency. In answering China's first contention the Ministers assert that they have refuted the second, which the Chinese Note admits refers solely to the manner of execution of China's obligations. The character and the total amount of the debt owed by virtue of China's obligation cannot depend upon the means adopted for the settlement of this debt.

The Note points out that the arrangement resulting from the exchange of letters in 1905 was confirmed and carried out in Article 6, which it completed. It answers perfectly their present needs and the signatories have never thought of altering it.

ATTEMPT TO PAY IN SILVER.

The Ministers say that the Chinese Note of December shows that China in 1905 endeavoured to secure payment of arrears in silver, but was obliged to recognize her obligation to pay in gold. This furnishes a new argument in favour of the ruling in gold. China, not having the gold she had, still has to buy with the silver she possesses the gold necessary for the service of the indemnity. The method of this transaction not being settled by the Protocol occasioned subsequent discussions, but the difficulties were ended by the exchange of letters in 1905. By the terms of section three of these letters China was entitled to pay the indemnity by one of three systems either in silver according to the London price or in gold bills or by telegraphic transfers. The machinery of the last two systems differs only in the more or less rapid means of transmission with the resulting difference in the corresponding rates of exchange.

Some explanation follows regarding the methods of payment, after which the Ministers say that the Chinese Note of December confused the quotations of international exchanges by telegraphic transfer with telegraphic transfer itself, adding that telegraphic transfer in effect is applied as well to gold currency as to silver, paper and exchange currency.

THE ATTEMPT IN 1922.

When in December, 1922, China attempted to resume the service of the indemnity her representative approached the Shanghai agents of the interested Governments to purchase telegraphic transfers for francs. The disagreement which ensued was solely about the rate of the gold franc quoted by the agents. If the Government had accepted the rate offered the agents would have effected the required transfers. China cannot be ignorant, the Note declares, of the possibility of carrying on transactions in gold francs since the expenses of the League of Nations are paid in gold francs and China has accepted the gold franc as the currency of the Universal Postal Union.

The explanations which the Ministers have given above authorize them to state that they require only complete and unmodified execution of the conventions drawn up in 1901. They insist on this complete execution in order to cause to be respected the right of each one of the interested Powers to receive the proportion that they have determined among themselves, the service of which and guarantees have been placed under their common control.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING'S CABINET IN SESSION

Discussion on Trade Marks: Official Appointments: A Weekly Meeting

Peking, Feb. 9.

The first meeting of the Cabinet after the Lunar New Year holidays was held this morning. Premier Sun presided and all the Ministers were present. According to the official report of the meeting, the resignation of Gen. Chang Ying-fang, Chief of the Army and Navy Audit Department, was accepted, and it was resolved to appoint to that post Mr. Wu Kuang-ti, Mr. Yun Paohuai, former Chief Secretary of the Cabinet, was appointed special commissioner to arrange means of assisting the poor in Peking.

While the official report does not contain this news, it is understood that the Cabinet discussed the recent note from the Diplomatic Body regarding the Chinese Trademarks Law, finally deciding to refer the matter to the Ministries of Commerce, Finance and Foreign Affairs for further consideration before replying to the Note.

When the meeting concluded, the Members of the Cabinet waited on the President with a view to arranging for a weekly meeting with the President at which all outstanding matters can be discussed.—Reuter's Pacific Sevice.

THE SINO-GERMAN AGREEMENT

Quite Legitimate by Treaty

Paris, Feb. 9.

While no official confirmation has reached here of the Shanghai report of a Sino-German indemnity agreement, it is declared that this would be perfectly legitimate from the point of view of the Reparations Commission.

It is presumed that the $100,000,000, mentioned in the Shanghai telegram, is merely an instalment of the total debt of over $1,000,400,000 provided for in the Sino-German Peace Treaty.—Reuter.

A Peking telegram to the "Shunpao" states that the German Minister has issued a repudiation of the report of the Sino-German pact which appeared in the "North-China Daily News" last week. As expected!

CHINESE EASTERN RLWY.

Peking Feb. 10.

Dr. C. C. Wang, Tupan of the Chinese Eastern Railway, has arrived in Peking from Harbin. It is understood that Dr. Wang's visit was made in anticipation of the opening of Sino-Russian negotiations, during which questions connected with the railway will arise.—Reuter's Local Service.

CHINESE INDUSTRY AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Presidential Mandate: Dear Living and Banditry: Stockraising Posibilities of Mongolia

Peking, Feb. 10.

A mandate was issued last night dealing with encouragement of Chinese industries.

The mandate begins by pointing out that the welfare of the people depends very largely on successful industry. It goes on to say that in recent years changes have taken place in this country which have been injurious to trade, while the administration has not been conducted in a satisfactory manner.

The results have been much unemployment, while those who have been employed have found the costs of living continually increasing. Aged and disabled people in many cases have been faced with starvation, young and strong men have been driven to robbery and theft. In various parts bands of robbers are active.

In the northwestern regions large areas of land are suitable for stock raising. If suitable settlers were placed on the land there, with proper development their prosperity would be assured Many men could be employed in railway and mining development in those regions, which would absorb thousands of unemployed

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The Civil Service has been in a constant state of confusion in recent years. Foreign trained men and other technical experts have been given employment in the Civil Service with no regard for their special training. Such men should be employed in big industrial developments, while other industrial undertakings such as spinning, dyeing, tanneries and various manufactures should be established and encouraged.

With regard to the aged and infirm, proper relief measures must be devised. The mandate concludes with an order to the Ministries concerned to make arrangements with the provincial authorities for the establishment of special agricultural and pastoral regions in the northwest.—Reuter's Local Service.

THE SOVIET MISSION TO CHINA

Proposal to Proclaim Mongolia an Independent Republic: A Trade Agreement

Riga, Feb. 12.

According to reports to the press, M. Karakhan, the Soviet representative in Peking is endeavouring to obtain China's consent to the proclamation of an independent Mongolian Republic. It is stated that he has protested against alleged Chinese assistance to Anti-Bolshevik elements in Soviet territory and has issued a warning that, if the latter cross the frontier, Red troops will follow them into China.

Negotiations are reported to be in progress at Moscow for a Mongolian trade agreement.

It is stated that the explorer, M. Koslow, who left Irkutsk in August on a scientific expedition, has experienced unexpected difficulties in Mongolia and will return to Petrograd this month with the object of preparing another expedition to Mongolia next year.—Reuter.

Peking, Feb. 13.

It is reported that M. Karakhan, Russian Envoy in the Far East, perceiving that the attitude of the Chinese Government has become inclined towards the opening of the Russo-Chinese Conference, has cancelled his plan of making a tour of South China.—Eastern News Agency.

DIPLOMATIC APPOINTMENT

Peking, Feb. 11.

The Waichiaopu has appointed Mr. Chiang Hung-chieh (Second Secretary at Tokio) First Secretary of Legation. Mr. Vang Kah-lun has been appointed Chancellor of the same Legation. Mr. Fan Chi-kuang, Consul-General at Vladivostok, has been recalled and will be replaced by Mr. Shou Heng-chen as Acting Consul-General.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHENGTU BOMBARDED

Peking, Feb. 14.

Chinese reports from Ichang state that the Northern forces are bombarding Chengtu day and night. General Yuan Tsu-ming, the Kueichow commander who is fighting with the Northerners, left Luchow for Chengtu on February 12.

A foreign report from Szechuan states that the First and Sixth Szechuan Divisions were heavily defeated by the 21st Northern Division near Tungchuan, which was occupied on January 27 by the forces of Generals Tien and Yang Sen advancing from the east and from the west respectively. The message adds that General Hsiong Keh-wu was in Tung Chuan but escaped.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING'S SEARCH FOR A VICE-PRESIDENT

Peking, Feb. 11.

Mr. Wu Ching-lien's supporters in the House of Representatives have introduced a bill providing for the early election of a Vice-President. It is understood that they have already selected their candidate, but the name has not transpired.

Considerable importance is attached by official circles to this development and several names have been mentioned as those of likely nominees, including Wu Pei-fu, Tuan Chi-jui and Lu Yung-hsiang.

The Ministry of the Interior has received numerous telegrams from provincial authorities making inquiry as to the term of office of members elected to the provincial assemblies. In reply, the Ministry has telegraphed that this point is not stated in the national constitution and until a ruling has been obtained thereon the elections should be postponed, adding that such ruling when obtained will be published.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RATHER A MIXED FAMILY

A Problem for the Waichiaopu

Peking, Feb. 7.

An interesting and complicated case is now engaging the attention of the Waichiaopu. An American lady married a Chinese named Tung, who prior to the marriage had taken out naturalization papers as a British subject. Two children were born of this marriage. Subsequently Mr. Tung died and the children remained with the Tung family.

Later on again Mrs. Tung married an American citizen named Duff, who subsequently died. Mrs. Duff has since put in a claim for a lad eleven years of age, the other child having died, but the Tung family refuse to give up the lad. The lad in question was born in Peking. His father was a British subject, and his mother, an American citizen, claims custody over him, while the Tung family who claim guardianship are Chinese.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RAILWAY PROTECTION

Peking, Feb. 9.

The Railway Protection Bureau has appointed General Chiang Hsi-lin as an Inspector. General Chiang served in the Metropolitan Police for several years and is an expert on the training and use of police dogs.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A WELL EARNED REST

Peking, Feb. 9.

Mr. Wang Ko-ming having financially tided over the New Year wants to be relieved of the post of Minister of Finance and it is uncertain whether efforts to induce him to remain will be successful. Reuter's Pacific Service.

ever, for these. The army mourned its thousands of slain, but each single one of these was mourned individually by some desolate mother or father with a grief unspeakable. The consolation that their boy had fallen doing his duty to King and Country could only come later, but with it must have come the realization that for all time their sacrifice would be an incentive to high deeds for those succeeding them. It is because of this grief and pride that war memorials have been erected everywhere, in city and hamlet, the men from which laid down their lives. It is thus that we also in Shanghai, far removed as so many of us are from home, will to-day proudly yet sorrowfully join in the unveiling of the memorial to those who went west. For not only will it keep fresh the memory of friends of ours who fell but speak eloquently to future generations of the spirit of daring and self-sacrifice which displayed itself so prominently in the community at the hour of crisis.

THE N.-C. D. N. OPENING

Feb. 16.

THE thanks of all connected with the "North-China Daily News & Herald" are most heartily due to the friends who came in their hundreds yesterday to wish "the Old Lady of the Bund" good luck in her new home. The weather could not have been kinder; we trust the entertainment was to our guests' satisfaction; and certainly there could be no finer inaugural speech than that of Sir Ronald Macleay, full of wit and humour, of kind thoughts and sympathy, and of much sage and statesmanlike good counsel. To his Excellency our thanks must specially be given for the honour he has paid to the paper in finding time amidst his many occupations to come from Peking for the inauguration of its new building. And, perhaps, no better way can be found of expressing our appreciation than by endeavouring to act up to his advice in respect of Chinese affairs. Among the honours of the day, special mention must be made of the telegrams of congratulation received from President Tsao Kun, from the Minister of Foreign Affairs, from Marshal Chang Tso-lin. These messages both in wording and, we believe, in spirit testify that the Chinese people look upon the "North-China Daily News" as their friend and recognize that, where it seems at variance with them, its attitude is due only to sympathy with their perplexities and anger at the malignant fate which retards their progress. That this, however, is but a phase which will pass, is a certainty. A people so hardworking and intellectual as the Chinese, of so many sterling qualities and set in a country of such infinite possibilities, cannot be baulked for ever of their proper place in the comity of nations. Every transitional period in history, which now looks short enough in retrospect, must have seemed to the people who lived in it at least as long as that through which we are passing in China seems to us. But of the outcome there is no doubt: and while the "North-China Daily News," now completing one cycle of sixty years in China, hopes that it may see many more cycles, it has no fear but that long ere the second is completed, the good wishes received from its Chinese friends will have been accomplished also for them.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Rebel Smasher

In the middle of December when the latest Mexican rebellion broke out there were serious fears that it would upset the silver markets of the world by curtailing the production of the precious metal in the country. Fortunately at the head of affairs was President Obregon, a man largely experienced in rebelling and countering rebellions, and the whole business seems now in a fair way to fizzling out. Accordingly the principal features likely to disturb the world's silver market are the reported fresh discoveries in Canada. Silver, however, is not meant to be the theme of this discourse; it is President Obregon as being a man who apparently knows his job. When the rebellion broke out we traced his career subsequent to the time when he gave up the unromantic job of freight contractor and took to politics. It is interesting to note that he has twice been on the side of those rebelling against the government in power, and this latest attempt was the third in which he or his superiors were rebelled against. It shows that there is no use putting a prentice hand to the business of governing any country, and Mexico seems to have been lucky in having at its head on this occasion a man whose constant participation in what might be called the active politics of his country had fitted him to meet its customary outbreaks.

Grain Elevators

The very important proposal which we mention to-day for the installation of grain elevators in the port of Shanghai brings in its train a secondary but very vital consideration. If elevators are installed it will be for the purpose of rapid and efficient handling of grain from ship to mill, but when the position of a great many of the flour mills in Shanghai is considered it is easy to see a feature likely to defeat the object in question. For the purpose of cheap and easy transport of material a number of important mills have been built fronting the Soochow Creek, and they get all their supplies of raw material by boat and send the bulk of the finished product away by the same medium. Nowadays owing to the deplorable state of this waterway boats and lighters which have been loaded from ships in the harbour are taking days to reach their destination, and some of the mills have found themselves at times very short of supplies. In the meantime the cost of the flour they produce is bound to show an increase because demurrage has to be paid on the lighters they employ for transportation work. A point to be noted is that for a great many months now various Chinese bodies have been talking about having the Creek dredged, but they seem to be no nearer its accomplishment than the day they set to discussing it. At this rate of progress we might easily see the elevators in full swing and the greater part of their efficiency wasted because no progress can be made with the secondary matter of the Creek. It is hardly likely that such a consideration will in the least hasten the rectification of the Socchow Creek but it may influence those interested in the elevator project.

Military Funerals

A distinctly interesting piece of criticism appeared in the Chinese Press this week especially so because it got away from the kind of topic which Chinese newspapers usually enjoy. It dealt with the subject of military funerals in Shanghai, the note (appearing in the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce") questioning the right or propriety of paying military honours to deceased members of the Volunteer Corps who had never been engaged in actual warfare. It urged that such honours should only be given to those who were ex-service men, and concluded with the somewhat pertinent query that if military funerals were given to all volunteers what sort of funeral should be given to a man who had actually been on the field of battle? While admitting all the prima facie considerations contained in our contemporary's article, we must point out that one very important point has been omitted. The Volunteer Corps is a military body, and its status is none the less so because it is a purely voluntary organization. The criterion is the fact of its being a military body, and when the position of military men in normal times is taken into account the case for a military funeral is reinforced. It must be remembered that prior to the Great War only a negligible percentage of the men engaged in it had seen active service, and a very great number of regular soldiers, some of long service, who participated had never heard a shot fired in anger prior to 1914. This was especially the case in the German army. Take the lifetime of the average soldier, and actual fighting will generally be found to occupy the least part of it. Naturally when the world is enjoying a prolonged spell of peace there must be many soldiers who have never seen a campaign, yet in the event of their death in the service full military honours would be accorded. And this is the justification in the case of the S.V.C.

Air Services in China

Marshal Wu Pei-fu's proposal for an air service between Hankow and Ichang will probably leave the majority of foreigners in the country cold. There have been so many schemes of the kind on foot and so little actual performance that people are justified in a strong scepticism when fresh talk occurs. The Peking-Tientsin service may still be running, but what of the proposals to link up Shanghai with the Capital, to inaugurate an aerial mail service to the cities of the Upper Yangtze and to bring Hongkong into communication by the same means? Like the grandiose beliefs in a swift aerial service Home across Siberia, they have all fizzled out. In recounting such failures the last thing we should wish to do is to discourage Marshal Wu or any other enlightened official from making the attempt, but when, in connexion with commercial aviation, China and other countries are compared it is impossible to see present ground for hope. After the war highly organized nations such as Great Britain and France indulged in much talk about what would in a brief space of time be accomplished in aerial services, and the tale was taken up overseas and there was a hope that at no distant date the Empire would be so linked up that from its farthest outposts to its Capital would be but a matter of a few days. By far the greater part of this has had to be abandoned, and only a few Continental services remain. China can by no means be described as a highly organized country, and in the circumstances there need be no surprise that only insignificant progress has hitherto been made. At the same time all these facts should teach that under present conditions no great hopes can be centred upon schemes such as the one just noted.

The Lewis Gun

No doubt local volunteers gave much attention to the report published this week with regard to the British Army's adoption of the Browning automatic rifle in place of the Lewis Gun, and so that no misconception with reference to the matter may occur a further note may be useful. It was known some months ago that British experts were testing the new Browning weapon, and after the trials decided to buy it. This, however, does not mean that it will be brought into general use immediately, but on the contrary the present stock of Lewis guns will have to be exhausted before the Browning rifles take their place. Britain has no money at the present time to spend on expensive new equipment for her army, and so under the policy laid down it will be a considerable period before the actual change-over of the weapons has been completed. To-day the Shanghai Volunteer Corps is armed with the Lewis Gun and it should be the last idea in the world to get about that this weapon is in any way going to become obsolescent in the near future owing to the advent of the Browning invention. This will be seen from the position described above, and in the circumstances of the case Lewis gun training will continue to be as valuable to the members from every point of view, and not merely the local one by any means, as it was on the introduction of the arm into the Corps.

The British Chambers

We should like to be allowed to congratulate the chairman of the British Chambers' of Commerce Conference on his very fine address at the opening ceremony. The review of the past year showed that something had been achieved even in the midst of many disappointments; while the general survey of political events was most timely and judicial. But the part of the speech which will attract most attention was that in which Mr. Humphrys sketched the policy which the Chambers advocate. He rightly recalled what is often forgotten, that the Washington Conference was not convened to discuss the affairs of China but limitation of armaments and that the Far East was only brought in because, if armaments are to be limited potential causes of discord, in which the Pacific has been unfortunately rife, must be removed. The internal condition of China being, already, notorious, the opportunity was taken to endeavour to awaken the Chinese officials to a sense of their responsibility and to encourage them, by specific concessions and further promises, to bring China to her proper place in the comity of nations. But as Mr. Humphrys rightly pointed out, those promises were conditional: if the nations did certain things for China she must do certain things for them—nothing more than any civilized nation does in maintenance of treaties and protection of foreign trade, but more than she had hitherto attempted to do. And in no sense were the Washington resolutions meant to undermine extraterritoriality or supplant treaties. On both these points, however, the Chinese officials have adopted a totally erroneous view. They appear to think that they are to take all and give nothing and that in particular treaties are of no account, and it becomes necessary to remind them that if they expect foreigners to act in the spirit of Washington, in that spirit they must act themselves. The ideal, Mr. Humphrys thinks, is that China should invite expert assistance in setting her affairs straight. If she prefers to work out her own salvation in her own way, which may take many years to accomplish, foreigners will wait with what patience they can: but while waiting, they must and shall insist on observance of their treaty rights, even if force be necessary to their fulfilment, although no one wishes to resort to extremes and all are anxious to deal with China in the fullest spirit of friendliness and reason. The only fault one might find in this enunciation of policy is that China's condition calls for something more definitely constructive and is likely to call for it with increasing urgency as the years pass. There are no signs of any tendency or ability in her to solve her own troubles, rather the reverse. And inasmuch as she appears most unlikely to call in outside assistance, the alternative is that it should be offered her spontaneously in such manner as to leave no doubt of the friendliness of the offer. We fully realize the difficulties in the way of such a course and hence, no doubt, the policy that Mr. Humphrys outlines. At least there is nothing harsh or unreasonable in asking that treaties shall be respected, especially as the outcome of such respect actually redounds far more to the benefit of Chinese than of foreigners.

The Singapore Base

The question of the Singapore naval base having again come before Parliament, all the arguments adopted in the original controversy will have to be gone through anew. Perhaps owing to the advent of Labour to office in Britain, Japanese writers have recently re-opened the discussion, and in one lengthy article practically the only aspect dealt with is Britain's hypothetical enemy in the Pacific whose presence makes the base necessary. This hypothetical enemy is declared to be Japan, and thereafter argument naturally proceeds along the lines that in view of Japan's changed condition to-day as compared with when the scheme was first proposed, the base has ceased to be a necessity. That, however, is only one aspect of the case, and it must be pointed out that the base need not necessarily be directed against a hypothetical enemy but designed principally to secure the neutrality of British and Dutch possessions in that part of the world. So valuable is oil to the navies of the world to-day that in the event of a conflict between any two Pacific naval Powers it is well within the bounds of probability that there would be a rush on the part of either fleet for the Dutch East Indies because of their valuable supply of oil. With a fleet based on Singapore Britain would be in a position to warn the rival parties off and hence do important work in localizing the conflict. This is as important a consideration in the case as any. The fresh argument which is brought forward to-day against the base is that as a result of the national loss caused through the earthquake, Japan will not have the means to become a naval menace to anybody for years to come. This is, of course, an important consideration and may invest the debates in the House of Commons with a new interest.

Sir Harry Lauder

Sir Harry Lauder, whose coming visit to Shanghai has just been announced, has been described as the best known Scotsman in the world. It is probably perfectly true, for when the politicians and soldiers of other countries are considered in comparison with their actors and film or comic artists from the point of view of the knowledge of the public, the case becomes clear. For instance it will probably be found that for every one who knows anything about Earl Haig, the Earl of Balfour or Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, half a dozen can talk with comprehension on the subject of Harry Lauder. In just the same way Douglas and Mary rank as the most worldwidely known Americans. Like all great men, Sir Harry Lauder is a bit of a mystery to those who know him only by repute or having heard him in the music halls. Englishmen have claimed him as of their nationality, alleging that he comes from Newcastle. The people of Arbroath (the Aberbrothock of Scott's "Monastery") suggest an entirely different story, and they used to say that his real name was something like Tam Spinkie or Tim Swankie, and that he was a fellow townsman. They were, however, also incorrect, although their claim to him was not so far fetched as Newcastle's. "Who's Who" tells us that Sir Harry was born in Portobello, but educated at the aforesaid Arbroath by one Stumpie Bell. Hence probably the aforesaid name and tradition. Having settled that point, it only remains to be mentioned that his only son was killed during the war and that he was knighted because of the immense sums of money he raised for war charities and his work among the troops. Undoubtedly a great achievement for one who started life as a flax-spinner.

ACCORDING to the "Eastern Times" the Diplomatic Corps has instructed the local Consular Body to warn the Kiangsu-Chêkiang authorities against warfare, lest foreign lives and interests be involved. Meanwhile Peking's official representative has met Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang, Director-General for the Reorganization of Military Affairs in Chêkiang, who has signified his desire for peace. Gen. Lu has stated that he certainly will not begin fighting with any of his neighbours "as the time has come for China to put aside her internal quarrels and work for peace and reunification."

vassed, whether by the British Chambers or elsewhere matters not, we would earnestly suggest that something more is needed than an embargo on any new loan until there is a Government which can govern. It is notorious that bargains have been concluded with Peking which, even if their terms are less open to criticism than is generally rumoured, were at least of a decidedly speculative character as the rates of interest etc. clearly show. Their negotiators plainly "took a chance" and it is consistent neither with the prestige of a great Power nor the interests of its nationals generally, that its diplomatic machinery should be put in motion in their defence. Public opinion in China may not be much of a weapon against its own officials, but in the matter of foreign loans it is quickwitted and obstreperous and it does not hesitate to differentiate between what it will tolerate and what it will not. We cannot help thinking that it would pay the British Chambers handsomely to draw a similar distinction.

GERMAN POLITICS TO-DAY

Feb. 14.

Apart from Reparations, but otherwise from the broad political aspect, three outstanding features to-day present themselves in German politics and are likely to provide a clue to the future of the country for those who are interested in it commercially or otherwise. Two of the aspects are political—one external (the Separatist movement), the other internal (the tendency of recent elections), while the third is perhaps the most far-reaching of all, financial. With the dubious point as to whether they are correlated there is no occasion for onlookers so far removed from the scene of actual events [illegible] themselves, and we may go to the essentials of the different aspects without further ado. The first consideration with which we shall deal is the Separatist movement, which a telegram this week indicated as being in its death-throes. Even those who sympathize most with the position of France vis-à-vis of her larger neighbour must have had grave doubts concerning the wisdom of support being given to the buffer state idea, such as the Separatist Rhineland movement connoted. It was made attractive to Germans through the idea that by becoming separate entities they would somehow escape the payment of Reparations, but had such been the intention of the politics of the case, it is readily perceived that the whole German Reich would speedily have split into its original component parts. The danger of such a conjuncture to the peace of Europe is readily comprehended from a remark made by the German ex-Chancellor, von Bethmann-Hollweg, who complained that the Treaty of Versailles had Balkanized Europe. If a great Separatist movement were further to Balkanize the German Reich it would surely be a more serious matter. This is not a view based on any sentimental sympathy for Germany but a knowledge of how small states through their squabbles with equally small neighbours have the knack of dragging big Powers into their quarrels and thus promoting worldwide conflagrations. From this point of view, if none other, the end of the Separatist movement is to be welcomed.

The Thuringian elections constitute the second feature in the German political situation which calls for attention. Socialists there have suffered a defeat, and [illegible] evidence of a general movement to the Right on the part of the electorate. Lübeck has followed suit, and [illegible] than in the Reichstag elections in June the whole country is expected to move in a similar conservative direction. The importance of this becomes apparent when we consider the political history of the country since the war. After the exit of the Kaiser and the disappearance of the leading men of the militarist group following the armistice, the Socialist element in Germany became powerful, and it hoped to increase its influence by bringing the Communist party to its aid. The latter were practically hand in glove with the Reds of Moscow, but it seemed to the Socialists that even so they might provide an accession of strength. This proved to be the case for a time, but the German Communists have shown themselves altogether too strong meat for the bulk of the inhabitants. For one thing the criminal element seems to have been somewhat exalted in their ranks, this, incidentally, being said to be equally a feature of the Separatists. The alliance is now proving fatal to the cause of the moderate Socialists, and first in the case of the state legislature of Thuringia and next of Lübeck the elections show that Socialism is growing in disfavour. The pendulum, however, does not seem to be swinging violently, and there is no suggestion that in the coming elections the country means to go farther than the putting of a bourgeois government into power. If it does so, and the rentenmark, to which we shall refer immediately, continues to be a success, there ought to be a considerable measure of stability in the country.

Mention of the rentenmark brings us to the third principal issue in the political life of Germany to-day, namely finance. The rentenmark has proved the first currency in Germany to face the financial débâcle successfully, and it has had, according to the latest reports from Europe, an extraordinary effect upon the general life of the populace. The intention in issuing it was to make it a note currency based on securities within the country, and beyond the limit of issue laid down no additional notes could be printed. It was received with confidence by the people, and it is believed that that confidence still remains. By the time that the paper mark had gone absolutely to perdition, when nothing could be bought for less than millions, people in Germany with goods to sell had to a great extent ceased doing business, for they realized that it was folly to sell an article for a million one day when next day a million would not pay the price of a penny postage stamp. So goods for sale in the shops disappeared, and the country seemed bare of supplies. The appearance of the rentenmark with its strict limitations and guarantees altered this immediately, and even Germans were surprised to find how great were the supplies of necessaries in the country. The result has been seen in a resumption of ordinary trading and a return, in some measure at least, to a normal life. A continuance of this state of affairs depends upon the scrupulous integrity with which the rentenmark is used by the Government, but up to the present no complaint has been heard on that score. It is further believed that the introduction of a gold standard again, through the medium of an international loan, depends largely upon the continued favour in which the rentenmark is held, and this must be a large inducement to Berlin not to tamper with it. In the circumstances of the case it seems not unlikely that we now see the beginnings of a stable currency which may bring Germany once more into the position of a country able to carry on international trade which economists regard as an essential for the recovery of Europe.

THE PILFERAGE OF CARGO

Feb. 15.

While the up-country merchant bewails the depredations of bandits, his confrère in Shanghai has really hardly less cause of complaint in the monstrous depredations of pilferers in harbour. The magnitude of this evil enforces the hope that the timely resolution moved by Mr. E. F. Mackay at the British Chambers of Commerce yesterday may be productive of reform. The word pilferage, suggesting as it does a little boy sneaking an apple off an old woman's stall, conveys no idea of the extent to which cargo is stolen in Shanghai. Not long ago a case was recorded in which laodahs, in conspiracy with brokers and loafers, disappeared with a cargo boat containing paper, yarn and cloth to a value of over Tls. 6,000, and nothing more was ever heard of either boat or cargo. Scarcely a week passes but a charge of theft in the harbour is heard in the Mixed Court and such cases probably do not represent a tithe of the losses that occur. As Mr. Mackay pointed out, Shanghai, now one of the chief ports of the world and through which many millions of tons of shipping annually pass, is acquiring an evil reputation for pilferage in the trade centres of every continent.

Every employer of oriental labour is aware of the difficulty of checking theft; but the root of all trouble in the case of Shanghai's harbour is the utter inadequacy of the river police force. They do their best, no merchant would withhold his tribute to them on this score. But what can some thirty-three men do, however zealous, in a harbour fifteen miles long on the two banks together, with innumerable jetties and landing places unprotected by any Customs barrier and with long stretches of open foreshore, while in addition there is the Soochow Creek with its thousands of boats and mazes of adjoining rookeries in which a thief may disappear like the rabbit in a conjuror's hat? Recently the Commissioner of Customs received word from Peking of an additional grant of Tls. 25,000 with provision for an extra hulk and two more steamlaunches; and it is proposed to bring the River Police up to a force of seventeen foreigners and twenty-eight Chinese. But this is far inferior to the figure at which the shipping companies put the minimum force requisite, in a letter addressed to the General Chamber of Commerce two years ago. They asked for forty-eight foreign and the same number of Chinese constables, twelve sergeants, three inspectors and one superintendent, with at least eight launches and four motor-boats. When one considers the extent of waters to be guarded, this does not seem at all excessive. Even when robbers can be caught, the question of jurisdiction affords many loopholes. For apart from the Mixed Courts of foreign and international settlements, there are numbers of courts under Chinese control and it is frequently a matter of the greatest difficulty to find out in which of them all a prisoner is to be prosecuted. Further, there is the difficulty of collecting the necessary evidence. There may be no moral doubt of a prisoner's guilt: in the circumstances of such cases, when a capture is made, we may be fairly sure that there is no mistake as to his being the right man. But the actual proof demanded by a court of law is unavailable.

The question of the Soochow Creek, of which Mr. A. W. Burkill spoke in seconding Mr. Mackay's resolution, presents additional problems, with which our readers are familiar. Until the creek is properly dredged, which the Chinese responsible for it will neither do themselves nor permit others to do, the congestion of traffic cannot be removed; but there is no doubt that a more adequate staff of police could do much to facilitate the movement of boats, as, on land, the management of our narrow and traffic-laden Nanking Road amply proves. Traffic difficulties are by no means confined, however, to the Soochow Creek. No captain navigating the Huangpu but will testify to the danger presented by the erratic small craft plying thereon, which ever increases in volume. To sum up, it is not suggested that the Customs should relieve merchants and wharfowners of what they should do for themselves in the matter of watchmen ashore and on shipboard. But this still leaves an enormous area unprotected, apart altogether from harbour waters, for which the Customs has sole responsibility; and it is obviously absurd to attempt this great charge with the same force that was used when harbour and tonnage alike were but a fraction of what they are now. Considering the amount of revenue annually collected in Shanghai, we cannot but think that the Customs authorities in Peking could afford to be more liberal. The resolution passed at yesterday's meeting deals with a matter in which redress is possible, in contrast with the many which nothing but disappointment awaits. Let us hope that that quite obtainable success will ensue.

Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang, the Christian soldier, has personally urged President Tsao Kun to appoint Gen. Chang Shao-tseng, premier in the last Li Yung-hung Cabinet, High Military Inspecting Commissioner of Kansu, Shensi and Sinkiang.

Marshal Chi Hsieh-yuan, Governor-General of Kiangsu, Kiangsi and Anhui, has telegraphed to Peking requesting the Government to approach the Diplomatic Corps with a view to expelling from foreign settlements or arresting any or all persons opposed to the Central Government, but the Government has replied stating that they fear the Diplomatic Corps will refuse to take action unless they receive explicit details of the "offenders."

THOSE WHO WENT WEST

Feb. 16

Although nine years have elapsed since the event, the writer recalls with complete vividness the solemn hush which passed through his battalion when its first casualty occurred in France. The battalion had been only a day or two in the country and had been pushed up to the front to be broken in so that it might take part in the Battle of Neuve Chapelle. By platoons the men were being inaugurated into trench life under the tutelage of a hard-fighting regular battalion, and the leading contingent had hardly been more than a few hours in the trenches when the first casualty occurred, a young, handsome and particularly gay fellow being killed by a sniper. To those who had never been face to face with warfare before, the thing was preposterous, outrageous, in fact almost incredible—a man after months of training to die before there was time for him to strike a blow for his country. In a sector, too, which was at the moment quiet, although everybody knew that in a few days it would blaze forth into battle, and then, of course, everybody would expect casualties, but, in their ignorance of modern conditions, imagined it would be in a glorious mad charge against the enemy.

It was in its way a rude introduction to war as waged in this century, although by no means so drastic as many others went through. Perhaps the fact that it was one solitary tragedy created all the more profound an impression, hence the dread solemnity of the occasion. In comparison with the working of the war machine which had been set in motion through the events of 1914 the casualty was insignificant, and by the time that the lists of killed and wounded reached stupendous figures, when whole companies and even battalions disappeared in the carnage of the Somme and Ypres, those who were present at that first incident were hardened campaigners and took a different view of casualties. From the nature of the case these losses represented to the battalion or company commander a grievous decrease in his fighting power and spells of hard training to bring the drafts taking their place up to concert pitch. In this there was no suggestion that men were merely cannon fodder, but the case was that the war had to be won, that everything had to be sacrificed to winning it, otherwise the liberty of nations which prized freedom above all else was to disappear.

Though, as all know too well to-day, war is the hardest of taskmasters, making slaves to duty of those engulfed in it, yet it has a strange humanizing influence. Men made the most intimate and splendid friendships with people they never would have met in their ordinary civilian life, and when these disappeared in the maelstrom there was deep sorrow. The leaders of the armies knew that every operation they initiated would result in death and bloodshed, but they had their duty to do, though when the strain and stress of battle were over there must have been many scenes similar to when Wellington shed tears on being presented with the casualty list of Waterloo. They likewise had to mourn their friends who went West in these titanic encounters. The supreme tragedy was not how

DR. THOMPSON AND MONGOL BANDITS

Story of His Capture and Release: Captive's Ingenious Pretence of Hunger Strike

Peking, Feb. 6.

Dr. Thompson, who was recently captured by bandits in the Paotowchen district, arrived in Peking yesterday morning looking very well considering his recent experience.

After the death of General Pereira, Dr. Thompson continued the journey which the General had intended to make, and eventually reached Lanchowfu. From there he struck down the Yellow River in the direction of Paotowchen, where he intended to take the train to Peking. He was travelling in a cart drawn by two mules, and accompanied by a boy. The journey was uneventful until he came within 60 li of Paotow, when 200 mounted bandits suddenly appeared as he was approaching the top of rising ground. The bandits wanted Dr. Thompson to mount a pony and abandon the cart, but this he emphatically refused to do. After some argument the bandits gave way, but harnessed another mule to the cart, so that greater speed could be made. About this time Dr. Thompson managed to get a message sent to the Chinese authorities giving brief notice of his capture, saying that his cart could be seen from a considerable distance as it has a white top, and urging that the bandits should be pressed at once.

A WILD JOURNEY.

The arrest occurred on January 24 and for the next eight days the bandits careered over the country as fast as the cart could be driven up and down dale. They intercepted and looted several camel caravans, but committed no murders. From houses they took only what they required.

Occasionally they indulged in horse-play intended to create a suitable atmosphere. One of their favourite practices was to gather around Dr. Thompson in the night and fire their rifles. After each exhibition of this nature they came to see whether he had been frightened and seemed surprised that he had not been terrified.

They informed Dr. Thompson that they intended to hold him until they obtained a satisfactory assurance that they would be taken into the regular forces.

A HUNGER STRIKE.

Getting tired of the ceaseless travelling, Dr. Thompson decided to bring matters to a climax by going on a hunger strike by refusing to eat Chinese food. After a few days the bandits began to be alarmed, and he urged them to carry out their negotiations for his release quickly, as he thought he could not last another two days, pointing out that his dead body would be of no use to their purpose. Then they took him to a small village, where a Belgian priest was stationed. Discussions were ineffectually carried on between the priest and the bandits until the former had to go to another village to discuss terms for the release of Father van Praet. During the conversations at the village the bandits mentioned 1,000 rifles, four machine-guns and a large quantity of ammunition as well as a large ransom in money as essentials for the release of Dr. Thompson, but they did not seem unanimous regarding either the general terms, the amount of ransom or the conditions of their enrolment.

RELEASED.

After the departure of the priest, and it may have been through his action, it was announced by the bandits that Dr. Thompson's release had been arranged. He was then hastily marched off without overcoat or gloves, in bitter cold weather and taken to a farmhouse where ponies were waiting. From there a day's ride brought them to a point where 500 Chinese soldiers were waiting. One of the bandits gave Dr. Thompson a coat on the journey, but he still suffered very severely until they reached the soldiers. Here the hardships ended.

Dr. Thompson does not know the details of his release. All his belongings and much of General Pereira's effects were kept by the gang. Most of General Pereira's photographs and some of his papers were retained by Dr. Thompson. The bandits did not treat him badly on the whole.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MOTORING IN NORTH KIANGSU

Reckless Driving Between Yangchow and Chinkiang

From Our Own Correspondent.

Yangchow, Jan. 30.

Accidents continue to occur on the motor road between Yangchow and Chinkiang, due chiefly to reckless driving. The day before yesterday the driver zigzagged over a rough bit of road and the car rolled down the embankment, striking one of the occupants. No one was seriously hurt. Two weeks ago a private car with four passengers, turned over while going through sandy ground, one man receiving a cut on the forehead, and another a compound fracture of the collar bone, both requiring hospital care. The driver was kept in gaol a number of days by the magistrate, pending investigation of the matter. There was talk of filing suit against the motor company, and a heavy fine imposed upon those in charge would perhaps be one of the best means of inducing the chaffeurs to be more careful.

The motor service is well patronized and during good weather has many advantages over the launch service, the launches running but twice a day and requiring four to six hours for the trip during this season of low water in the Grand Canal. People with much baggage invariably ride on the launch as only one article can be taken with the ticket on the car. The trip by boat has this advantage, that no transfer is required between here and Chinkiang, whereas transfer to a small launch is necessary on the car service to cross the Yangtze to Chinkiang.

A hitch in this service made it very inconvenient a week ago for about 50 people took the road. The cars arrived at the north shore of the Yangtze at 2 p.m. A strong east wind was blowing, the river was rough and snow began to fall. Passengers waited but no launch appeared. It was learned by telephone that the single boat operated as a ferry by the auto company had suffered an accident to the rudder. Another launch was to be rented and sent across by 4.30. Many country people were gathered at the landing hoping to buy "short" tickets to Chinkiang but were sent away early as these tickets were not being sold. Passengers became impatient and the station agent was kept busy, between arguing with them and telephoning Yangchow to hurry up the launch at Chinkiang. A few sail boats were making good time up the Yangtze, but no launch appeared and at 5 o'clock the people were taken back to Yangchow through a blizzard and had their ticket money refunded at this end of the line.

Mr. C. D. Tyler, an engineer from Shanghai, has been called to Yangchow by the auto company. He is getting the seven passenger trucks and five private cars in a better state of repair, and buying new equipment. Two Republic trucks have been ordered which will greatly hasten the work of putting a hard surface on the motor road.

AN ARCHAEOLOGIST'S PARADISE

Wonderful Find of Ancient Pottery in Loess Cliffs

From Our Own Correspondent

Titao, Kan., Jan. 20

The entire district has been very much worked up over the discovery of pottery that the natives classify as belonging to the period of the Shang dynasty. A collector for Dr. Andersson, Advisor to the Chinese Government, has been here acting as advance agent for the Doctor and has unearthed quite a bit of pottery as well as stone and bone implements.

The spot where most of the stuff has been found is about 2½ miles southwest of the city among loess cliffs forming the rim of the Tao river valley. Along the edges of these cliffs are pockets marked by black ash and a few minutes' work with even a screw driver is enough to unearth an interesting assortment of stone knives, bone saws, and needles, and fragments of ancient pottery, most of it ribbed in a curious way as though formed on moulds of hempstrings.

There in no trace of metal in any of the pockets and whereas some of the findings seem to indicate burial spots where the dead were laid with a full assortment of the where-with-all to start life in the new world, other spots seem to be the sites of ancient dwellings.

DISTINCTIVE DECORATIVE ART.

We have not been able to unearth any pottery with any painting on it but inquiry in the villages of this area has brought to light a number of large pots that have been unearthed in the past with curious patterns in faded vermilion and rusty black. To those familiar with the favorite motifs of Chinese art these are at once distinctive in their strangeness. Mystics symbols of sun and wind and other esoteric patterns quite unintelligible to the amateur remind one of the ancient art of Babylon and the near east and prompts the eager question "Was there any ancient and close communication between this part of China and those dead and gone civilizations by some trade route through the Tsaidam—some trade route long since forgotten?

Surely China with its immense store from the past secreted in that incomparable preservative loess is the choice hunting ground for the archaeologist?

TIENTSIN SENSATION

Prince, Count and American as Kidnappers: Plot to Ransom Wealthy Foreigners

The dramatic arrest in Tientsin last week of a Russian Prince, a Count, an American citizen and others alleged to be members of a gang of kidnappers, was the means of foiling a daring plot to capture wealthy foreigners in the port.

According to the "Peking and Tientsin Times" the men were arrested while lying in wait for a victim on February. Five of the men are Russians, and one, said to be leader, an American named Wagner.

"It was at 5 o'clock that one of the Russians was first seen hanging about Woodrow Wilson Street, and at intervals others came to join him. Shortly before 10 o'clock a large automobile drove up. The car was drawn up to the side of the road, and the occupants joined the Russians lounging on the footpath.

Leaving nothing to chance, the police closed in, and without any resistance being made, arrested all the men, including the Chinese chauffeur. One of the men, it is stated, had a revolver in his pocket, and in the car was a black-jack. The prisoners were immediately taken to the Special Area Police Station, and one of them volunteered the statement that they were waiting for a German who had promised to give them a supply of opium and morphia.

"We have little doubt that the men were concerned in a carefully laid plan to kidnap wealthy Russians," said Mr. Ting, secretary to the Chief of Police. "The information concerning the gang was first brought by some of our detectives, and it was through them that we learned of the meeting in Woodrow Wilson Street, and were thus able to arrest them."

Other inquiries in official sources led to further interesting details to Mr. Ting's statement. "It is believed that the gang has been engaged in minor criminal operations, if not in serious offences, for some months past, and that the scheme for kidnapping was perfected weeks ago" said one of our informants. "The two special victims marked down by the gang were Mr. Kakoostin and Mr. Agareff, two Russian gentlemen of means. The latter is the owner of a pharmacy close to the Kreier Hotel. Various attempts to kidnap Mr. Kakoostin were abandoned at the last moment, and the gang then turned its immediate attention to Mr. Agareff."

"It is thought that the men were waiting in Woodrow Wilson Street on the chance of Mr. Agareff walking past, and when he failed to appear they decided to go to his house and 'persuade' him to enter the car. It was at this juncture that the police made their dramatic appearance."

The car was hired from a Russian Garage in the French Concession, and the chauffeur is alleged to be implicated. He made a statement to the police in the course of which he is alleged to have admitted that Mr. Kakoostin was to be forced to pay a ransom of $100,000, and Mr. Agareff $60,000.

The discovery of a rope in the car has instituted fresh police inquiries into a murder committed in Taku Road some months ago. The rope, it is stated, is similar to one used to strangle a Chinese pawnbroker, and the theory is advanced that the gang just arrested may have had a hand in this crime also.

The Russian Police refused to divulge the names of the men under arrest, but inquiries in another quarter elicited the fact that one of the men is a Russian Prince, and another a Count.

The American, Wagner, is still at the Special Area Station, but he will be examined by the American Consul General in a day or two. It is expected that further sensational disclosures will be made as a result of the inquiries still being pursued.

ANXIOUS DAYS IN JAPAN

Panic Caused by Italian Scientist's Recent Predictions: Market Affected

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 31.

We are just breathing sincere sighs of relief now that January 29 and January 30 have passed without any further discords of Nature smiting us.

Raphael Bendanti, the Italian sculptor-scientist, who claims to have invented instruments whereby he is able to foretell earthquakes several days before they occur and who has declared that "before long it will be possible for me to register forthcoming earthquakes just as the sailing and arrival of vessels can be announced," predicted violent seismic upheavals some time these two days along the east coast of Asia. Of course, this is an immensely large area, and might apply to unknown regions of Siberia, to the Philippines or to China. We have, however, been in the grip of earthquakes since the cataclysm of September last, and a fearsome anxiety prevailed in everyone's breast that the blow would fall on Japan—and in the part of Japan that had already been smitten.

Something akin to a panic, which was clearly visible in the stock markets, prevailed. Calamity prophets were active, ancient superstitions were resurrected and horror howlers gained many adherents as a result of the nervous mental condition of the people.

To add to the worries of the people, Professor T. Nakamura, a professor in the Tokio Imperial University—an acknowledged expert on seismology—declared, through the Press, that "five or six earthquakes of about the same severity as experienced on the morning of January 15, will take place in Japan this year." The scientist based his predictions on observations made in the vicinity of Mount Tanazawa, in the Hakone hills some 40 miles from Tokio, where the quake of January 15 is believed to have originated. The seismologist says that the group of small lakes in the Hakone region—the Riviera or Japan—have been changing in size and that the water level is much lower than a few months ago, and accounts for this phenomenon by saying that the water in the lakes is seeping below the surface to underground volcanic regions. This water, he says, will be converted to steam and will eventually cause subterranean disturbances. Dr. Nakamura states that a marked shrinkage in the water level of Lake Sanshu, at the base of Mount Fuji, was observed shortly before the terrible calamity of last September and that there is clear connexion between these water phenomena and terrestrial upheavals.

WORKERS RUN FACTORIES.

An increasing number of workers, especially skilled artisans, are entering into the manufacturing industry on their own account. This is no new occurrence, but has become more noticeable since the earthquake disaster which, in a way, opened opportunities for working-class people to co-operate in maintaining, running and managing factories themselves. Many factories, the proprietors of which were too heavily saddled with losses as a result of last year's catastrophe to resuscitate them, have been taken over by former employees and are being run by them.

A certain amount of the working capital is subscribed by the enterprising workers themselves. This amount is supplemented by loans from trade guilds or by Government grants. The procedure is not confined to the earthquake-affected zone; printing establishments in Osaka have been run on these lines and have proved successful Due to insufficiency of capital, however, the enterprises run by the labourers are necessarily on a small scale.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

MUKDEN'S AIR FORCE

Recent Additions Include New Type of Plane Built Locally by Russian Inventor

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mukden, Jan. 29.

The Mukden Air Force has acquired four aeroplanes built by a Russian inventor named Dill, the special feature of which are movable wings enabling the machine to ascend immediately on being started.

The inventor has been in Mukden for some time constructing the planes. The first, however, was put together in Harbin, and not without many difficulties, owing to the impossibility of getting special parts properly made. It was some time before a buyer could be found when the machine was completed. Eventually it was seen by exports from Mukden, who reported favourably and purchased it. At the same time Dill got an order from Mukden for three more of his planes, which he built here.

Having completed his labours for the Mukden authorities, he is going to America, to which country he sent a representative there some time ago to obtain patent rights and if possible to interest some American concern.

In addition to the Dill planes the Mukden Air Service possesses two of the Handley-Page type, for each of which there is an English instructor here. Other aeroplanes in the force are of French make, in charge of Russian airmen.

Twenty artillery instructors here are Russian, but it is probable that their services will be dispensed with shortly, the Chinese being dissatisfied with them.

BANK OFFICIAL'S VISIT TO MUKDEN.

The newly appointed manager of the Russo-Asiatic Bank, with headquarters in Peking, was here the other day to visit Chang Tso-lin, with the object, it is said, of improving relations between the bank and the Mukden overlord. The bank is not looked upon very favourably by Chinese officials in these parts, owing to its stand regarding the Chinese Eastern Railway.

APPALLING TYRANNY IN FUKIEN

People Forced to Grow Opium: Tortured, Fleeced, Massacred if Resisting

From a Correspondent.

Hinghua, Fukien, Jan. 28.

Political conditions here are simply awful. The way these military dictators are fleecing the people is leading straight to moral and commercial ruin. First forcing the farmers to plant opium (men of 70 or 80) at the point of the bayonet. Stringing up the villages elders by the wrists to a beam, while the people paid an extra $2 per mow, everything to be paid within three days; $1 a family for a load of salt; $1 per man for road-building and your fields confiscated at the same time, a military levy on so-called well-to-do to tide the soldiers over the New Year varying from $100 to $2000. All this without any particular notice or sanction and nothing whatever for it, not even protection from bandits.

Now they have started an office to collect $0 cents per ounce on opium in transit within the radius of about two counties, to keep per ounce for a free government military pass through about six counties. Meanwhile the lessees of this tax have a few troops who make periodical swoops on quite innocent people (wherever there is the least chance of loot or a squeeze) to search for opium, arms or ammunition. Quite a number of people have committed suicide.

People are selling their children to pay these demands. Two or three different centres in Hueian —Putien and Sienyu counties have been [illegible] Hueian nearly a hundred regular troops were killed, only to be followed by the massacre of hundreds of men women and children among the villagers. In Sienyu the same thing on a smaller scale. Impossible demands, soldiers attacked and heads bashed in to be followed by far worse for the people.

In Putien, the most important country of them all, the people are at present too cowed or too wise to rebel but only the opportunity is lacking, for never in the memory of the oldest inhabitants have the feelings against officials been so hostile or so bitter. The latter frankly say—"We are ordered to get money nothing else matters not even life." Any foreigner here would corroborate every statement.

TUFEI ARMING FAST

North Kiangsu's Plight: 1,000 Bandits Ready to March on Suchien

From Our Own Correspondent.

Suchien, N. Ku., Feb. 5.

The tufei are still gathering in the north country, as many as a thousand strong it is said.

The camp soldiers are on the alert. Last week they captured a spy, who now lies in the Yamen. He was caught in his home just behind the big street, with a quick-firing revolver, but it is feared some of his companions have escaped. The neighbours' curiosity was aroused by his shopping every day and buying large quantities of pork!

In a former letter I mentioned a baby boy that was stolen from his bed when asleep. His father has since died. An official led out a party of 20 soldiers on the track of the kidnappers and came very near being surrounded by a band of robbers 200 strong. They were in a tiny hamlet, which was saved by the neighbours begging the bandits to leave and save their homes from fighting.

The night before last, at about 10 o'clock, the stillness was broken by the sound of fighting in the distance. One could distinctly hear the two sides firing.

To-day the soldiers brought in the corpse of a bandit woman who held out till the last of her ammunition was used up, and was finally captured with very little of her head left hiding in a ditch. She must either have been a leader or a helper of the bandits, for report has it, she had four guns with her, with which she had defended herself to the very last. Two other bandit leaders were brought in alive last week.

500 HUNGER-MARCHERS.

To-day a band of 500 beggars passed through with papers from the Shantung official to help them on their way. They say the drought has driven them from their homes. They were collecting at the different houses. As someone remarked, it was a small matter to help them with a little money in the towns, but not such a small thing for the villages that would have to provide a meal for them by the way.

The streets in spite of the high prices of everything, have been hardly passable for the last three days with buyers, getting ready for New Year. As someone remarked there is plenty of copper cash just now on the street to attract the tufei. The dollar has been changing for 1,980 cash, and all commodities rise in price accordingly.

To-day we are having a welcome rain, for which the farmers are very grateful. The ground is very dry and the wheat is suffering.

Dredging has begun on the Canal, the water having been diverted by a barrier into another channel.

TSINGTAO POLICE PAID

Solatium to Civil Servants Too: Sighs of Relief in all Quarters

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Feb. 7.

The advent of the Lunar New Year has been celebrated here very quietly, in keeping with the delicate period which Tsingtao is going through.

Permission to fire crackers was only given to reputable hongs. Though at these places the celebrations were on nothing like the scale to which Chinese in other treaty ports are accustomed.

The happiest feature in so far as the community is concerned was the ability of Mr. Cheng Wei-djeng, the local Chief of Police, to raise the funds necessary for the payment of a portion of the wages due to his men and thus tide over the most critical time of the year. The money was raised at Tsinan. And in this connexion, the community in general is expressing its surprise over the ability of Chinese officials to raise funds at this time, despite the low state of the country's finances.

It is common talk that a few days before the end of the old lunar year, there was a conference of all the department chiefs of the Administration, at which Mr. Tsou Wen-wei, the Director of General Affairs, presided, for the purpose of finding ways and means to raise the money necessary for the settlement of the unpaid wages of the Administration's officials and others. Mr. Tsou, a native of Kiangsu, who is the right hand man of Civil Governor Hsiung Ping-chi and has more say than Mr. Kun Chi-ping, the Vice-Governor, suggested to each department chief that he should find some means for raising funds independently of the other departments. Mr. Tsou's idea was to pool the grand total for the settlement of the unpaid wages. There was a vigorous dissentient to this proposal who caustically remarked that, inasmuch as he had had no part in the process of making millions disappear from the revenue of public utilities, he was likewise not going to take any part in the raising of funds through questionable means. There was quite a heated argument between Mr. Tsou and the dissentient, the former using the sarcasm of officials of the old school and the latter the vigorous language acquired through an American university training.

RAILWAY OFFICIAL'S RESIGNATION.

It is now reported that Mr. Liu, the Managing-Director of the Kiaochow-Tsinan Railway, has tendered his resignation. It is not stated who will be his successor. Mr. Liu has encountered quite a crop of difficulties of late and is generally reputed to have lost the confidence of the people of Shantung, especially on account of his handling of the enforced negotiations with Wu Pei-fu over the question of the maintenance of the squadron which the latter took over from the South. The intention of Wu Pei-fu, according to reports, is to appoint Mr. Lee, a department chief in the Ministry of War, and one-time teacher of the Loyang War Lord. But inasmuch as Mr. Lee's knowledge of the railroad business is nil, it may be safely predicted that his appointment, if it does take place, will invite vigorous agitation for its cancellation.

The logical successor seems to be Mr. Tsao Teh-san, a Shantung man, and the first Managing-Director of the Kiao-Tsi Railway since its retrocession to China. It is however rather doubtful whether he will accept the position in view of his recent promotion to the post of General-Director of the Lung-Hai Railway.

MILL HANDS REPULSE BANDITS.

Major Wong Ken of the Railway Police Administration is on a visit here. He is discussing with the Railway Administration various matters in regard to the efficient policing of the Kiao-Tsi line. There are reports current that the bandits are again infesting the former leasel territory and it is probable that Major Wong is anxious to reorganize the so-called Emergency Corps created as a result of the Lincheng outrage.

The fact that the bandits in the former leased territory are getting bolder can be gauged from a very recent incident. The other night a band of some 30 or 40 of them attempted to take possession of a Japanese mill on the Kiao-Tsi line, for the purpose of looting it. Fortunately for the mill, its workers had organized amongst themselves a volunteer anti-bandit company. Upon arrival, the bandits were greeted with a warm fusilade and, finding that discretion was the better part of banditry, they forthwith made themselves scarce. In Tsingtao itself, however, it may be safely said that there are no bandits, although the number of petty-thieves and more or less daring robbers is on the increase.

IMPROVED OUTLOOK IN HUNAN

Trade Recovery Under Tan Yen-kai's Rule, but Recruiting Begins Anew

From Our Own Correspondent.

Siangtan, Hun., Jan. 31.

The China New Year closes on improved trade, which picked up wonderfully on Gen. Tan Yen-kai's assumption of control over the city and the country on this side of the river right through the province. Before then all communications with the outside world were broken and business was for weeks at a standstill.

Many firms, however, say that they will have great difficulty in closing the year without a deficit, largely on account of the heavy demands by the soldiery for money. The Chamber of Commerce, for instance, has had great difficulty in meeting Gen. Tan's exactions and now there have been fresh demands from Changsha.

Rumours of a change in governors in Hunan are rife, but no one really understands the situation. Gen. Ma Chi has been in and out of Changsha for several weeks, while Northern soldiers are entering the city. Feverish recruiting is going on in the neighbourhood, thousands of newly-enlisted men coming in from Paoching daily for whose training a large field has been given up. A friend in Chenchow says there is much recruiting also going on in that section of the province. That fighting will be resumed as soon as the warm weather sets in again seems pretty evident.

The new road built with famine relief money is still uncompleted, though metalling is being put down in many places. In a few months the highway should be opened for traffic to Hsianghsang. In connexion with the building of this road, which has several fine bridges, there are reports that more money has been received which will enable its continuation to Yuinfeng, 90 li from Hsianghsang towards Paoching.

After nearly going out of business as a result of commandeering during the fighting, the Motor Co. seems to be making money again, while the Siangtan-Changsha Road is kept in moderately good repair.

The alleged unfair methods of a Japanese firm have caused much ill-feeling here. By a scheme of petty cheating, the Japanese dealer, according to my informant, is adding to the weights of goods by sometimes 10 or more catties. When complaints are made he blames his Chinese writer for making profitable mistakes.

RICE PLENTIFUL, BUT PRICES UP.

The crops in this section were exceptionally good during the last harvest and much rice has been exported. At Isiho it is reported that 300,000 piculs of rice will be exported this season. The prices have also kept up unusually well for such a good year.

Siangtan county has been a great price mart for many years. Once Isiho, 15 li from the city, was the great centre of this trade and rice from all this district was exported from that one place. Since the founding of the Republic here have been new rice markets opened.

FOREIGN VISITORS.

Siangtan has had many foreign visitors recently, especially during the time of the school vacations for Chinese New Year. Some are on the way to Hengchow and the south. The Presbyterian Mission held its mid-year Executive Committee meeting here and representatives from Chenchow, Henchow, Changsha and Changteh were present.

BRAVE LONDON LADY DOCTORS

Through Brigands' Country with Lamp of Science

While at home London girls are rushing to qualify as doctors, two plucky women graduates of the London School of Medicine are labouring at the Medical Missionary station in the mountains between Thibet and China, the surgery being 7000ft. above sea level.

They are Dr. Lilian Watney, who has been there as a member of the China Inland Mission for some time, and Dr. Maud Chidson, who has just gone out to represent the Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society.

"The difficulties of missionary work in Western China are not sufficiently realized by the people at home," said the Rev. H. A. H. Lea, organizing secretary of the B.C.M.S., of which the late Dr Wace, the Dean of Canterbury, was the first vice-president.

"Dr. Chidson, who has reached Ichang, on the Yangtze River, on her way to Kuang-ngan-chow will find a terrible difference in the work which she will be called upon to do from that she experienced in the wards of London hospitals.

"There will be no waiting for cases. She will find thousands of patients around the hospital gates.

"She will find dirt and disease, squalor and smell, and she will have to give these people her full attention. Lepers and beggars with sores will swarm round her.

NATIVE "SCIENCE."

"Chinese medical science, particularly in this district, is very crude. Whenever disease or a sore occurs the Chinese 'doctor' plunges a needle into the affected part in order to drive out the evil spirits which have caused the trouble.

"When a patient does reach Miss Chidson she will find him so far gone as a result of native treatment that he has as much chance of dying as of recovering, and if he dies the blame may very well be laid at her door.

"Another thing she will have to watch is when dispensing medicine, because the average Chinese has as much idea of Western medical methods as the man in the moon. Give a Chinese a bottle of physic and tell him to take small doses at intervals and he will immediately drink the whole bottle in order to get well immediately.

"But for all that they are a most lovable race, full of gratitude—simple, playful and occasionally peevish.

THROUGH LAND OF BRIGANDS.

"In order to get there, Dr. Chidson has had to make a sea voyage of five weeks, a river trip of three weeks and a riesha journey over the rugged mountain tracks of Western China of a fortnight, and all the time through brigand-infested country.

"It is not the sort of journey that would appeal probably to the average young woman, but Miss Chidson is born of the stuff of which missionaries are made, and I can say with full assurance that Dr. Chidson will uphold the honour of the London School of Medicine for Women, from which she came."

MARSHAL Wu Pei-fu, High Military Inspecting Commissioner of Chihli, Shantung and Honan, is again showing his intention of improving conditions in and near Loyang, his headquarters. He has just purchased 120,000 mulberry trees and a large number of other trees, the former for the purpose of giving his people a chance to secure employment, the latter to beautify the city.

THE NATIONAL MEDICAL CONFERENCE

Opening Ceremonies at Nanking

From a Correspondent.

Nanking, Feb. 8.

The formal opening of the Fifth Biennial Conference of the National Medical Association, in the form of a reception given by the Nanking Medical Society in honour of the delegates coming from various sections of the country, took place yesterday evening in the National Southeastern University.

The reception began with an address by Dr. K. N. Wu, President of the Nanking Medical Society, which was responded to by an address by Dr. E. S. Tyau, President of the National Medical Association, who spoke briefly on the objects of the conference. Other speakers of the evening were Dr. H. Balme, President of the Shantung Christian University, representing the China Medical Missionary Association, and Dr. P. W. Kuo, President of the Southeastern University, and Mr. Z. T. Tsiang, representing the Governor of Kiangsu.

The items on the programme consisted of a piano duet by Mrs. Z. T. Woo and Mrs. V. C. Ting, the wives of two prominent doctors in Nanking, a piano solo by the Rev. W. P. Roberts, vocal solos by Mrs. Roland and Mr. Seager, and Chinese music by some of the members of the Y.M.C.A. Dr. S. F. Chao, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, was the presiding officer.

Considering the unfavourable condition of the weather, the reception on the whole was marked with unusual success, there being more than 100 people present.

Control of Narcotics

Feb. 9.

The National Medical Association of China, which is holding its Fifth Biennial Conference in the Gymnasium of the South Eastern University, opened its first session yesterday, at 9.30 a.m. with an address given by Dr. E. S. Tyau, the President of the Association. Dr. Tyau commenced his presidential address by an expression of gratitude and appreciation first to the authorities of the South Eastern University for the hospitality extended to the National Medical Association, and then to the members of the Association for the honour bestowed on him as President—an honour of the highest distinction that carries with it a deep sense of responsibility of which, he said, he was fully aware.

The President then gave a brief survey and analysis of the present activities of the Association. He pointed out in a most comprehensive manner, the wonderful progress made by the Terminology Committee in its work of standardizing Chinese medical terms. The fact that the publication of the National Medical Journal—the live-wire of the Association—has attained its largest circulation this year, is, in the President's opinion, an unquestionable proof that the Association is growing and progressing, while its participation in the work of the Joint Council on Health Education, indicates that its field of work and service must, of necessity be a comprehensive one.

The President then called the attention of the delegates to the regulation of the sale of narcotics in Shanghai, which, he said, had resulted from the unrelenting activities and efforts of the National Medical Association. In concluding, Dr. Tyau made a forcible appeal for unity, service, sacrifice, and self-devotion. The motto he gave to his fellow-members was, "In unity we stand, in co-operation we achieve."

Following the presidential address, the following papers were read:—

"Kala-azar in Manchuria" by Dr. C. C. Wong.

"Some interesting cases"—report by Dr. J. King.

"A discussion on Insulin" by Dr. W. C. Loh.

"Patent Medicine—a menace to the public" by Dr. W. W. Peter.

"An analysis of G. U. Cases in St. Luke's Hospital" by Dr. I. M. Hsu.

"Experiences in the treatment of gonorrhea" by Dr. K. D. Howe.

"Studies on tissue immunity" by Dr. S. Nukada.

In spite of the inclemency of the weather, the delegates made an excursion in the afternoon to the Museum for Chinese Relics, the Public Gardens, and the Nanking Scientific Society. After returning from the excursion, they attended an illustrated lecture on the interpretation of X-ray plates, given by Dr. L. S. Woo.

At 7.30 p.m. the delegates were entertained at a banquet given by the South Eastern University. At the close of the banquet, speeches were delivered by Dr. P. W. Kuo, Dr. E. S. Tyau, Dr. W. L. New Dr. C. V. Yui and Dr. W. W. Peter.

IMPORTANT PAPERS READ.

The third day of the fifth biennial conference of the National Medical Association, held on Saturday, February 9, in the gymnasium of the Southeastern University, Nanking, was attended with remarkable success. Papers of great value dwelling on various subjects connected with modern medical science, were read and discussed. The session commenced at 9 a.m. with the reading of congratulatory telegrams, one from the Hongkong branch, another from the Canton National Medical Association, and the third from Dr. John Kirk, President of the China Medical Missionary Association. Following the reading of the telegrams, a Nomination Committee, consisting of Drs. U. K. Koo, E. Y. Kau and K. C. Wong, and a Resolution Committee, consisting of Drs. J. King, S. M. Woo and P. C. Kiang, were formed. At the close of the business session, the following papers were read:

"Clinical treatment of Pulmonary tuberculosis," by Dr. K. N. Wu.

"X-ray as an aid in the diagnosis and prognosis of pulmonary tuberculosis," by Dr. C. V. Yui.

"Experience in the use of tuberculin," by Dr. J. King.

"Physical examination in life insurance" by Dr. P. C. Wong.

"The value of postmortem examination," by Dr. C. H. Tyau.

"Problems of school hygiene in China" by Dr. S. M. Woo.

The delegates spent the greater part of the afternoon inspecting the University Hospital, in response to an invitation to tea extended to them by the staff of the hospital, after which they journeyed to the Ming Tombs, a place of historical fame and world-wide interest. At seven o'clock, they were guests to a banquet given by the Nanking Medical Society, at the close of which short speeches were given by Dr. K. N. Wu, President of the Nanking Medical Society, Dr. E. S. Tyau, President of the National Medical Association, Dr. S. H. Chuan, Surgeon-General of Peking, Dr. C. V. Yui, and a few others representing the various provinces from which they came.

FOURTH DAY OF THE CONFERENCE.

The fourth day of the Fifth Biennial Conference of the National Medical Association, at Southeastern University, Nanking, was held on Sunday afternoon.

There were approximately 100 delegates present. The following are the papers that were read during the session:

"Standard physical examination" (Dr. S. M. Woo)

"Health centres" (Dr. V. Appleton).

"The true spirit of scientific investigation from a medical point of view" (Dr. P. C. Kiang)

"Some experiences in public health work at Hangchow" (Dr. K. C. Wong).

These papers being read, Dr. C. W. Woodworth, Professor of Entomology of Southeastern University, delivered a short, interesting lecture on entomology. He dwelt chiefly on his experiences in the destruction of flies and mosquitoes in Nanking. His remarks were much appreciated by the delegates.

At 7 p.m. a reception was given in honour of the delegates by Mr. Z. O. Wong, the Commissioner of Police, and by the Y.M.C.A.

Speeches were made by Mr. S. T. Wen, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and Mr. Z. O. Wong, acted as host, Dr. E. S. Tyau, President of the National Medical Association, and Dr. J. King, who spoke on public health matters. There was a practical demonstration of a newly-invented Chinese code in use by the police and a cinematograph exhibition.

In the evening a dinner was given by Dr. K. N. Wu, President of the Nanking Medical Society.

At the subsequent business session, two resolutions were passed recognizing the Canton Medical Association and the Hongkong Medical Association as branches of the National Medical Association. The treasurer's report was submitted and accepted. The Terminology Committee, represented by Dr. C. V. Yui, and the Public Health Committee, represented by Dr. W. L. New, then gave a brief survey of their activities for the two years, this being followed by the submission of three reports—from the Business Manager, Dr. D. C. Chang, the General-Secretary, Dr. L. S. Woo, and the Resolution Committee, represented by Dr. J. King. The following are two resolutions presented by the Resolution Committee, which was voted upon and carried:—

That this conference recommends the Council on Health Education to lay greater emphasis in its work on school hygiene.

That this conference ask the Ministry of Education to consider the importance of physical examination of students in schools throughout China, paying special attention to the examination of the eyes for trachoma and defective vision.

A committee, consisting of Drs. P. C. Kiang, K. N. Wu, and C. H. Han, was appointed whose function will be to give advice regarding the work of translating foreign medical books into Chinese.

THE NANKING WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

A detailed report of the silver wedding of the Hon. S. T. Wen, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and Superintendent of Customs at Nanking, and Mrs. Wen which took place on January 29 has already appeared from our Nanking correspondent. Mr. Wen, who is a leading Chinese Christian, and who made a name for himself for his work in connexion with the release of the Chinese and foreign captives at Linchang, gave an excellent testimony for Christianity on the occasion, which was the first silver wedding ever celebrated by a Chinese. Chinese celebrate their birthdays and their 50th wedding anniversaries only, so Mr. and Mrs. Wen have the honour of being the first "pair of doves" as the Chinese say to observe the occasion. Mr. Wen characterized his wife as the country-girl bride. The accompanying picture shows Mr. and Mrs Wen in the rear, and their children (reading from the left—Chun-hung 10, Yu-ling 18, Yu-hsien 20, Yu-ai 16 and Tsu-ching 7). It was taken in front of the Nanking Bureau of Foreign Affairs and the four presents from President Tsao Kun—two silver cups and two silver vases—are to be seen on the table in the rear.

FIRST CHINESE SILVER WEDDING

OBITUARY

Mr. L. Sandercock

Peking, Feb. 6.

Many sincere friends throughout China will learn with deep regret of the sudden death of Mr. L. Sandercock of the Maritime Customs, which occurred in unusually sad circumstances.

Mr. Sandercock, who has recently been stationed at Mukden as Commissioner, went to Shanghai with his wife and children and saw them off for England on a holiday. Mr. Sandercock took the train from Shanghai with the intention of returning to his post at Mukden, but just before reaching Tsinanfu he suddenly died. It is believed that apoplexy was the cause of death. The body was taken off the train at Tsinanfu by the orders of Mr. Tours, British Consul-General there.

It is not known whether the telegram announcing Mr. Sandercock's death will reach Mrs. Sandercock at Hongkong. The death occurred on the 4th instant.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Mr. H. C. Emery

Peking, Feb. 7.

A telegram received in Peking to-day conveyed the sad news that Mr. Henry C. Emery, formerly manager of the Asia Banking Corporation at Peking, died of double pneumonia on board ship between Shanghai and Kobe and was buried at sea.

Mr. and Mrs. Emery were in Peking recently and left here to return to their home in New York. Last year Mr. and Mrs. Emery made a long tour through Mongolia. During several years' residence in Peking they made numerous friends in North China to whom this news will come as a severe shock.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE CONFERENCE AT GINLING COLLEGE

Christian Education in China

Two hundred and twenty-two delegates have arrived so far for the conference now being held at Ginling College of the Christian Colleges and Universities. Every phase of higher education from the training of social workers to college budgets and record keeping is discussed somewhere in the 20 sectional meetings.

Dr. Hawks Pott opened the general meetings of the conference with his presidential address which, after reviewing the history of mission education, insisted that the policies of the future should be directed to furthering a programme at once positively Christian and with the highest educational standards.

The chief interest in the general sessions that have followed centred in the papers, one by Dr. Wallace on "The Correlation of Higher and Secondary Education," one by Mrs. Thurston, president of Ginling College, on "The Next Steps in connexion with the Educational Commission Report"; and one by Dr. Balme of Shantung Christian University on "The Future of the Association of Christian Colleges and Universities." The key-note of the conference has been the co-ordination, of Christian education in China and especially a more permanent organization of Christian colleges, to avoid waste of energy through competition and to strengthen the work now being done.

Statistics have been collected in regard to 12 of the 17 colleges now affiliated with the Association showing that 45 per cent. of their graduates are now teaching, 14 per cent. are in business, 13 per cent. are ministers, 10 per cent. have studied medicine, and the rest are engaged in social service, banking and engineering.

Association for Christian Higher Education

The Conference of Christian Colleges and Universities just held at Ginling College, resulted in the formation of what is to be known as the China Association for Christian Higher Education. The membership of this permanent organization is to be open to all Christian men and woman engaged in higher education in China. A council was selected representing all sections of China and about equally divided between the Chinese and foreign faculty. The officers of this organization are: Dr. Harold Balme, president; Mr. Francis Wei, vice-president; Miss Jean Dickinson, secretary; and Dr. C. H. Westbrook, treasurer. In addition committees were constituted by groups interested along various lines of teaching and research to provide for the pooling of experience and to make research work more effective.

An interesting section was that on Home Economics, represented on the programme by a paper by Dr. Wm. H. Adolph of Shantung Christian University, on the Dietary of North China, and by the presentation of Miss Ava B. Milam's investigation of the home life of some 1200 Chinese families. The study was preliminary to the offering of courses in the Home Economics department of Yenching College.

The general meetings of the last day featured two addresses, by Mr. T. Z. Woo on the National Christian Movement and by Dr. T. T. Lew on the Contribution of Christian Colleges to the Church. It is felt that the conference marks a very important step forward in the history of education and of the Christian Church in China.

REIGN OF TERROR IN KUANGTUNG

Exaction of Taxes and Fines by Militarists: Dr. Sun's Difficulties

Canton, Feb. 3.

A reign of terror still prevails in Sheklung, Tungkun, and other cities within the war area in eastern Kuangtung, according to reports reaching Canton. Bandits and pirates take much delight in disarming the mercenary Yunnanese and Kuangsi troops, when they can catch them in small companies, while these same "warriors" do not hesitate to plunder the peaceful non-combatants.

In Canton proper, the militarists are exacting money from the people in not quite so rude a manner. Instead of forcible seizure, the local authorities are imposing all kinds of taxes and fining persons heavily for the slightest error by executive order without judicial proceedings. The leading Customs brokers were again fined last week for having made false Customs entries, notwithstanding the brokers' protest that any declaration having been made and passed, with duty paid without exception being taken to it constitutes a complete transaction.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen appears to be very anxious to bring his war against Gen. Chen Chiung-ming to an end soon, but funds are not coming in as quickly as Dr. Sun wants them and the mercenaries following him do not appear to intend to move without cash in hand. Whatever money is received does not cover the arrears due and, when one item is paid, another is forthcoming, always leaving some bills unpaid and some excuse for delaying operations to end the war, which the mercenaries themselves never want to finish. It is now more than a year since the return of the Sun Yat-sen party to power in Canton, and hostilities are still dragging on.

Telegraph communication between Canton and Hongkong is still interrupted owing to rival troops controlling the line, the Sun troops occupying the western and the Chen forces the eastern section of the line.

RICE FAMINE IMMINENT.

The rice shop hands and mill employees are still on strike, making the discharge of rice cargoes from the outports impossible and forcing up the price of rice. The poor grade rice is selling at $8.50 to $9 a picul, while the better grades are selling at $12 a picul. The present stock may last only a few more days and it is predicted that soon after the Chinese New Year there will be a famine, unless the coolies are able to unload without interference from the shop hands. Everything is being arranged by a committee of citizens to avert a further shortage of this staple food. So far the rice workers are willing to compromise, but the proprietors of the shops still consider their modified demands too unreasonable even for negotiations. On the morning of January 29, the leader of the Rice Transportation Union, Yen Yu-sheng, and his wife were murdered, it is believed in connexion with the strike. Yen was also Chairman of the Shuntak District Kuomintang Party. So far the six persons suspected of the murder have not been arrested.

MILITARY CONTROL.

It appears that Dr. Sun Yat-sen still has considerable difficulty in getting a man for the post of Civil Governor of Kuangtung, or nominal head of the several districts actually under the command of his military lieutenants. As the military commanders usually control everything within their territory, unless the magistrate himself is also a commander, civil authorities nowadays count but little in the districts and the magistrates have very little power for really good work. In Canton, the Civil Governor's orders go but a little way out from his office, as the mayor of the city and the commissioner of police have more power. The magistrate of a district, appointed by the Civil Governor, is seldom able to take up his post without the protection of the military commander there. Dr. Sun is showing his appreciation of this situation. Instead of trying to get a Cantonese to accept the Civil Governorship, he is offering the post to Mr. Yang Shukan, his chief private secretary and formerly unsuccessful Civil Governor of Szechuan. The Cantonese are not interested in the question of the Governorship, but more in that of the garrison commissioner in Canton. The Canton merchants are no longer in sympathy with the present régime, and the Canton officials have practically decided to ignore the General Chamber of Commerce until it will lend them $500,000. The nine large charitable associations in Canton are still friendly to the régime and will grant it a loan of $500,000, mortgaging their property in order to relieve the Government and the troops. Mr. Chan Heung-lun, a former leader in charity circles, will spend the Chinese New Year in prison, having been arrested by the police for utterances unfavourable to the present military authorities.

SYMPATHY WITH SOVIET.

The Kuomintang Political Party, in national convention in Canton, honoured the death of M. Lenin, the Soviet leader, by suspending their session for three days from January 26, and Dr. Sun Yat-sen ordered the government offices in Canton to fly their flags at half-mast for the same period. At a memorial service for M. Lenin, an address was given by M. Borodin, the Soviet representative in Canton. Reuter's Pacific Service.

NURSES' CONVENTION AT CANTON

Outport Visitors Entertained: Local Hospitals Inspected

Canton, Feb. 2.

The Association of Nurses in China at its fifth annual national convention, which has been in session at Kungyee Medical College, Canton, since the afternoon of January 31, is giving the mornings to discussions and demonstrations and the afternoons to inspection of local hospitals and sightseeing.

At the opening reception on the afternoon of the January 31 representatives of the civil and military divisions of the Government and of the leading medical and allied organizations were present. The delegates, who are being entertained at the Kungyee Medical College, number about 80 foreign and 50 Chinese nurses from the principal ports of China, including Peking, Tientsin, Shanghai, Hankow, and Changsha. The sessions will last until February 6.

Canton has several centres for the training of nurses. The Turner's Training School, attached to the Hackett Medical College for Women, is perhaps the leading institution in Canton, while the Canton Hospital, the Kungyee, the Canton Hospital in Canton proper and the New Zealand Presbyterian Hospital at Kongchuen also provide excellent training for this profession.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WEDDING

Hughes—Summers

A wedding of more than usual interest was solemnized on Friday, February 8, in ttht British Legation Chapel in Peking, when Miss Eileen Mary Summers, daughter of Mr. H. D. Summers, of the Directorate-General of Posts, of Peking, and Mrs. Summers, became the bride of Mr. W. V. B. Hughes, British Vice-Consul at Shanghai and son of the late Rev. W. B. Hughes and Mrs. M. J. Hughes of Llanishen. The civil ceremony was held in the morning at the British Consulate, with Mr. W. P. Turner as officiating Consul, and the church service at two o'clock in the afternoon in the Legation Chapel, with the Right Rev. Bishop Norris of North China officiating.

The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in ivory satin brocade, with a design of madonna lilies, cut in an effectively simple style, draped on one side, with the fulness caught with a buckle of brilliants, a train of flounced lace, and a tulle veil over a wreath of orange blossoms. The bridal bouquet was a sheaf of arum lilies. Miss Elspeth Fripp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Fripp, acted as bridesmaid, wearing daffodil yellow satin crepe trimmed with gold ribbon with which was worn a black tulle hat. She carried a shower bouquet of white chrysanthemums and daisies. The bride's mother wore dove colour and silver brocade with a black tulle and silver hat.

The bridegroom was accompanied by Mr. M. R. Montgomrey, of the British Legation, as best man and his ushers were Capt. C. R. Spear, of the Indian Army, and Capt. R. D. Milne, of the Royal Scots. A very enjoyable reception, attended by hosts of friends, was held after the ceremony at the house of the bride's parents in Hsia Kung Fu, after which Mr. and Mrs. Hughes left on their honeymoon. The bride's going away dress was of periwinkle blue duvetyn, with grey and blue hat to match.

TULI MA'S MISRULE

Pocketing Opium Revenue from Enforced Poppy-growing in Anhui

A severe indictment of Gen. Ma Lien-cha, Tuli of Anhui, is contained in a letter just addressed by Mr. Chang Kia-hsun, Commissioner for the Investigation of Poppy Growing in the same province, to the Minister of Interior. In the course of his letter Mr. Chang says:

In compliance with your order, I proceeded to Anhui for the purpose of investigating the opium problem, but upon arrival I was prevented by Tuli Ma from carrying out my work. He interfered with every movement of mine and I could not move about freely, hence I have come to Shanghai to report.

During the few days that I was in Anhu I learned that Tuli Ma has been forcing the people to grow poppy and to smoke opium. Apart from the opium smoking tax, he gains about $7 or $8 for each mow of poppy grown by the farmers. When I arrived in Anking Tuli Ma ordered me to return to Pengpu forthwith otherwise he threatened to arrest me.

Nominally Tuli Ma wants the money for military expenses, but really the money goes into his private pocket. He has managed to keep the Civil Governor (Lu), and the Opium Commissioner quiet, having given $100,000 to the former and $30,000 to the latter. His men have not been paid for months, so if there is mutiny among his troops it can be expected, but it will be a very bad sign.

The Tuli's post is a big and responsible one. He should care for the people and protect foreigners within his jurisdiction. He should be mindful of national prestige with foreigners, but now he is harming the people and breaking the laws, giving China "no face" in the eyes of foreigners.

Now that I have received your appointment it is my duty to keep you informed truthfully and frankly and without exaggeration. I am not telling an untruth.

I pray, therefore, that you will take steps in investigating this matter and that you will dismiss Tuli Ma and punish him according to law.

JAPANESE RAW SILK INDUSTRY

Demoralized by Earthquake: A New Source of Supply Sought in China

New York, Jan. 12.

Virtual demoralization of the Japanese raw silk industry as a result of the earthquake last August has emphasized the necessity of developing new sources of supply throughout the world, Mr. James A. Goldsmith, President of the Silk Association of America, said at the annual dinner of the organization to-night.

Silk manufacturers, he said, had already turned to China, which gave the greatest promise of replacing the Japanese field. Turkey, Persia, Syria and the Caucasus, also were mentioned as offering unlimited opportunities for development.

The Silk Association of America, Mr. Goldsmith said, had erected sericulture buildings at Canton Christian College, the University of Nanking and at Fukien University, where silk culture and handling would be taught scientifically. Present methods in use in China are largely antiquated and result in huge wastage, he said.

A research and development programme of the Association extending over a ten years' period was outlined.—Reuter's American Service.

RINDERPEST IN HONAN

Great Loss of Cattle

The "Agriculture & Forestry Notes" issued by the University of Nanking College of Agriculture mentions an epidemic of rinderpest in Honan. It describes the situation and the preventive work as follows:—

Upon receipt of word from the agricultural missionaries of the Southern Baptist Mission at Kaifeng that an epidemic of rinderpest was raging in parts of Honan, Dr. Gibbs went to Kaifeng on January 14 and is still there. The Kaifeng Baptist College herd, containing some very excellent cattle was inoculated, as were also the herds at Chengchow, Kueiteh and Pochow. In this latter district in northern Anhui he learned that in many villages every animal (cattle) had died and in other villages every animal had contracted the disease which meant that practically all would die. At Kaifeng several villages were visited. Instead of being suspicious, as we anticipated they might be, the farmers brought out their cattle and besought the men that they would do something for them. It was difficult to get away.

Thousands of cattle have died. The farmers have to bear the loss. It not only means that the farmer's work animals are gone, with which he ploughs his fields and draws his products to market but that he has lost the means to an annual increase in his herd and his productive capacity is greatly reduced. It is a frightful loss which the Chinese farmer has been suffering for a long time but for which there is no ready remedy available to the farmer during the present Chinese political and economic chaos. While scientists have already made considerable advance in methods of control and protection against rinderpest the larger problems have not yet been solved and in the meantime the farmer will continue to absorb the shock of losses by this dread disease.

THE Civil Governor of Kiangsu has telegraphed to the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce urging the chairman of that body to instruct the local cigar and cigarette merchants to collect the special tax on these two commodities forthwith, as one of the terms on which he granted a postponement of the tax was that it would be collected after the Chinese New Year holidays.

MORE HOLIDAY SHIPPING CASUALTIES

Motor-Ship Rheinland Aground Near Chefoo in Snowstorm

From Our Own Correspondent

Chefoo, Feb. 8

The Hamburg-Amerika Line motor-ship Rheinland ran ashore at noon yesterday 10 miles north northwest of Chefoo during a snow storm.

The beach is sandy, and as far as can be ascertained bad weather was responsible for the ship's stranding. She is in no immediate danger, nor is the hull leaking.

Commanded by Capt. Bahre, the Rheinland left Rotterdam on November 28, and at the time of the accident was bound for Tsingtao and Shanghai en route for Hamburg. She is of 3,915 tons register, 448 feet in length and equipped with Diesel engines.

YANGTZE STEAMER STRANDED.

News reached Shanghai last Friday that the Tehshing river steamer was ashore on Hukuang Flats in the Yangtze. This is the fourth vessel reported aground since the holidays.

Owing to heavy weather, the junk ashore at Christmas Island, New Channel, has broken up. The mast of another junk which has gone down is visible above Wuhu.

GREEN ISLAND CEMENT COMPANY, LD.

Resignation of Directors Following Shareholders' Vote to Double Capital

Hongkong, Feb. 7.

There was a sensational termination to an extraordinary meeting of the Green Island Cement Co. to-day, called at the request of a large number of share holders, who are demanding doubling of the capital in connexion with the proposed transfer of the factory from Kowloon Bay to Gin Drinker's Bay.

The shareholders carried the resolution by a show of hands, whereupon the directors, Mr. D. G. M. Bernard, Père Robert, who made a speech in disapproval of the resolution, Mr. A. O. Lang and Sir Paul Chater declared the result as a vote of want of confidence and tendered their resignations in spite of the shareholders. Mr. Robert Shewan, presiding, expressed the hope that the directors would reconsider their decision to resign.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HANKOW-ICHANG AIR SERVICE

Peking, Feb. 8.

An interesting report to-day is to the effect that Marshal Wu Pei-fu proposes to inaugurate an aerial service between Hankow and Ichang, nominally for postal and commercial services. JAPAN'S FRENZIED POLITICANS

Scene in Diet on Day of Dissolution: Viscount Kiyoura Nearly Lynched by Murderer-"Patriots:" The Real Issue Before The Country

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 31.

China's mock parliament does not possess a monopoly on clownish conduct and boisterous imbecility when the solons of the Celestial Republic gather for their occasional philippics. Able to do many a thing better than the Chinese, Japan goes even one better when it comes to making a bear-garden of the Diet. For the past five years or so, meetings of the House of Representatives have always been held in tense feeling that later degenerated into hopeless confusion, resulting in nothing constructive whatsoever being done by the would-be law-makers. The session of the Diet just closed was no exception. If anything, the boisterousness was unprecedented and the asininity displayed heightened the bathos that generally has wound up every recent meeting of Japan's glorified debating society which, more for politeness than for any other reason, is dignified by the name of parliment.

STORMY SESSION EXPECTED.

Ever since the formation of the Kiyoura Ministry which came into power as a result of the attempted assassination of His Imperial Highness, the Prince Regent, there have been indications that the Diet would meet in an atmosphere alive with personal, party and anti-government animosity. The entire press of the country embarked on a several day's campaign to belittle the Ministry, their editorials for the past three weeks dwelling at length on the "unconstitutional" Cabinet and on the sins and shortcomings of Viscount Kiyoura and his lieutenants; the Seiyukai (hitherto the most powerful party in the Lower House) dividing itself, one portion pledging allegiance to the new Ministry and the other loudly declaring that everything possible would be done to wreck the Cabinet, the Kenseikai and Kakushin Club, always "agin the government" and now even more so; and the large following of citizens that have accepted the version of the newspapers and that of the opposition politicians to the effect that the present Ministry is a menace to the development of constitutional government in Japan. These "rebels" are led by tried and doughty politicians. That section of the Seiyukai which has refused to endorse the Cabinet of Viscount Kiyoura is led by Mr. Takahashi (who was a peer till a few days ago but who resigned his honours in the belief that he could thus champion what the Opposition calls the cause of constitutional goverment betterment) a former Premier and an astute politician; the Kenseikai is led by Viscount Kato who continues to keep his title and who was Foreign Minister in the Okuma Cabinet which presented the now notorious Twenty-One Demands to China in 1915; Mr. Inukai, head of the Kakushin Club who, however, did accept and hold a portfolio in the Yamamoto Ministry, the one immediately preceding the present Cabinet, despite that fact that the Yamamoto Ministry was also largely composed of bureaucrats; and Mr. Tukio Otaki, for several years Minister of Justice and one of the foremost campaign orators in the land.

Against this imposing array of talent and forces, the Premier has the majority party in the House of Peers; the Elder Statesmen and the immense weight they carry in matters of importance; the seceding group from the Seiyukai; the support of virtually all the powerful clan leaders in the country; and a large proportion of the more moderately-minded people who are disgusted with the lengths to which the Opposition have recently gone.

This was the disposition of the Government and anti-Government forces when the Diet met to-day. It will continue to be so over the general elections which will be fought in May, the issue at stake being whether Japan shall have party rule, as in England, or bureaucratic, though paternal, control.

THE "CONSTITUTIONAL" BOGEY.

The wail heard in the Opposition camp that the present Government is "unconstitutional" is not correct. The Kiyoura Cabinet is in perfect accord with the constitution granted the Japanese people by the late Emperor Meiji. It is certainly not a party government, and when the Opposition talk about the development of "constitutional" government in Japan being retarded, what they really mean is that party government is not making the headway they desire. Before Japan can have even the vestige of party government as in England, a change in the constitution is necessary. This change cannot come through any legislation by either the House of Peers or the House of Representatives; it can only be received as a free gift from his Imperial Majesty the Emperor.

The issue to be fought out in the impending general elections will be the clear-cut one of bureaucracy v. party control. The forces seem to be about evenly matched, but in Japan a Government party has never yet lost an election (and paradoxical as it may seem) a Government newspaper, or a paper throwing its full weight on the side of the Government, has never prospered. Furthermore, the Government has control of the election machinery and the tremendors moral power that comes from being trusted by the Throne. The Government has, however, promised that the general elections will be conducted in all fairness.

RIOTOUS SCENES IN CITY.

Practically from the time the House of Representatives got to business to-day, strife and confusion was the rule, both outside and inside the legislative chamber. Large crowds of intelligenisia, whose numbers have been swelled since the earthquake threw them out of jobs, combined with professional government hecklers to blow off steam in the vicinity of the Diet building, eager to exercise their oratorical and histrionic powers. Police and troops, the former to the number of some 8,000 and the latter about 3,000 strong, gave the place the appearance of a citadel. Numerous clashes occurred in various portions of the Capital, but the forces of the law had the situation always under perfect control. While a demagogue was haranguing a crowd opposite the Kenseikai (Opposition political party) headquarters, the news arrived that Premier Viscount Kiyoura had dissolved the Diet. A batch of 20 men slowly disengaged themselves from the gathering and made for the Prime Minister's residence, with the avowed intention, as they afterwards confessed to the police, of lynching the aged statesman. Strong cordons of police and troops had already been drawn up around Viscount Kiyoura's mansion and, after a half-heated show of resistance, the would-be murderer-"patriots" were packed into a Black Maria and hauled off to the nearest prison.

WITHIN THE HOUSE.

The scenes enacted on the floor of the Lower House were on a par with the rowdyism outside, Opposition members going hammer and tongs at Government supporters and the latter doing likewise. Only the Premier, his Ministers and the immediate entourage managed to maintain anything like a semblance of dignity. The verbal, and subsequent fistic, battle started when Mr. Hamada, an Opposition politician, mounted the rostrum and called on all the gods to witness the crimes of the Kiyoura Ministry, declaring that the manner in which the privileged classes are flouting the will of the people is bound to lead to grave radical developments. He then saddled the Cabinet with attempted murder. Two days ago, when the Opposition leaders were returning from Osaka whither they went for the purpose of enlisting the people of the commercial metropolis against the authorities, an attempt had been made to wreck the train on which they were returning to Tokio. Huge boulders had been placed on the line and but for the fact that a snow-plough had been attached to the locomotive, a terrible tragedy would surely have resulted. As it was the train was only derailed and no one was even hurt.

A HOWLING BEDLAM.

Mr. Komatsu, Minister of Railways, rose to speak, but a babel of cat-calls jeers, hisses, shouts and rapping of tables drowned all his attempts at incoherent talk. Whilst the din was still at its height, five men, with white rosettes conspicuously attached to the lapels of their kimono—indicating that they belonged to the Opposition—advanced to the Minister and tore away from his hand the document containing the reply he was to read to the House in connexion with the attempt to wreck the train. This was the signal for bedlam to be let loose, the greater portion of the solons suddenly becoming transformed into a mob of hooting, shrieking, hand-clapping, shouting, fighting people. Walking up to the Speaker who tried to restore order, one member peeled off his coat and waistcoat, rolled up his sleeves and challenged him to a fight. In other parts of the hall the more pugnaciously-inclined were already picking out their favourite sparring partners. From somewhere a water caraffe hurtled past the aged Premier's head and broke in a thousand pieces against the wall just behind Viscount Kiyoura's chair. From the public gallery a stream of water was poured out of flasks on to the floor beneath, giving the excited law-makers a cold douching in winter.

PREMIER'S TRUMP CARD.

The police who had been thickly lining the public gallery and the corridors came into the thick of the row and when they showed that they were also able to play at the game of fighting and were determined to restore order in the only way the police know how to do, the martial ardour of law-makers and spectators alike soon cooled down. The five men who wrested the speech of the Railway Minister from his hands were among the first to be taken into custody. Black Marias crept around to the rear entrance of the Diet and sped back full of the wild men who desecrated the legislative chamber. The effect was electrical. Order soon resulted. The Speaker immediately seized the opportunity afforded by the lull to declare a recess.

When the House adjourned, Premier Kiyoura announced that he had received an Imperial Rescript. The unruly House stood in solemn silence, while the Prime Minister read an Order signed by the Prince Regent dissolving the Diet. That was the Premier's trump card, and when he sprang his trap, he took the entire Opposition and the country by surprise. Dissolution of the Diet was expected, but it was not thought that the Premier would resort to this extreme measure until the Opposition had brought in a vote of non-confidence.

A MONTH'S PAY LOST.

Dissolution on January 31, instead of some time early in February when the Opposition was to bring in a motion declaring that the Government did not enjoy the trust of the nation, means, to go down to more material things, that members of the House of Representatives lose a month's pay, that is to say each one's bank balance is Y.250 less. Perhaps Viscount Kiyoura grimly smiled when he thought of how he would also hit at such a vulnerable region as the solons' bank balances. Perhaps that is the reason why the Opposition proposed bringing in the non-confidence motion some time early in February, for even if the House had been sitting a few hours they would have been entitled to a full month's pay. The satiracally inclined have written to ask the parliamentarians which has hurt them the more—the defeat of their political principles or the loss of a month's wages!

This makes the eighth dissolution of the Lower House since the Japanese were granted a constitution. The general election to be held in May will be the 15th, including the extra general elections.

AMERICAN WOMEN IN PEKING

Outnumber Men by 489 to 407: Marine Guards' Census

Twelve hundred and thirty six Americans call Peking home. This fact was brought to light by the searching census just completed by the Mounted Detachment of the U. S. Marine Guard of the American Legion. The work of visiting the home of every known citizen of the United States in Peking and leaving a blank form to be filled in, took several months of strenuous work on the part of the Marines and they are given hearty credit for the undertaking.

American women here continue to be in excess of the men, there being 489 women registered to a corresponding 407 males. However, among the children the boys outrank the girls having 136 to the girls 127, making in all a total of 363 American children.

The total figure of Americans includes, of course, the numbers of the Legion Guard. Not counting the commissioned officers, there are 340 Marines in the barracks at the Legation. Therefore the civilian American population, with which is counted the officers of the guard and Legation attaches, totals 896.

The oft quoted myth that the Far East is a good hunting ground for the young girl desirous of getting married, continues to be shattered as far as Peking in concerned. Here are the figures. Registered unmarried men were but 65. Compare that with the 157 registered unmarried women and the outstanding fact appears that the American bachelors number exactly 43.046 per cent. of their unmarried sisters.

The missionary field accounts for the greater portion of the American population. Merely counting the heads of families or detached women, 163 persons are credited to the missions. The Peking Union Medical College takes another 71 wage earners, both men and women. Teachers in educationas institutions other than missions number 33, including the American community of Tsing Hua. The business world claims 57 men and women. The American Legation with its kindred attaches, language students and Guard officers adds an even 60 to the list.

ONE PHILOSOPHER.

Fiftoen Americans confess to being advisers or employees of the Chinese Government, scattered through the Ministry of Communications, Ministry of Finance, the President's Office and the Marine Customs. The fields of science are likewise touched in the census which divulges the fact that there are at least one explorer, two archæologists, one geologist and one philosopher here. Nine Americans take care of the interest of the journalistic world so far as Peking is concerned.

Another subject of the census is the American woman married to foreigners. Under the American law they remain citizens of the United States and several were registered as such on the list just compiled.

Smith wins first rank as the most frequently occurring name here with five different families. The Youngs come in second with four to their credit, ranking behind them come the Pattersons with three.

TROUBLE IN TIBET

Reported Cleavage Between Progressives and Reactionists

Calcutta, Feb. 5.

There are circumstantial rumours that the Tashi Lama has fled from Tashilumpo. One account says that he has gone to China intending to ally himself with the Mongolians against the Lhasa Government. Another states that he is trying to reach British territory.—Reuter.

HUGE DROP IN C. E. R. LAND REVENUE

From Million to Few Thousand Dollars Annually: Result of Prolonged Dispute

From Our Own Correspondent.

The Land dispute in the special railway area is still unsolved. The local press is never tired of referring to this question, which really must be straightened out, so that the incomes due to the Railway Land Department and the new Chinese Land Bureau can be efficiently collected.

In justice to the Chinese Land Bureau it may be stated that amounts that are being collected from renters of land along the railway line by Chinese collectors are now being handed by the Chinese Land Bureau for the safe-keeping of Gen. Wen, the Chief of Police, who in his turn has opened a special account in the Bank of China, so that the money collected can be touched by no one until the issue is amicably settled.

Notwithstanding the noise that is being created the sums collected by the Chinese authorities are as yet very small, amounting only to some thousands of dollars, though in the past the Railway Land department's collections annually exceeded a million. This goes to show that most renters of land are avoiding payment at present. Actual losers for the time being are the two disputing bureaux. Thus the interested parties should lose no more time coming to a tangible agreement acceptable to both.

PHILIPPINE TRADE

America Always the Best Customer in Spite of the Nationalists

Manila, Jan. 30.

More than 50 per cent. of the total foreign trade of the Philippine Islands for the year 1923 went to the United States, according to figures obtained from the Customs Bureau. Of the total foreign trade, amounting to $208,552,737, business amounting to $135,399,737 went to the United States. Of the total trade handled by the United States, $85,047,023 represented the value of exports from the Philippines and the balance imports from that country to the Islands.

The imports from the United States by way of the Atlantic coast in 1923 amounted to $27,571,452 while imports through the Pacific seaboard were valued at only $22,380,415. On the other hand Philippine products exported to the United States through the Pacific coast were valued at $43,812,820 against $41,233,072 sent by way of Atlantic ports.

Japan came next to the United States in the total volume of trade, her share being valued at $15,749,553. Great Britain was third with a total of $11,664,706. Spain's trade with the Philippines during 1923 amounted to $5,000,000.

MARKED ADVANCE OF 1923.

The total foreign and domestic trade of the Philippine Islands for the year 1923 amounted to $208,552,737, compared with $175,780,942 for the previous year, showing an increase of $32,771,794, according to figures made public by the Bureau of Customs.

The exports for 1923 amounted to $120,752,990 and the imports to $87,799,747, showing a balance of trade in favour of the Philippines of $32,953,243.

The Customs records show that during 1923 the price of sugar exported was much higher than that obtained in 1922. The total exports of sugar in 1923 were approximately 299,181 tons valued at $39,541,623 against 398,278 tons valued at $25,582,550 in 1922.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NAVIGATION IN THE UPPER YANGTZE

Dangers of the Rocks: Several Accidents of Minor Importance

Ichang, Feb. 4.

Steam navigation on the Upper Yangtze has been entirely suspended on account of the very low water. The Pakiang arrived in port from Chungking on January 28, and the Chichuen two days later, and these are the last two steamers of the season. When the former arrived the water mark was -0.3, so it was impossible to think of going up again. The Chichuen had the misfortune to strike the rocks some 12 miles below Chungking on her trip before last, but was not so badly injured that she had to stop running. She was patched up with cement, and was able to put in another run, and has now gone to Shanghai for proper repairs. The water mark to-day is -0.5.

Without doubt a wonderful thing has been done in thus making it possible to navigate the wild waters of the Upper Yangtze for nearly eleven months of the year, and much credit is due to all who have had to do with the undertaking. The River Inspector is ever on the alert to do all he can to assist in the navigation of these difficult waters.

Of course, dangers have to be faced, as is demonstrated by the fact that no fewer than six ships have struck rocks this winter, but fortunately not one of the six came to an untimely end. All have been brought down and gone to Shanghai, except the Hsutung, and we understand that salvage operations on her are proceeding satisfactorily.

The military steamer Yangwei was the worst damaged of all, but even she was brought down safely. We understand the military are hard task-masters, and the pilot of the Yangwei was cast into prison and beaten because the ship struck the rocks. Now they have two other steamers which have recently gone up. One is the old Ankong, but she has been renamed the Kiahtsi, which presumably has been given her for good luck, at it is the name of the first year in the Cycle, which begins to-morrow.

THE BEGGAR NUISANCE.

The Chamber of Commerce have done a splendid piece of work recently in clearing the streets of beggars. It was represented to the shopkeepers that they were daily being pestered by beggars, and handed over small sums, which in the aggregate might come to as much as a dollar a month. So the Chamber said that if these sums were paid to them, they would clear the beggars off the streets, and house, feed and clothe them. Temporary shelters have been erected within the grounds of the Chamber of Commerce, and here beggars to the number of 250 have been congregated. Each one was required to wash (and it must have been a task!) and was then given clothes for his own. They are being taught to work as barbers, tailors and shoemakers. Truly it is a fine piece of work, and will be a credit to those who carry it through successfully. Meantime the shopkeepers are quite pleased to subscribe to the funds sums varying from 1,000 to 6,000 cash per month, according to the size of the shop.

Good order is certainly being kept in the place just now, as Brigadier Liu, who has command of the patrolling troops, does not allow any loafers to congregate, or gambling to be carried on.

ILLEGAL TAXATION.

In spite of the funds that are being collected from opium taxation, the military have not been able to get sufficient money for the troops for the New Year, and an appeal has again been made to the Chamber of Commerce, who have had to produce the sum of $50,000. The police are also hard up, and they have applied to the same source for a loan of $2,000. It is a question how long it will be before the merchants are so bare that they will not be able to meet these demands.

Dealers in cigarettes and cigars have been doing their best to oppose the 20 per cent. ad valorem tax recently imposed on them. They have protested, and three or four days ago a crowd of 200 of them gathered in front of the magistrate's yamên and made a bit of a row. But the tax has not yet been withdrawn, and may not be at all.

YIHYANG MARU CAPTIVES.

There is still no word of the release of the captives taken from the Yihyang Maru. The Peking Government has again appointed a deputy to proceed to Szechuan to negotiate for their release, and he was due to leave Peking some days ago. He will not be able to get up by steamer for about a month yet. We understand the party who holds these two men still demands a million dollars. It is now five months since the incident, so these two men have been held longer than any others who have been taken by bandits.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE SILVER QUESTION IN SIBERIA

Plenty of Roubles: Whence Do They Come? Leakage of Gold: Capital Needed but Conditions Impossible

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chita, Jan. 31.

In a conversation with Mr. Kolesnikov, manager of the State Bank here, on his return from Novo-Nikolaievsk, I touched on the question of silver currency in Siberia and asked him how the silver rouble was being accepted throughout the entire territory.

He explained that, at first, it was a difficult matter to cope with the influence of Chinese silver in the Extreme East, but recently, that is to say, since the closing down of the frontier, the Russian rouble is holding its own in the interior. Along the frontier, however, the Russian rouble is slightly depreciated. Large quantities of Russian silver have systematically disappeared, but recently this feature is not so prevalent. In the days of the Far Eastern Republic, Moscow collected all the available silver currency existing in Russia Proper where silver was not legal tender and despatched it to Chita and notwithstanding the repeated consignments, received here, there was a noticeable shortage of silver. At the present moment, Siberia has enough silver to take care of the situation.

Mr. Kolesnikov thereupon opened the drawer of his desk and displayed a handful of the new silver roubles and 50 copeck pieces bearing the replica of the Tsar and the double-headed eagle and remarked that consignments of this silver had just recently been received from Moscow.

I inquired where the silver came from, but Mr. Kolesnikov only repeated "from Moscow." I asked him whom he suspected of appropriating the Russian silver and he replied "Japan." I then asked him if the new silver rouble had been minted in Japan, to which Mr. Kolesnikov did not give a direct answer, but repeated that the new silver was being received from Moscow.

JAPAN THE OFFENDER?

When I explained to him that certain consignments of silver were also being missed from China, he replied that, in his opinion, Japan is the offender. I did not pursue the question any further, but asked him how the gold receipts were coming in and he explained that the economic council of the Far East had studied the question of combating the contraband of gold abroad to China and had asserted that undoubtedly 50 per cent. of the entire production of gold in Siberia finds its way abroad. In order to combat this special measures are being adopted to invest the various trading State undertakings and co-operative unions with better facilities to enable them to compete with the Chinese traders in supplying the miners with the necessary supplies, food, clothing, etc. It is expected by these means to be able to grapple with the evil of contraband in gold.

With regard to foreign capital participating in the gold mining industry of Siberia, Mr. Kolesnikov stated he was a great supporter of the scheme of inviting foreign capital for the simple reason that it would help Russia's credit and pave the way for the development of other industries here in Siberia.

I profited from this occasion and gave Mr. Kolesnikov a list of the conditions stipulated in the concessionary agreements, which conditions not only offered an obstacle in the path of foreign capital coming into the country, but precluded the possibility of foreign capital expanding, if it does come in under the conditions referred to. He explained that a new concessionary agreement was under consideration at the present moment which, he felt sure, would not be so hostile to foreign capital.

Mr. Kolesnikov stated that with respect to foreign capital, it was the express desire of every member of the Russian Economic Council not to encourage Japanese capital in the Far East of Siberia. The Economic Council would be extremely glad to see American and British capital come in.

Mr. De Ladvez, manager of the Verkhne-Udinsk branch of the State Bank, who is in Chita on a visit, stated that there is an abundance of silver in Mongolia but it is Chinese silver, there being very little Russian silver there. In general, he explained, the situation with respect to Russian silver in Siberia Proper, is much better than it was heretofore.

Mr. M. Antropoff of the Dalbank, informed me that the turn-over of silver roubles and small denomination silver during the nine months' operations of the Dalbank in the Far East was 15 million. The Dalbank has received two consignments of the new Romanoff silver roubles from Moscow direct amounting to Rls. 1,100,000, so that the combined receipts of the State and Dalbanks up to date are Rls. 2,200,000. Formerly, the Japanese deliveries of small denomination silver were packed in special Japanese packages with labels upon which Japanese writings showing the amount of the contents were attached. These packages were also received from Moscow, from the Mint.

"RAISING SUN" ROUBLES.

He stated that the consignments of new roubles are packed in Russian canvas packages and are delivered from the mint in Moscow. He admits, however, the possibility that this silver comes from Japan as Russia has not had any stock of available silver. The silver that was stolen from the churches and which certain persons are endeavouring to explain has been minted into the new Romanoff rouble, was used up long ago for purposes of propoganda, etc., etc.

He considers that Moscow has received the silver from Japan as the balance of the order placed with Tokio in the former days of the Tsar's Government. He pointed out that silver currency minted by Russia never possessed the exceptional shining appearance that the new roubles possess. In addition, he drew attention to the letters imprinted on the rouble, namely—B. C. which letters in Russian language stand for "Voshodyashtoe solutse," which translated into English means the Rising Sun. These letters are also on the silver of small denomination supplied by Japan in 1920 and later. The Dalbank is despatching consignments of this new silver to Blagovestschensk, Habarovsk and Vladivostok.

The Russian rouble will soon be declared full face value, namely, one rouble gold value. This will assist in combating the leakage of the rouble

A RIVER JOURNEY THROUGH SZECHUAN

Chiefly Remarkable for Squeeze and a Simple Way of Scaring off Bandits

From Our Mienchow Correspondent.

Hochow to Suiling, Jan. 7 to 15.

From Hochow to Suiling is 280 li by road, but it is considerably greater distance by river, as the river winds about in a rather disconcerting fashion, so that at one place a day or two ago we were 100 li from Suiling and on going another 30 li found ourselves still 100 li from the city.

At Hochow we had an unpleasant time waiting about because the laopan could get no trackers to take the place of those who had left him. The city was shut up with the First Army inside; and on the hills outside were stragglers of the Second. There was some desultory firing, which did not become more than troublesome before we left. The city was taken by the Second that night.

When we got to the likin station there was more trouble for the captain; they made him pay $15.50. It is difficult for the foreigner to realize the Chinese mind on this point. To pay $61 at Nottingham and then $15.50 at Derby looks something similar to what happened here. The unfortunate laopan has not finished yet, however. He has just gone ahead into Suiling to square the authorities there, and will have more trouble further on.

We only did 15 li on this first day from Hochow. The day has been wet and unpleasant, the river is covered with other boats, and we are getting in each other's way. Thirty li from Hochow is a market called Wei-toh; the scenery is pretty, but the river is very winding and shallow. On the night of the 8th we reached Tongchichen. This place is 50 li from Hochow. It is a fair-sized market and an excellent anchorage for boats. The rocks, which enable the boat to remain in deep water, are covered with facilities for fastening to the shore.

On the 9th we had some more of the hindrances that meet the traveller by boat. We got within three li of Anchün, which is 70 li from Hochow. There the river is very shallow and the boat had to be literally hauled over the river bed in places by a team of 70 coolies. We were held back for three hours by a huge junk that would not move, though a whole army of coolies were at work on it.

There are about 150 Christians in this little town, and a nice little church. We anchored about one mile above the city so that we succeeded in doing. They were expecting fighting there the next day. Anchün is a busy river port governed from Tonglanhsien. On the 10th we did a long day getting off before daylight and going on till 7.25. We anchored at a place called Tahopa. This is a market where soldiers are generally stationed, and they 'collect' from passing boats; but on this occasion they had all gone; presumably to Anchün for the fighting. On the 11th we did a good long day. There were two or three bad rapids below Tonglanhsien. This part of the road is often brigand-infested; but the soldiers have driven them further up. We kept going till 8 p.m. and anchored three li below Tonglenhsien at the foot of a rapid. We were told here that the city is 140 li from Suiling by road, and 180 li by river. The city impressed us chiefly by its cleanness and its dulness! The military have so damaged the currency with paper money that dollar notes are fetching 60 per cent. less than their face value.

We saw a tract on the gate (not a Christian tract) exhorting to purity, and condemning prostitution. There is quite a fine Christian church, and schools for boys and girls here. Not far from here the river was so shallow that the boat had to be lightened of 10,000 odd pounds of its cargo, which was put on another boat.

THE BLOWOING BUGLES.

About 100 li from [illegible] Shuangkiangchen, a fairly [illegible] country town; and 30 li on [illegible] Uchikeo, also 100 li by road. This part of the river, and up to Taihochen, is said to be infested with brigands; so when we arrived at Tsingshipa for the night of the 13th Chang, our cook, went off and interviewed the local militia, and they kindly blew bugles quite a lot, and probably helped to keep us safely for the night. Last night, the 14th, we spent at Longfengchang a market about 20 li from Suiling. Here Chang's efforts were even more successful, and the local fathers came aboard with old guns, and talked reassuringly, and told us they would set a watch all night. They did, and fired away occasionally, making the hills resound with the echoes! Put them and their good deeds down to China's credit account, please! The remaining 20 li or so is very difficult, and it was nearly 4.30 when we arrived

A LITTLE SQUEEZE.

Just below is a likin station where a soldier and a Sien-sang board your boat. Our captain knows these people, and he was very clever. He had important business in Suiling, and asked Chang to see the boats through. I know nothing of this! So Chang went off and paid the four dollars according to the bill of lading. The two gentlemen mentioned above came on board, one armed with the "harpoon." Said they, "You don't tell us you only have 25 bundles here besides the foreigner's stuff; you have much more." And they became very zealous for the public welfare. "You must pay four dollars more, and we will let you through," they added. Chang knew his men, and turning to me, who, he cleverly arranged, should be there, he said anxiously, "Please lend two dollars, the captain isn't here." I produced two dollars, and after much argument the public men consented to be content therewith. Chang has such a poor opinion of his countrymen that he declares they will have those two dollars themselves; while the captain expressed the gratitude for much help in avoiding "squeeze."

We are told that the road to Taihochen is rather unquiet with brigands. It is either brigands or soldiers; and yet when I listen to these boat coolies shouting at their work; or remember those kindly militia-men blowing their bugles and firing their guns, I realize what a lot of honest, simple workers China still has.

FORMOSANS IN AMOY

Allegation of Manslaughter by Chinese Detectives

Peking, Feb. 9.

According to Japanese telegrams eight Formosans have been killed at Amoy by Chinese detectives during the last month. On February 6, detectives attempted to arrest two Formosans and the incident created a good deal of uneasiness among the Formosans. There had been a certain amount of excitement for several weeks, but it reached a climax on that day. Fearing that the situation would lead to serious disorders, the Japanese Consul-General sent for a Japanese gunboat which was expected to arrive on February 8.

The Formosans appear to have been killed during arrests.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

We learn from a source that is in close touch with Canton that Dr. Sun Yat-sen, Canton's Generalissimo, has sent an agent named Hsu to England to urge the British Government to withdraw its recognition of the Peking Government and to recognize the new Consolidated Government which Dr. Sun and the Kuomingtang propose to establish in Canton. It is said that Mr. Eugene Chen will also leave at an early date in connexion with the same matter. Such action on the part of Dr. Sun would not be surprising, especially in view of his telegram to Mr. Ramsay Macdonald and of the British Government's recognition of Soviet Russia.

place where they stopped numbers of sick were brought for treatment. At one centre where they "rested" one day, 250 patients were treated, and all along the road from Yunnanfu to Peking there are sick folks who are doubtless looking back upon the visit of the doctor with gratitude.

It is work of this kind which breaks down prejudice against the foreigner and his religion and opens up the way for the message of the gospel.

BREEZY NINGPO

Life a Perfect Whirl of Wild Excisement

From a Correspondent.

Ningpo, Feb. 12.

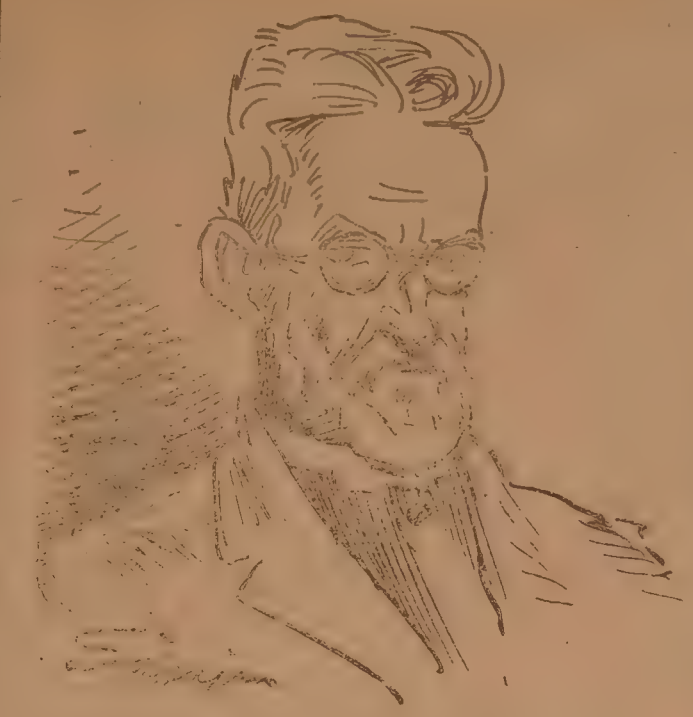
Our busy community has just experienced a sad loss in the departure from Ningpo of Mr. Alf Squeers, who has been transferred to Shanghai. Typical old-timer," Mr. Squeers was one of the earliest pioneers of Ningpo, and it is in no small part due to him that the port occupies the proud position it does to-day in the world of commerce. But it is not in business circles alone that he will be missed—St. Luke's had no more enthusiastic nor hard-working member of it's congregation than Mr. Squeers, while in the gentler world of Society he has been the "life and soul" of every party and will leave a sad gap in the hearts of more than one of the fair sex. Shrewd merchant, devoted churchwarden, genial clubman and inimitable host, Mr. Squeers occupied a niche that will be indeed hard to fill, and it will be long before Ningpo forgets his sunny personality. We can merely congratulate our rising sister port on her good fortune in being the future domicile of Mr. Squeers, and we feel that we are but voicing the unuttered thoughts of all Ningpo in wishing him Godspeed. 'I lu ping an,' Alfie!

Ningpo is nothing if not up to date. Several enthusiastic residents have recently formed a "Brighter Ningpo" Committee, though indeed it is hard to say in what way our cheery little port could possibly be made brighter. What with two palatial clubs, our popular kinematograph performances (with a practically entire change of programme once a month), our delightful promenade whereon the jeunesse dreée of the port enjoy the fragrant river breezes every evening, our Race Course and our numerous and well-attended churches—to quote but a few of our distractions—Ningpo is gay indeed. It is true that our Race Course it at present disused, owing to the unfortunate demise of the pony (in 1891), but amid the continuous whirl of gaiety that comprises our life here, it would perhaps be hard to find time for a Race Meeting. Nevertheless, the altruistic intentions of the "B. N. C." (as they are popularly known) are highly creditable, and we cordially extend to them and their genial chairman our best wishes for success in their mission of illumination. Go to it, boys!

Apropos of the foregoing, we understand that the as yet unmarried ladies of our community are issuing invites for a Spinsters' Ball, to be held on February 29. Oh boy! that sure should be some show! Some of our bachelors are already sprucing themselves up; anticipatively others, we hear, are arranging to be away that week-end. It will be but a fitting climax to a quite unusually snappy season—the Whist-drive on Xmas Eve, the Sale of Work and Lucky Dip on New Year Day's and now the Spinsters' Ball—we cannot recall a previous winter in Ningpo characterized by such reckless revels and so much mad abandon.

Our tame statistician informs us that he has lately got out figures which go to prove that Ningpo now has a higher percentage of clubs per member of the foreign population than any other community in the Orient. The actual figure is, we gather, 0.002901 Each: 71.5.

If placed end to end they would take three weeks to reach the moon at least we think that is what he said, though it may have been days, not weeks. However bravo Ningpo! Mozambique and Iloilo must look to their laurels now.



Mr. Warren of Changsha Gazes on the Future—with a Long Experience of the Past to Help

Great interest has been aroused recently among local sportsmen at the first armadillo of the year being reported in the river in the vicinity of Ningpo. It is extremely early for these parthenogenetic conchofers to leave the sea for their annual ovulation in the crecks and muddy rivers of Chêkiang, but it is doubtless the unusual mildness of the winter which has caused their premature migration from warmer latitudes. At any rate, their appearance is the topic of the hour, and once again there rages among our Nimrods the old, old controversy as to the respective merits of the dry fly and No. 4 shot in the circumventing of these elusive amphibians.

SIBERIA'S TIMBER MARKETS

The Immense Demand Before War and How It Is Gradually Being Recovered

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chita, Jan. 31.

The Government provided the Timber Department with 60,000 gold roubles for the preparation of timber along the shores of the Pacific and 40,000 logs were produced. The cost of one cubic foot of timber is 8 copecks. The stump tax will be paid to the State by the Timber Trust on the timber being realized. At the present moment, there are 17 saw-mills possessing 90 saws capable of producing 3,600,000 cubic feet of timber. During the present year (1923) we succeeded, comparatively speaking, in successfully selling the best quality of cedar logs prepared by Dal-les along the coast, but up to the present, owing to the absence of connexion with the markets and consumers, we are deprived of the possibility of selling our lower qualities of timber, such as fir, pine and larch, which grow in the Koppi, Nelman and Amgu forests. The sum obtained from the sale of the cedar logs exceeds 340,000 roubles gold.

Timber from the Pre-Maritime Province naturally will find its way into the timber markets of the Far East. The first market is that of China which imports annually timber material to a sum exceeding 22,000,000 roubles gold. The second market is that of timber into Australia before 8,300,000 cubic feet of timber material represnting a sum exceeding 41,500,000 roubles gold used to be imported during the period before the Great War. The importation of timber into Australia beforet the War was roughly 25,000,000 roubles gold and that of South Africa roughly 13,000,000 roubles gold. Thus these four great markets show a demand for timber averaging roughly 100,000,000 roubles gold.

The State Timber Trust known as Dal-les confined its operations last year chiefly along the Ussuri railway and along the Pacific coast, or properly speaking along the coast of the Sea of Japan. The preparation of aspeen logs for the manufacture of matches was conducted chiefly alonng the Ussuri railroad. In view of the fact that the pre-Maritime Province is the chief supplier for these logs to foreign markets (Manchuria and Korea, supply only 10 per cent,) the operations were successful and permitted the possibility of conducting them as a State monopoly. The opposition on the part of Japanese exporters which was strong at first, was soon overcome. During the past season 2,000,000 cubic feet (the sube here as also in all future cases represents cylindrical measurement). The entire 2,000,000 feet were sold for export abroad, 3,000 cars of aspen logs were loaded on the railroad up to July 13, 1923 and 2,239 arrived in Vladivostok and 70 cars remained on the line. There was a balance in stock of 140,000 cubic feet, 2,458 of the cars that arrived in Vladivostok, were loaded into steamers and 481 cars were held in reserve as stock. On a whole, 1,285,000 cubic feet representing a sum of 775,000 roubles gold were exported from Siberia-Vladivostok on July 13, 1923. The work of preparation is conducted by means of peasant unions, artels and stevedores.

Japan purchased 74 per cent. of the total, China 25 and roughly 1 per cent. (25,000) cubic feet were used for the state Match Factory "Red East" Krasni Vostock. The sale price for aspen logs was regulated according to the market price for that material abroad and was franco-board steamer. The first transaction was concluded at 60 copecks gold per foot and the quantity was 1,800,000 cubic feet. The price rose to 64 copecks gold and a parcel of 150,000 cubic feet was sold then the price again rose to 65 copecks gold and a further lot of 50,000 feet was sold.

The Iman and Bikin mills are executing orders received from the English Co., Dodwell & Co., on July 2, 1923 for 90,000 cubic feet of sawn timber. The preparation of cedar and fir logs, sleepers and beams was conducted in the territories of Suchan and Skotovo. 1,014,877 cubic feet of beams, logs and sleepers were prepared during the winter season of 1923. This work was conducted by peasant organizations.

Round timber and beams were sold for export abroad amounting to roughly 360,000 roubles gold.

In addition to the foregoing the State Timber Trust "Dal-les" undertook the work of floating and selling the logs prepared during former years by the Japanese timber merchants, which timber was sequestered and amounted to 937,280 cubic feet. Part of this timber has already been sold for export.

AMERICA'S EXCLUSION OF JAPANESE

The Discrimination Clause Specially Resented: Bitter Feeling in Japan: Strong Words in Peers' Chamber

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 30.

A bitter speech delivered in the House of Peers to-day by Dr. Eigoro Kanatsugi, in which the Upper House legislator dwelt at length on the "iniquities" of America in denying to Japanese privileges that are accorded to other aliens, and in the course of which he declared that the real reason why the United States desires to exclude Japanese nationals is because "America is jealous of Japan," was the feature of to-day's meeting of the Imperial Japanese Diet. The speech serves to show that the feeling of a large proportion of the Japanese people have been swung, pendulum-like, from high expectations of an amicable settlement of the vexed California anti-alien land law and naturalization, to intense disappointment underneath which can be discerned a vein of acute bitterness.

QUOTA PLAN WELCOMED.

News received here three days ago stated that the members of the Senate Immigration Committee were considering a plan to admit Japanese immigrants to the United States on the same quota basis as other nationals. This plan, it was understood, would do away with the Gentlemen's Agreement, and, instead of thousands of Japanese being admitted to the United States—last year 5,300 were admitted—under the stipulations of that contract, only 240 would be eligible for admission according to the new quota plan. As such legislation would, however, remove the discrimination, which the Japanese maintain is the crux of the whole problem, the proposed change was welcomed, and it was thought that one of the major matters causing friction between the Island Empire and the Great Republic would be ended with satisfaction to both sides.

Officials expressed great satisfaction at the reports that such legislation was being considered by the Senate Immigration Committee, and a Foreign Office man declared that "placing Japanese immigration on such a basis would be invaluable to the furtherance of amicable relations between the two countries, because, although it would serve to reduce the number of Japanese admissible to the United States, it would also remove the stigma of discrimination which is so distasteful to the Japanese."

PLAN REPORTED DROPPED.

A couple of days later came the news that the plan to admit Japanese into the United States on a quota basis had been dropped. Satisfaction gave way to a species of disappointed consternation on the ground that an issue which had been a very sensitive one for years and might have been ended, is even more live now, especially, as the Japanese maintain, the "full seal of approval on discrimination," which has ever been a thorn in the side of the sensitive people of these islands has now been set. Some of the best friends of Japanese-American friendship assailed the Lodge-Johnson Immigration Bill in the severest of language. Viscount Shibusawa, the octogenarian merchant prince of Japan, whose labours for Japanese-American friendship and amity run back into several decades, seen by your representative, merely declared that "the extremists had managed to put it over." He then buried his head in his hands and declared that he did not want to think about the matter at the time more than he could help. Baron Sakatani, nephew and heir of Viscount Shibusawa, who has been as indefatigable as his uncle in the promotion of good feeling between the two principal nations fronting the littoral of the Pacific, in the course of a lengthy address in the House of Peers, called the proposed legislation, in accordance with the Lodge-Johnsen Immigration Bill a "Stupendous crime."

Declaring that the "Supreme Court's decision is the greatest blot ever cast on the reputation of the United States" and that, if not revoked, "it would set the death warrant on more than 100,000 Japanese in the States of California and Washington," Dr. Eigoro Kanatsugi, member of the Upper House, to-day bitterly assailed the "wave of anti-Japanism that is sweeping across the United States, singling out Japanese, as subjects for ostracism."

AMERICA'S "ERRATIC CONDUCT."

The speaker declared that he heard it accredited to Mr. Cyrus E. Woods, American Ambassador in Japan, that sentiment in the Senate is strongly opposed to the proposed legislation, but warned his hearers not to place too much faith on the hopeful outcome the American Ambassador expects will result, "for America is far too erratic in her conduct."

He then went on to give a detailed account of his appraisal of American conduct, severely censuring the United States for "spurning membership in the League of Nations which was formed, when the war was over, at the specific suggestion of an American President."

EARTHQUAKE RELIEF CONTRAST.

Dr. Kanatsugi then went on to declare that America was Janus-faced and that the two faces could never be reconciled. "The speed and goodwill with which America came rushing to our assistance after the terrible disaster of September 1," he said, "illustrates another side of the American character. It is difficult to understand why a nation that comes hurrying to the succor of a neighbour in difficulties cannot refrain from discrimination against the very country it helped. People interpreted the aid given as showing a happy turn in the sentiments and feelings of the Americans towards the Japanese. Evidence to the contrary, however, is clearly seen in the decisions of the United States Supreme Court denying to Japanese the right of naturalization and of American citizenship. Americans make a clear demarcation between reason and sentiment. Sympathy shown towards us in the recent calamity does not mean that America is more friendly towards Japan. Had the seismic catastrophe occurred in China, the Americans would have done for the Chinese just as much."

The speaker then advised the Government to "abandon the policy of goodwill towards the United States and to adopt instead a stronger attitude towards America in matters that directly concern the welfare of Japan and the Japanese" adding that if Japan bases her policy towards the United States on sympathy and goodwill "she will commit a terrible blunder"

Dr. Kanatsugi then went on to talk of other outlets for the surplus population of the country and declared that Japanese could emigrate to Australia, "for although strong anti-Japanese agitation is prevalent there, an equally strong pro-Japanese movement counter-balances this." Concluding, he declared that Japan must either develop abroad or perish.

The organization of an emigration company, looking towards South America, has just been formed in Tokio. The scheme is not an entirely new one. It was first broached by Mr. Reizo Yamashina, vice-president of the Tokio Chamber of Commerce and was approved by the late Premier, Admiral Kato, but was pigeon-holed at the time. The new association consists of 150 members and the organization is capitalized at Yen 30,000,000. The company proposes to establish Japanese colonies in Brazil and Peru to foster agricultural and live-stock production, mining and shipping.

DR. THOMPSON'S JOURNEY ALONG THE TIBETAN BORDERLANDS

The Death of Brig.-Gen. Pereira: Dr. Thompson's Capture by Bandits: Peoples of the Wild Northwest: Lecture to Royal Asiatic Society

The story of Brigadier-General Pereira's last journey was the subject of a thrilling narrative related on Tuesday to members of the Royal Asiatic Society by Dr. Gordon Thompson, M.D., F.R.C.S., who accompanied the famous Tibetan traveller on his projected journey from Yunnanfu to Peking and was himself captured by brigands when continuing alone after the death of his companion.

Dr. Thompson told his audience that he left Yunnanfu with Brigadier-General Pereira on July 17 last, with the object of travelling along the Tibetan border, that is to say, across the extreme west of the provinces of Yunnan, Szechuan and Kansu. The journey was mapped out in five sections: Yunnanfu to Likiang, Likiang to Batang, Batang to Kanze, Kanze to Lanchow, Lanchow to Paot'ao, and thence to Peking. In the first section the travellers mostly encountered Chinese and tribespeople, the latter forming more than half of the population of Yunnan and for the most part being composed of Mosu, Lisu, Lolo and Miao. The route followed by Mr. Wetherbe was avoided because of reports of brigands, and when they arrived at Likiang they heard of Mr. Wetherbe's capture. They consulted various officials and did their best to help him, but it was not until arrival at Batang that they had news of his remarkable escape. The route taken from Yunnanfu to Likiang lay through the city of Yungpeh and the Yangtze was twice crossed, first by ferry and next by a suspension bridge, believed to be the only bridge spanning the Yangtze in its entire course. General Pereira formed the opinion that the gorges in this section of the river are far more magnificent than those of Ichang.

Arriving at Likiang, the travellers secured fresh transport and mules and from now onwards had Tibetan muleteers. Likiang is the old Mosu capital, and Dr. Thompson observed that it was most interesting to see the Mosu people in their peculiar dress. From Likiang, they pressed on to Atuntze, Yakalo and Batang, crossing from the watershed of the Yangtze to that of the Me- [illegible] separated only by two short days [illegible] The [illegible] fers from that of the Yangtze in that it lies in what may be called a deep cleft of rock formation.

A DEADLY MALARIA.

A particularly virulent form of malaria fever is prevalent in this valley, and the chief muleteer suddenly developed symptoms of severe fever. At this time the party was passing over a very dangerous road continuously subject to landslides. The whole side of the hill was covered with shingle and the road itself was but 12 or 16 inches wide, and from it shingle continually rattled down into the river. The sick muleteer was swaying in his saddle and every moment they expected to see him topple off his mule and toboggan into the river, but the worst part of the road was passed before he finally collapsed. Just as he fell one of the Tibetans caught him by the leg and pulled him back on to the road. The sufferer was carried into a Tibetan village and the doctor and the General spent the night nursing him, but in 36 hours he died, and was buried by the wayside.

Following up the valley of the Mekong, and passing Atuntze, the party once more crossed into the Yangtze watershed, finding the whole of this part of the country populated by Tibetans though nominally under Chinese control. Arriving at Yakalo, they requested permission to travel to Batang just inside the Tibetan frontier, the whole of this part of Tibet being wonderfully peaceful and free from brigands, whereas on the Chinese side of the frontier brigands abound and constantly attack caravans along the route. However, permission was refused by the Tibetan authorities and they therefore followed the old Chinese route to Batang—the route upon which Dr. Shelton met his death at the hands of brigands. Batang was reached 35 days after leaving Yunnanfu. Although the city has a Chinese garrison, it is at present practically isolated, and the Chinese soldiers do not dare to go more than a few li from the city unless they are in big numbers acting as a convoy for their own supplies from Litang or Tachienlu.

CALICO TENTS AT 8,000 FT.

From Batang to Kanze the main road lies through Tibetan territory, but, as permission to travel along this road was refused by the Tibetans, some other means of getting across had to be found and, with the help of missionaries who had been of service to a Princess of the Washih tribe, the two travellers successfully negotiated with them to convoy them across their country. Camping had not been anticipated, and the hastily contrived tents of thin Chinese calico were but poor protection from the severe weather experienced. Batang is some 8,000 ft. above sea level, but the country between Batang and Kanze is mostly much higher plateau land averaging 13,000 to 14,000 feet elevation. Fifteen days were spent in crossing this bleak country, snow falling almost every day, with an occasional blizzard for a change. Fuel was most difficult to obtain, and what little could be got consisted of yak dung, with a little brushwood, the result being that even the Chinese cook failed under this severe test and the dishes he produced were almost inedible. This high tableland country is the source of a number of the smaller rivers which flow into the Yangtze and had never before been crossed by Europeans. The country is populated by nomad tribes who constantly move from place to place in discovery of fresh grazing grounds for their Yak and sheep. The Washih people are a Tibetan tribe and, like all Tibetans, have an aversion to any one possessing a photograph of them or any article of theirs lest the owner be bewitched. Dr. Thompson therefore had great difficulty in obtaining photographs. Some good pictures were, however, secured.

THE DEATH OF GENERAL PEREIRA.

About four days before arriving at Kanze Brigadier-General Pereira was taken ill, but manag- ed to keep going, and Dr. Thompson was hopeful that on arriving at Kanze at a somewhat lower level and in a warm Tibetan house instead of the thin tent he would speedily recover. About 11.30 o'clock on the last day's journey Dr. Thompson was informed by one of the men that the General had collapsed and was lying on the ground half a mile to the rear. Dr. Thompson immediately went back and found that the General had not fallen, but had dismounted and was lying on the ground. They were then only three and a half miles from Kanze. The doctor tended him for two hours at the roadside and he then became easier and managed to mount his pony, the party then carefully and slowly making its way for two miles down to the river. A coracle ferry had to be used and, with considerable difficulty and delay, the river was crossed. Dr. Thompson then rigged up a camp bed with poles to form a stretcher and while transport was crossing the General had a good rest. An attempt was made to get people to carry the bed for the remaining mile and a quarter to Kanze, but neither passers-by nor the yak drivers of the party would touch the bed upon which the sick man lay. Very reluctantly the conclusion was arrived at that the only way to reach Kanze would be for the General once more to be helped on to his pony, and thus very slowly the town was reached. The doctor had sent a Tibetan boy ahead to find shelter and prepare a camp bed and hot water, and all was ready when the party arrived in the evening. The relief came too late, however, for although the General became more easy about midnight, a sudden change then occurred and at 1.15 a.m. he passed away. Sixteen Tibetans carried the coffin to the grave, and so he was buried under the shadow of a great Tibetan Lamasery at Kanze, in view of the range of snow-covered mountains which border the river.

IN AMBUSH.

It was a curious position in which Dr. Thompson now found himself: on the borders of Tibet, with one comrade dead, the road by which he had come now impassable and a long and difficult journey ahead. The march from Kanze to Lanchow had been planned so as to strike due north to the Yellow River, across the Golok country, inhabited by the Golok tribe reputed to be the worst robbers amongst all the Tibetans. They will rob the traveller of his last shirt. At Kanze, Dr. Thompson managed to secure the service of a Mohammedan trader who had already crossed the Golok country, and he found that the route due north was entirely blocked by fighting which was going on between the Goloks and Seta nomads. The traveller accordingly set off in a southeasterly direction, turning due north after four days' journey and so avoiding the disturbed country. The main difficulty in crossing this country was one of transport. It was impossible unless you had your own mules and yak to secure transport for more than two days at a time and there was always the uncertainty of being landed in a place where it would be impossible to go forward or turn back. Most of the territory is grass land and not agricultural. In one section there were rumours of an impending attack by Golok robbers and the party had a narrow escape. Four armed Golok tribesmen who were friendly with the yak drivers met the party and gave information that a band of robbers were in waiting down the valley. The little caravan accordingly turned aside into a ravine and after camping there quietly for 24 hours went on under cover of night, successfully passing the robbers camp without discovery.

THE WATCHERS.

This part of the country was most weird, said Dr. Thompson. Not a living being was seen for several days, yet all the time there was the feeling that they were being watched and that every movement was known. After three days' journey, they arrived at a camping place by a stream and had pitched their tents when two Golok mounted men appeared over the crest of a hill. They had come to take a look at the party, but as soon as one of the doctor's men moved out of camp to question them they instantly disappeared over the crest. A few minutes later two more horsemen appeared round the spur of the hill, and again when a man moved out of camp to find who they were the horsemen disappeared, and when the party turned the spur of the hill not a trace of them was to be seen!

THE THIBETAN NIGHTINGALE.

Ii part of this section, the drivers advised Dr. Thompson that he should request several Lamas to accompany them, for, said they, no robber would attempt to attack a caravan action was given, and the drivers promptly went to a Lamasery in the neighbourhood and procured four of the most villainous-looking Lamas imaginable. Their special duty was to sit outside the doctor's tent each night and keep up a tremendous howl, an intimation to robbers whom it might concern that somcone was on the watch. In this way the party passed safely through the Golok country, then through the Minshan, eventually reached old Taochao, and so thence to Lanchow.

IN THE HANDS OF BRIGANDS.

From Lanchow the journey was continued by cart. To Paot'ao and it was when within six hours of the railhead of the Kalgan route at Paot'aochen that Dr. Thompson had the misfortune to encounter a band of tufei, composed of ex-Chinese soldiers, Mongols and non-descript robbers. He was compelled to career about the country with them for eight days, but at last managed to get away. The first difficulty was that of getting in touch with the Chinese authorities and giving them information, and with that purpose in view, the doctor refused to take any but foreign food, knowing that this could only be secured by sending in to Paot'ao. After 24 hours' discussion, the bandits agreed to this request, and the doctor wrote his letter asking for food and also giving information as to his condition and whereabouts, and how he might be recognized. He thought that, if the Chinese would only keep up pressure, he might find a chance of escaping. The doctor's Chinese boy was selected as the first messenger, and before he left Dr. Thompson whispered to him a warning not to return. He did not. Two or three letters were subsequently sent in, asking for food and at the same time giving information. After four days, no food arriving, Dr. Thompson suggested that the brigands should take him to some place where there might be a foreign mission.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

Fearing that Dr. Thompson was going to die, the brigands quickly agreed, and off they went with him to the Belgian Roman Catholic Mission at Ta Moor. The Catholic Priest there was exceedingly kind, and Dr. Thompson expressed gratitude for the help given him. The Priest did his best to negotiate with the robbers, whose terms for release were: 1,000 rifles, four machine guns, $400,000 and admission to the army. After 48 hours' "bargaining," Father de Wilde had to leave on a visit to a priest in captivity with another band of robbers, but that night the agent of a Chinese official contrived to bribe the doctor's guards, who came to him and helped him to get away. Travelling through the night, Dr. Thompson crossed the Yellow River over the ice and reached Paot'ao next day, thence going forward to Peking.

RESULTS OF THE JOURNEY.

After the death of Brigadier-General Pereira, the doctor determined to keep up all the records of the journey, and he continued the mapping, with the result that the whole of the route of the previously unexplored country was mapped. These maps the doctor managed to save from the bandits by always carrying them on his person.

The medical work of the journey was not light. As the doctor said: "I am a medical missionary and my work is not simply to travel but to help the people in body and soul." At every so far from being any better on these points seems to be rather worse and further resolutions on all these subjects will be brought forward at this Conference.

EXTERRITARALITY.

With regard to extraterritoriality you will remember that the Washington Conference decided that a Special Commission should be sent to China to investigate the question. The sending of the Commission has been postponed and we understand that the Chinese Government itself asked for a postponement. But there seems some possibility that the Commission may come out this year. I need not say more on this subject now except to inform you that the Shanghai Chamber and the China Association have formed a joint Sub-Committee to collect information so as to present Chinese judicial procedure in theory and in practice. A mass of data has already been obtained and the joint Sub-Committee is under a great obligation to Mr. Macleod for having undertaken an exhaustive examination and for having prepared a most valuable summary and preliminary report. Further data are still to be received before a final report can be completed.

2½ PER CENT SURTAX.

You will see that we have another resolution on this year's agenda about the 2½ per cent. surtax. You will remember that last year our resolution recommended that the proceeds of the surtax should be devoted to reorganization of China's finances and disbandment of troops under foreign supervision. Of course by this was meant foreign co-operation on the invitation of the Chinese Government in a voluntary movement on their part to disband superfluous troops. At that time there was a strong public feeling amongst the Chinese themselves in favour of disbandment: the Chinese Press advocated it and Dr. Sun Yat-sen himself suggested disbandment with foreign assistance. We still feel that it was sound advice to China, the soundest advice which could be given her. But China was as a deaf adder, and the past year has witnessed the tragedy of continual civil wars especially in Szechuan and Kuangtung, and the burden of continued competition in military expenditure amongst individual Tuchuns. Since last year therefore any faint hope there might have been of China initiating a disbandment scheme with foreign assistance seems to have vanished and it has become necessary to restate our position: a resolution on this point is scheduled for Friday morning.

LINCHENG OUTRAGE.

One of the most important incidents of the past year was the Lincheng outrage which took place on the night of May 6. Both the British Chambers of Commerce and the China Association out here took a very serious view of the affair: and not only because of the seriousness of the actual incident itself but also because they regarded it as a signal proof of the trend of events in China and likely to be a forerunner of other outrages which might gradually close the interior of China both to the merchant and to the missionary.

You are already aware of the steps which were urged at the time. These included insistence by the Power on China initiating a scheme for disbandment of troops under foreign supervision and with foreign financial assistance, effective foreign management of main trunk railways and the policing of railways under foreign officers. It was also suggested that the Powers should postpone putting into operation the recommendations of the Washington Conference as they affect China until such time as an effective disbandment scheme under foreign supervision had been devised and steps had been taken by China to give protection to foreign life and property. The telegrams further asked that the international garrisons should be strengthened and extended to others of the larger Treaty ports in order to support diplomatic demands and that the foreign settlements and concessions should cease to be asylums for political agitators or defaulting officials.

It was not suggested that such measures should be imposed as a penalty for the particular incident but rather that that incident should be made the occasion for saying to China: "You have entirely failed to respond to the liberal attitude adopted towards China at Washington. You appear to suppose that foreign Treaty rights are no longer of any account. The Powers can no longer tolerate such an attitude and acting in unity they are compelled to insist on measures designed to secure adherence to existing Treaties and adequate protection to foreign life and property."

This view was not altogether shared at home: The British Government kept in close touch on this matter with others of the Powers chiefly interested in China but neither the British Government nor the other Powers regarded the particular incident or the general situation as sufficiently serious yet to justify the drastic steps recommended. The terms of settlement which they finally demanded included the degradation of the Tuchun of Shantung in whose province the outrage occurred, compensation for those taken captive, and a measure of foreign supervision in the control of the railway police. We understand that the organization of a more effective Railway Police force under the direction of General Munthe is proceeding and we must hope that some real improvement will result.

POLITICAL SITUATION IN CHINA.

It is impossible within the limit of time available to attempt to review in detail the situation in China to-day, nor has this Conference any general panacea to recommend in order to bring order out of chaos. This subject will be more fully dealt with in such resolutions as those on the 2½ per cent. surtax and on breaches of the treaties: I can but indicate here in general outline the views and the principles on which we think our policy should be based.

We have on a former occasion expressed our agreement with the general principles laid down at the Washington Conference as affecting China. But it must be emphasized that the resolutions of the Washington Conference were in no sense and were never intended to be an abrogation of foreign Treaty rights in China.

The primary object of that Conference was to discontinue an international competition in armaments, and a necessary corollary was to remove possible causes of war in the Pacific and in China.

The occasion was opportune on the one hand to endeavour to awaken China to a sense of her responsibilities and obligations as a member of the comity of nations and on the other hand to hold out promises that so soon as China could show herself able to fulfil effectively the proper functions of a civilized government the Powers would remove those restrictions and limitations which China's own attitude to foreigners and to foreign trade in the past had made it necessary to impose on her.

Those promises were inspired by genuine goodwill towards the Chinese nation: they were based on a genuine hope that China would rise to the occasion and so fulfil the proper functions of the Government of a civilized nation as to make it possible for subjects of other civilized nations to live and trade under her protection and under her laws with adequate security to life and property.

With such sentiments of goodwill toward the Chinese people and with such hopes of the future the British community in China is in full accord. We want nothing from the Chinese except to live and trade in China under just laws justly administered, and to enjoy that security of life and property which it is the fundamental obligation of a civilized Government to afford.

THE NECESSARY CONDITION.

But all such promises are conditional: China must perform her part of the obligations before we can yield one fraction of our existing Treaty rights. Unfortunately the Chinese do not seem to realize this. They seem to have absorbed the idea from the Washington Conference that the Powers no longer intend to insist on the maintenance of Treaty rights. The view of the Shanghai Chambers is that it will be exceedingly dangerous and in the long run disastrous to allow the Chinese to labour under any such delusions. We are inclined to face the facts bluntly and the facts are these: We live and trade in China under the rights afforded by the Treaties: If those Treaty rights were obtained in part by force; if they have since been maintained in part by force; there has been justification for it. But we have reached a stage where we want to avoid this necessity of force. We want to be able to deal with China on a basis of reason and good faith. But we must have guarantees and they do not yet seem to be forthcoming.

WHAT FIGURES DO NOT SHOW.

We do not wish to exaggerate the seriousness of the present situation: We admit that the Customs figures indicate that despite the disabilities, risks and disorders foreign trade as yet shows no diminution. China is a vast country and large areas have enjoyed exceptional crops, exceptional freedom from serious visitations of plague, flood and famine and comparative peace and prosperity. Moreover we do not underestimate the difficulties of a country which is still in the aftermath of revolution, nor can we count it an obligation on China to maintain ideal conditions for the expansion of foreign trade.

But although statistical figures of trade may show the truth, they do not show the whole truth: They do not show the risks run nor the losses incurred. They do not show what her trade might be under reasonable conditions. They do not show that China potentially rich is temporarily bankrupt, that her revenue is being wasted on militarism, and that her railways are being allowed to run to seed: They do not show that large districts are being terrorized by brigands, and that towns are being laid waste by looting. They do not show that provincial revenues are being derived largely from opium, grambling and excessive taxation, and they do not show that the old solid merchant classes are gradually yielding place to a new breed of get-rich-quick opportunists, caring neither for honesty nor "Face."

And let those of us who live in the comparative security of the larger Treaty Ports not forget that the hundreds, the thousands of foreigners, merchants and missionaries, who work in the smaller ports and in the far interior have now to take their lives in their hands. Let us be sure that we do not grow callous to outrages on foreigners from their very repetition.

Customs Trade figures notwithstanding, the present is bad enough: But what of the future? That is the worst feature of all because frankly we can see no daylight. One can hardly conceive a country less adapted to what the West means by a Republic or even a democratic form of Government. Can China earn deeper shame politically than her first and last parliament brought on her? Could anything be less of an election than the election of her present President? True, if he can unify the country and establish an effective Government the method of his election matters little. But what of China's Constitution? As a Republic she has already become a farce: and yet she seems too vast to be dominated under modern conditions by a single autocrat.

THE WISE COURSE.

We hold that China would be well advised to invite on her own initiative some measure of foreign advice and assistance in the settlement of her most difficult problems and this she could well do without any infringement of her sovereign rights, without any derogation of her national dignity: But official jealousies and official greed leave little hope of any such solution, destroy indeed even the desire for efficient or honest administration of government. And so China must be allowed to work out her own political salvation in her own way. But it envisages the probability of years, perhaps of tens of years of internal wars and increasing disorders. Our view is that under such lamentable conditions and until China can fulfil towards foreigners the essential obligations of a civilized government, the Chinese Government, the Provincial Governments and the Chinese people must be made to understand and to recognize that existing foreign Treaty rights will be strictly upheld and will be upheld if necessary by force. Governments and Legations may be—have been—long-suffering but there must be a limit, and that there is a limit has recently been indicated to China by events in Canton. We do not want to be forced to revert to a gunboat policy in our dealings with China. But it is only 24 years since the notorious events of 1900. What are 24 years in the history or character of China? A policy of treating as efficient and reasonable that which is neither efficient nor reasonable, a policy of weakness, a policy of drift may lead to a much more serious tragedy within the next decade.

INTERNATIONAL UNITY.

One more word and I have done: The Washington Conference endeavoured to eliminate all causes for international jealousies in China. Carrying the same principle one stage further may we not hope for some more definite provision for even closer co-operation between the Powers chiefly interested in China. Never was there greater need for strong unity of action. Whatever differences of interests may exist in other parts of the world our interests in China are common to all of us. Yes, and common not only to foreigners but to the Chinese themselves if they could but realize it. Through the medium of our National Associations and of our Chambers of Commerce the foreign communities in China, and perhaps more particularly the British and American Communities, have kept in close touch with each other during the past year and I think I am correct in saying that in our view of the existing situation and possible future situation in China, in our ideas of policy, we are very much at one.

Admittedly we are ignorant of the intricacies and difficulties of international politics, but we venture to hope that amongst the Legations in Peking and amongst the Governments of the Powers chiefly interested close co-operation and unity of action—unity of strong action—may be the basis of all policy in China.

CONSUL-GENERAL ON TREATIES.

Mr. Sidney Barton, H. M. Consul-General, speaking in his capacity as honorary President of the Shanghai Chamber then addressed the Conference. In an exceedingly interesting speech Mr. Barton sketched the history of previous treaty settlements with China, drawing a parallel between their origin and fate and the situation in which treaties stand at the present time. He emphasized that amongst the helpful lessons with which this parallelism furnished British merchants to-day were the necessity for "pegging away" and the necessity for co-operation. He pointed out that if the degree of danger and difficulty in which many matters stood to-day appeared to be greater than before, greater also and very much more efficient were our organization and our means of ascertaining the opinion of all engaged in trade and of communicating those opinions to H. M. Legation. He thought that it was precisely because the Chambers' Annual Conferences strengthened British organization that they were important and should continue. He regretted that some of the Chambers, more particularly Hongkong, had not found it possible to send delegates. The resolutions which Hongkong had on the agenda were in exceedingly capable hands, but he thought it particularly important that Hongkong should be directly represented at these Conferences as there were so many issues on which the views of Hongkong would be of greatest possible use.

Following Mr. Barton, Mr. H. J. Brett, H. M. Commercial Counsellor of Legation, addressed the Conference.

A resolution was then passed that the Conference go into Committee, that Mr. F. R. Scott be asked to take the Chair and that Meetings and discussions be opened to all members of the Chambers represented and their guests. Mr. F. R. Scott thanked the Conference for the honour which they had done him in electing him Chairman and in an exceedingly amusing speech referred briefly to the fate of last year's Resolutions. Mr. Scott adopted the happy simile of the Resolutions being children of the Associated Chambers and continuing his metaphor dealt lightly with the individual characteristics of each child.

The following resolutions were unanimously passed on Wednesday afternoon:—

QUARANTINE FACILITIES AT CHEFOO.—"That in the opinion of this Conference the absence of quarantine facilities at Chefoo and other of the smaller ports constitutes an ever-present menace to their commercial interests. The Conference would therefore urge the importance of providing quarantine facilities n all ports or, of issuing regulations providing that ships which have become infected, destined for such ports, must proceed to other ports in which quarantine facilities exist."

EX-ENEMY CONCESSIONS AT TIENTSIN AND HANKOW. "That this Conference has again to deplore the failure of the Chinese Government to give effect to its undertaking to establish municipal government on modern lines in the ex-enemy Concessions at Tientsin and Hankow; and in recording its appreciation of the persistent efforts of the Diplomatic Body to induce the Central Government to fulfil this pledge, it desires to urge again on their attention the importance of obtaining prompt settlement which will adequately safeguard foreign interests."

Resolutions on Harbour Police, Inland Navigation, Piracy, Wireless and Education

The following resolutions were passed at Thursday's sessions of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce in China and Hongkong:—

1. SHANGHAI HARBOUR AND RIVER POLICE.

"That this Conference views with grave concern the serious increase in thieving and robbery within Shanghai's harbour limits and urges that measures should be taken to reorganize the River Police Force upon a standard of efficiency commensurate with the trade of the Port."

2. INLAND WATERS NAVIGATION.

"That this Conference again places on record its strong dissatisfaction with the persistent obstruction by the Hupeh Provincial authorities in preventing foreign merchants from exercising the rights granted to them under the Inland Waters Navigation rules, rights which have been explicitly admitted within the last few months by the Board of Communications and the Waichiaopu: and it urges the foreign representatives to continue to insist on the Central Government taking the necessary measures to enforce compliance with their instructions by the Provincial authorities concerned."

3. PIRACY.

"That in the opinion of this Conference the numerous piracies that have taken place in Far Eastern waters, and the inability of any Government in China to deal with the situation, calls for immediate action on the part of the foreign Powers. The Conference urges H. M. Government to make arrangements with the proper Chinese authorities whereby, immediately a piracy is reported, punitive measures may be taken against the pirates by H. M. Navy in the locality where they have landed. Further, the Conference strongly advocates an increase in the number of naval vessels available for patrol work, especially in the Canton Delta and neighbouring waters, where frequent and successful piracies clearly indicate that the existing patrols are inadequate."

NEW JAPANESE LOAN

Four New York Banks Taking Up Whole of the Issue in America

London, Feb. 7.

Preliminary arrangements have been made to issue in the near future in London and New York under the auspices of influential banking houses a large Japanese Government loan to provide for the redemption of the £35,000,000 4½ per cent. Bonds maturing in 1925 and to furnish a considerable balance of new money for earthquake reconstruction purposes.

The newspapers point out that longer dated Japanese stocks at present stand at a price yielding about 6 per cent. and a loan issued on a basis of about 6½ per cent. will naturally be attractive to investors.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 11.

Underwriting has begun of the Japanese loan of £25,000,000, with interest at six per cent., issued at 87½ and redeemable in 1929/59.

London, Feb. 12.

In connexion with the new Japanese loan it is understood that the Japanese Government and Japanese banks hold £12,000,000 of maturing 4½ per cent. bonds which will be converted into the new issue. Holders of such bonds may convert on a basis of £195 of the new issue for £100 of the old, plus a small cash payment. The existing Japanese loans fell rather sharply on the disclosure of these terms.

It is reported that £35,000,000 at 6½ per cent. will be offered in New York at 92½.—Reuter.

London, Feb. 12.

The prospectus of the Japanese loan was issued this afternoon. Queues of people formed up outside the issuing banks. There was great activity in procuring prospectuses, clerks emerging to the street with bundles.

The prospectus mentions that a loan of $150,000,000 is being issued in America for the same purposes, namely, conversion and redemption of outstanding balances of the Japanese Government 4½ per cent. loans of March and July, 1906, and to meet expenditure on reconstruction work due to the earthquake. —Reuter.

New York Feb. 12.

Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co., Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and the National City and First National Banks have arranged for the purchase of the American share of the Japanese loan, which is being offered for public subscription in a few days, of $150,000,000 [illegible] per cent. at 92½, maturing in 30 years. Part of the American issue will be placed in Holland and Switzerland.—Reuter's American Service.

London, Feb. 13.

The rush for the Japanese loan, which led to the closing of the lists at noon, is reflected in its unofficial quotation at over one per cent. premium.—Reuter.

CRITICISM IN JAPAN.

Osaka, Feb. 13.

The announcement of the terms of the new loan has elicited sharp criticism from the "Mainichi," which characterizes the efforts of the Government as driving the people to the darkest pit. The accusation is based on three grounds, firstly, the abnormally high rate of interest, secondly, the excessively large amount of the loan, and, thirdly, the consequent extravagance of expenditure.

All the market received the news without enthusiasm because the terms are disappointing.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, Feb. 14.

The first feelings of doubt and disappointmentment with which the terms of the loan were greeted yesterday, are more fully endorsed by this morning's papers, which almost unanimously declare the contract as "a deplorable failure and even a national humiliation," reflecting lack of confidence in the political stability of the country. While appreciating the unfavourable circumstances under which the loan was floated, the papers contrast the terms with those of the Argentine and Dutch Indies loans recently raised in New York.

The leading commercial newspaper, the "Chugai Shogyo," questions the discretion of the Government in attempting foreign financing when there is no immediate necessity for large reconstruction funds here. It says that the present venture is likely seriously to embarrass future private borrowings abroad.

Representative bankers and businessmen comment similarly, fearing the possible effect on future financing, even domestically.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LONDON'S OPINION.

London, Feb. 14.

Referring to the reported dissatisfaction in Japan at the price of the new loan, the "Times" contends that the price is by no means too high in view of the size of the loan and the fact that it is not specially secured and that the Austrian loan, which is specially secured and guaranteed by the Powers, is two or three points cheaper. On the contrary, Japan appears to have received distinctly favourable terms and lower would have imperilled the success of the loan.—Reuter

DEATH OF A FILIPINO HERO

Interpreter's Extraordinary Heroism Against Moro Revolutionaries

Manila, Feb. 3.

Jose B. Nisperos, a Filipino, holder of a medal of honour from the Congress of the United States, died more than four months ago at his home in San Francisco, province of La Union, yet news of his death did not reach here until a few days ago. His death probably would not have been known then outside his home town, had not a Manila newspaper printed a story stating that only three Congressional medals of honour were held by residents of the Philippine Islands and that all of these were employed in the office of the Governor-General at Malaca nan Palace.

These three holders of the medal are:—Governor-General Leonard Wood who received his decoration for distinguished service in Indian campaigns of the southwest in the eighties; Lieut.-Colonel Gordon Johnston, now attached to the Governor-General's staff, who was awarded a medal by Congress for bravery during a fight in Jolo against the Moros in 1906 when he was seriously wounded; and George Brown, patrolman at the Palace grounds, who won a medal for unusual bravery in battle in Central Luzon during the Philippine insurrection in 1899.

Publication of the story revealed the fact that José Nisperos, a private in the Philippine Scouts, had been awarded the medal by Congress for distinguished gallantry in action against hostile Moros in September, 1904, at Lapurap, Basilan Island. Nisperos, according to the records at United States army headquarters here, is the only Filipino who has ever held the Congressional medal of honour.

BRAVERY AND MODESTY.

Nisperos was acting as interpreter for Ensign Hovey of the United States Navy, who with a detachment of five sailors from the gunboat Pampanga was working in conjunction with Lieut. Cody of the Philippine Scouts, in an effort to capture Mundang, a Moro outlaw. The small detachment was attacked by a band of Moros and Ensign Hovey was killed. Nisperos and the five sailors rallied around the body of Ensign Hovey and succeeded in holding off the Moros until a scout company under Lieut. Cody arrived. During the fighting Nisperos' right arm was shot off above the elbow, but this did not stop him from fighting.

Lieut. Cody recommended Nisperos for a Congressional medal for extraordinary heroism and it was voted by Congress. Some difficulty was experienced in locating him after his discharge from the scouts, but finally he was found in San Francisco, and the medal was awarded him by Major-General J. Franklin Ball, commanding the Philippine Division, on February 3, 1913.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SHANGHAI NEWS

OPENING OF ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH CHAMBERS' CONFERENCE

The Chairman's Review of Past Year: Some Successes and Many Disappointments: Treaty Rights in Danger: A Masterly Statement of Policy

The fifth annual conference of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce opened on Wednesday morning in H.M. Supreme Court at 10 a.m. when Mr. S. F. Mayers on behalf of the Peking Chamber moved that Mr. C. G. Humprys, acting Chairman of the Association, be Chairman of the Conference. This resolution having been seconded, the Tientsin Chamber in the person of Mr. Peters proposed that Mr. Gull, the Secretary of the Association, be Secretary of the Conference.

The Chairman then addressed the Conference as follows:—

THE CHAIRMAN'S SPEECH.

It is in accordance with past precedent that the Chairman of the Shanghai Committee should also act as Chairman of the Associated British Chambers of Commerce in China. During the whole of the past year that position has been filled by Mr. H. E. Arnhold who unfortunately was unable to postpone his departure for Home to attend this Conference.

Mr. Arnhold is a very busy man and this is a fitting opportunity to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to him for having given up so much of his time and for having filled so thoroughly and effectively a position which is more arduous than perhaps some of us realize.

In his absence it is my privilege on behalf of the Shanghai Chamber to welcome the delegates from other ports of China to this our fifth Annual Conference. We fully realize the inconvenience and difficulty of sparing time to come down to Shanghai, but we do believe that these Conferences achieve a useful and necessary purpose. Their vitality cannot last unless they continue to be well supported by delegates from other Chambers. Therefore we in Shanghai particularly welcome those delegates who have been good enough to give up their time to attend this Conference and we hope very much that those ports which have been unable to send delegates this year will be able to do so in future years.

It is also my privilege to welcome our guests. We are sorry that it was not possible for H. M. Minister to be with us to-day but realizing as we do the great difficulty of his getting away from Peking at all under present conditions and the many calls on his time we are most grateful for his promise to attend the later sessions of this Conference.

The Shanghai Chamber is under a very real obligation to our Consul-General Mr. Barton not only for attending our Conference but for the readiness and frankness with which he has always been ready to meet the Shanghai Committee, to discuss our problems with us and to give us his support and advice. We are very glad also to welcome to-day other distinguished members of the Consular service.

THE NAVY.

We have had during the year the privilege of meeting the Commander-in-Chief Admiral Sir Arthur Leveson and of hearing his views on the situation out here, and we are sorry that important engagements elsewhere made it impossible for him to come to this Conference. We are very glad to welcome Rear-Admiral Anderson and officers of the British Navy. Both the Commander in Chief and Rear Admiral Anderson have recently personally visited Chungking and we know that everything possible will be done—in so far as the number of ships available allow—to improve the extraordinarily difficult conditions in the Gorges. The situation in China to-day is bad, but it would be vastly worse for the security of British lives and property and trade if it were not for the British Navy in these waters. We hope that H. M. Government will sanction an increase in the British Naval Forces both in the Yangtze and West River districts.

It was with very great disappointment that we learnt that it was impossible for Mr. Fox to get away from Peking just now. We fully realize the difficulty, but we always remember that Mr. Fox was one of the originators of the British Chambers of Commerce, and of these Conferences, and we should just like to take this opportunity of telling him how sorry we all are that on this occasion it was impossible for him to leave Peking.

Ladies and gentlemen, the fact that we are here at all is due to the courtesy of Sir Skinner Turner who has once again been good enough to let us have the use of the Supreme Court for our Conference. In expressing our appreciation of his courtesy we may venture to hope that the great traditions and dignity of this Court room will not be marred by our deliberations.

PEGGING AWAY.

When we turn to a review of the past year's work we must admit that measured by the standard of positive achievement the results have been somewhat disappointing.

It is of course easier to pass resolutions than to carry them out and in the present complicated political situation of the world in general and of China in particular we cannot expect to find practical remedies easily applicable to every complaint.

But we need not allow disappointment to lead to discouragement. China as a market is of so much present importance and of such immense future importance to British trade that we should be failing in our duty if we did not strive and go on striving to keep its importance prominently before the British Government and the British Public.

Some resolutions may be mere local grievances and subjects for local adjustments out here. But other resolutions are concerned with the whole problem of the future of foreign trade in China and so inter-involved are commerce and politics that we find ourselves inevitably concerned with considerations of policy on the widest possible issues.

And so we need no apology if year by year the same or very similar resolutions continue to appear on our agenda. We have got to go on hammering at our problems year after year until eventually we arrive at some satisfactory solution.

BOXER INDEMNITY.

At last year's Conference you will remember we had a very full discussion about the Boxer Indemnity and its possible application in part to Chinese education on British lines. Many of the ablest educationalists in China assisted in drafting the final resolution, and we had great hopes that some practical support for British educational institutions in China for the Chinese would soon be forthcoming. We still live in hopes but nothing further seems to have been done and we are very much in the dark as to what the present position on this important subject is. It is of great importance to British educational institutions out here to know as soon as possible whether they can expect any financial support from this source. We have another resolution on our agenda this year about it.

While on this subject I may mention that Sir William Brunyate is shortly leaving Hongkong University. We should like him to know that he carries with him our grateful appreciation of his valuable assistance at our last Conference on our resolution dealing with education of Chinese and the Boxer Indemnity and he has our best wishes. We extend a welcome to his successor Mr. Hornell and hope that we may have an opportunity of meeting him before long at one of our Conferences.

TRADEMARKS.

In the case of trademarks something has certainly been done but not quite what we hoped for. In May last the Chinese Government promulgated a new Trademarks Law applicable to both foreigners and Chinese without first obtaining the approval of the Powers. The Law itself though mainly in accord with the Chamber's ideas has some defects. Moreover the Shanghai Committee are of opinion that the proposed administration of the Law and procedure for registration will not give sufficient protection to the very large foreign interests involved in trademarks. We do not know how far H. M. Legation agreed with our objections but if we are to believe what has been published in the Press we fear that it has not been possible to get all the modifications considered essential by the Shanghai Committee inserted in the New law. We have considered it desirable that a detailed statement of our views should be made on the subject at this Conference. This will give all the delegates an opportunity of expressing their views and of course if you think fit a resolution on the subject can be brought forward.

YANGTZE CONSERVANCY.

On the subject of Yangtze Conservancy a positive result was achieved in that the services of Mr. Palmer were retained by the Chinese Government to make a preliminary investigation of the conditions up river. The final results seem likely to be negative in so far as Mr. Palmer's report indicates clearly that the benefits to be obtained could not possibly be worth the enormous cost involved. This is particularly discouraging news for the port of Chinkiang, but it is at least some consolation to hear that in Mr. Palmer's opinion there is not the least likelihood of the Yangtze breaking through its banks and reaching the sea in some entirely new direction.

While on the subject of the Yangtze I may mention that a branch Custom house under the Nanking Customs on the north bank at Pukou has now been approved of and we owe our thanks to Mr. Pratt for the support he gave to our proposal and to the Inspector-General for the practical consideration shown to the business interests involved.

MAIL SERVICE.

Another practical achievement has been a quickening up of the mail services, and we have not recently had further complaints on this point. The latest communication received from the Postmaster-General in London assures us that the matter has his constant attention and that he will not fail to take advantage of any further opportunity of improving it.

ARBITRATION AWARDS.

Our former representations on the subject of arbitration awards have not yet been successful. We have felt that the shipper should be entitled to know the reasons on which an adverse award is based and the particular defects complained of. We must recognize that there is something to be said on the other side and no doubt the discussion on the resolution will elucidate both points of view.

CROWN LEASES.

Another subject on which no progress seems to have been made is that of Crown Leases. Mr. Kent and Mr. Perry went home as special representatives of Tientsin and Hankow to take up the matter direct with H. M. Government and to urge a definite settlement, and it is disappointing in the extreme that during the six or so months during which these gentlemen were available in England the Foreign Office and Treasury were unable to give the matter sufficient attention to arrive at a decision.

I need not refer in any detail to those resolutions of our last Conference such as Ex-Enemy Concessions, Illegal Taxation and Inland Water Navigation. We can only say that the situation

THE SOCIAL EVIL IN SHANGHAI

Report of Committee of Doctors: Historical Survey, Special Local Conditions and List of Recommendations

The "China Medical Journal" for January, published at the close of last week, contained an important supplement giving the report of the Committee which was appointed by the Shanghai Medical Society last year to consider and report on the question of the control and treatment of venereal diseases in Shanghai from a Public Health point of view. Their report is now offered, with suggestions, for the consideration of the Council of the Medical Society, and the Commissioner of Public Health.

The Committee included Dr. E. L. Marsh (Chairman), Dr. A. C. Bryson, Dr. Lagrange and Dr. Lovett Cumming, and meetings were held on April 27, May 4, June 11 and July 13, 1923, at the General Hospital, Shanghai.

Too voluminous for reproduction the report, whose authors are highly to be complimented on their work, is recommended to the earnest attention of all who are endeavouring to combat the social evil in Shanghai.

No fewer than 17 pages are devoted to a historical summary of all that has been attempted in Shanghai to regulate prostitution and check the spread of disease, from 1869 onwards. In this connexion large extracts are given from the reports of Dr. Henderson, Health Officer in the late sixties, seventies and eighties; and it may surprise some readers to find how much labour and anxious thought has been expended in the past on this question.

RECORDS IMPERFECT.

Tables of statistics of venereal disease are then given from the General Hospital, the Shantung Road and St. Luke's, showing that 4,947 have been treated in the first since 1865, 83,351 since 1870 in the second and 105 during 1919 (the only year of which records are available) in the third. The records for the Shantung Road Hospital are also incomplete, and in earlier days at the General Hospital many cases were undoubtedly not entered as venereal disease which should have been. Th Committee dwell on the high importance of every hospital keeping the fullest and most accurate records in this respect.

Under the heading of population, the Committee gives an estimate of 2,000,000 (International Settlement, Chapei, French Concession and Native City) of whom roughly 35,000 are foreigners, including non-Chinese Asiatics, Japanese accounting for about 45 per cent. of these. The Committee puts the number of Russian refugees at 3,000 which appears to be an underestimate.

THE CASE OF THE SAILOR.

The total number of seamen daily in port is estimated at 6,300. The Committee says:—

Sailors peculiarly need the humanizing effect of being cared for while on shore. Unfortunately there is no proper Seamen's Institute in Shanghai for the social life of sailors. The Hanbury Institute, the Wayport Rooms, the Union Jack Club and the Navy Y.M.C.A. do excellent work so far as they go, but the beachcomber element—nomads who are hardly ever a day ahead of their wants—spoil the two former institutions for many mercantile seamen who might otherwise find them useful.

Something better is required for sailors in Shanghai. The incidental advantage to Shanghai of a well-founded Seamen's Institute would appear in the moral and physical elevation of the inmates above the less desirable attractions of back streets. Similarly a Home or Lodging House for native seamen under voluntary or Municipal management is a desideratum. Moreover, the lot of the seamen, at any rate of British seamen, sick from venereal disease, is made more difficult than need be by those clauses of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which provide that where a seaman is discharged and left behind at a foreign port suffering from venereal disease he loses his wages during such time as he is ill and for duty, and that his medical and hospital expenses can be deducted from such wages as are due to him. Such provisions seem altogether out of date and from blots on a succession of Acts which were passed in order to improve the lot of those who serve before the mast. The afflicted seaman naturally does all he can to hide the contagion from authority so hostile to his interests, and incidentally supplies a menace to shipping ports.

The report concludes with the following:—

SUMMORY OF RECOMMENDATIONS.

1. That in the interest of the Public Health the best public policy in Shanghai is not to foster any official system of supervision of prostitutes.

2. That prostitution and venereal diseases should be deemed matters of official concern only in the interests of the Public Health, and in the preservation of orderliness and decency.

3. That the Municipal Council organize a Venereal Diseases Department under the Commissioner of Public Health.

4. That the Municipal Council require of hospitals receiving grants in aid satisfactory accommodation and equipment for the care and treatment of venereal diseases for both men and women, including clinics for out-patients.

5. That the Council require of hospitals receiving grants in aid accurate medical records catalogued on a uniform system, including statistics relating to venereal diseases.

6. That the Council should organize additional clinics for the treatment of venereal diseases among the poor where necessary.

7. That all clinics for venereal diseases should show a prominent sign or coloured light (the Service blue light); that all clinics should be available for sterilization treatment before and after ordinary working hours; that all clinics should keep a register detailing as accurately as possible particulars as to the source of infection in an infectec, occupation, length of residence in Shanghai, etc. Registers should be available for inspection by a medical officer of the Health Department.

8. That action against any notorious source of infection should be the concern of the Commissioner of Public Health.

WOMEN INSPECTORS.

9. That the Commissioner of Health should be empowered to engage women sanitary inspectors if he considers them necessary to assist in this work.

10. That the Commissioner of Public Health should exhibit public notices about venereal diseases in each of the substations of his Department, which notices should notify free treatment, free Wassermann tests, and free facilities for sterilization.

11. That special hoardings with public notices relating to venereal diseases and their free treatment should be placed in a prominent position on public landing stages along the river front.

12. That similar public notices should be placed in public markets, public latrines, and wherever advantageous.

13. That the Commissioner of Public Health should publish and circulate leaflets stating the official position in regard to venereal disease in Shanghai; the incidence of disease in Shanghai according to hospital statistics; the risk of promiscuous sexual intercourse; the need for immediate sterilization; where public facilities for sterilization and treatment of the infected are provided; how the untreated or ineffectively treated perpetuate and spread the infections suffered by them.

14. That the advantage, if any, of the earlier closing of public bars and licensed places of entertainment in relation to the diffusion of venereal diseases be investigated by the Commissioner of Public Health.

15. That the Commissioner of Public Health should investigate and report on the facilities for proper lodging accommodation in Institutes for foreign and native seamen in Shanghai.

16. That shipowners and masters of ships be notified of the necessity of giving facilities for the treatment of cases of venereal disease among crews of vessels visiting the port.

17. That washerwomen and needlewomen should not be allowed to visit ships unless provided with special permits from the Missions to Seamen or other authorization.

18. That public advertisement of quack cures and remedies should be prohibited, and attempted treatment by unqualified persons should be a punishable offence.

19. That co-operation for purposes of public control of vice and venereal diseases should exist betwen the Public Health Department and neighbouring municipalities, and also between the Health Department and social institutions and societies engaged in this work.

20. That the Public Health Department become associated by membership with International Societies for the control and investigation of general diseases from a public health point of view.

GEN. Lin Fu, Kuangsi general whose forces are operating in Kuangtung, arrived in Shanghai from Swatow last week.

THREE weeks' accumulations of Siberian mail were delivered in Shanghai on Saturday. It appears that there was no truth whatever in the rumours of White insurgents holding up the trains, the delay of which seems to have been due to ordinary winter conditions.

GRAIN ELEVATORS FOR SHANGHAI

Development of Harbour Facilities in Prospect to Meet New Conditions

We understand that important proposals for the development of cargo-working appliances in the harbour of Shanghai are about to be made, these comprising the installation of grain elevators for the port. A representative of big Canadian interests recently arrived here, and in view of the growing trade in grain from Canada to China and Manchuria the proposal is that for the future this cargo should be handled through the medium of elevators.

The suggestion comes about as a result of the steadily growing flour milling industry in China. Not only in Manchuria, which is a large wheat-producing country, but in Shanghai as well have mills been brought into existence within the past few years. Their consumption of grain now probably exceeds the native production, and imports have been the order for some time back. The import from abroad to Shanghai in particular has increased because of the refusal of the Manchurian authorities to allow any export from their ports. This came about in consequence of a short crop there a couple of years ago, and so the Shanghai mills have been compelled to depend on Canadian and American imports. It is now stated that the Manchurian product no longer satisfies the demand there and that the mills in the north are also compelled to import supplies of grain.

At present the wheat is brought to Shanghai in bags, and in comparison with the rate at which elevators can handle grain in bulk this is a slow method. It is believed that much time and expense would be saved if steamers could carry the grain in bulk, being loaded through elevators in Canada and their cargoes being unloaded and transhipped here through the same medium. With this in view and considering the possibilities of the growth of the flour milling industry in China the proposals are bound to attract much interest.

CHINESE BOYS' HELP FOR ST. DUNSTAN'S

Institute in Edinburgh Road: The Story of Ah Ping, His Socks and 30 Cents

When the news of the founding of St. Dunstan's first came to Shanghai, it was received by many with a feeling of gratitude to Sir Arthur Pearson, and a desire to help in his work. Numerous were the institutions and societies who sent money to this new adventure, but perhaps the one small effort to help, which has the most telling story connected with it, was that sent by the Institution for the Chinese Blind, at 4 Edinburgh Road. It was felt that the boys there should know of their kindred Home across the seas, so Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fryer told them about it, and suggested that it would be nice if they, the senior institution, sent help to the junior one whose calls would be so many. The boys were told to think in what way they could help by personal service. Many were the plans devised. One boy made himself responsible for opening and closing all the windows daily, for this at the end of a month or so, he was to receive 30 cents. Each boy elected his task, for which he was to be paid, the money going to St. Dunstan's. Until it came down to the school baby. He was passed over, as being only five years old. It was thought he was too young to do anything.

However, the baby, blind though he was, had no idea of being left out. On a Saturday morning he sought out Mrs. Fryer, and insisted that he must do something like the other boys, so she told him to think hard, and tell her about it on Monday.

THE BATH BRINGS A NOTION.

Now this wee soul had had a great dislike to being bathed, and the Saturday bath had been made attractive with animals that floated, etc., until he discovered that a morning spent in a warm bath, pushing about nice-feeling ducks, was far more enjoyable than learning lessons like the other boys. And then it became a problem to get him out of the bath, instead of a task to get him in.

When the Monday morning arrived, small Ah Ping was waiting for Mrs. Fryer. "I've thought" he said, "You pay money for my socks to be washed; I will wash my own now, and you can give me the money." Then came hard work on Saturdays for Ah Ping. Seated in his bath he rubbed and rubbed at those diminutive socks, until he and the socks were enveloped in a thick lather of soap. Then as soon as he was dry, he took the socks triumphantly and dumped them, all soapy and wet, on to Mrs. Fryer's desk "so he can see I really do wash them." Then a line had to be put up in Mr. Fryer's office, for no one else could be trusted to see that the socks dried properly, and there they hung till dry—surely a lesson in perseverance to all who beheld them.

Many of the boys took one to three months to earn their 30 cents. Ah Ping's socks cost about three cash a week to wash, so that his task was no light one, to earn his 30 cents at that rate.

VISITORS ALWAYS WELCOME.

This Institution is always open to visitors, and, after China New Year, Mr. and Mrs. Fryer will be glad to show the work done by the boys to anyone interested. The training is on the same lines as at St. Dunstan's, and should be interesting to those who are helping the latter in making them visualize the work that is going on at Home.

THE U. S. Consul-General has received the following telegram in reply to the message sent to Mrs. Woodrow Wilson expressing the condolences of the American community of Shanghai at the death of ex-President Wilson:—"The message contained in your telegram of February 4 has been transmitted to Mrs. Woodrow Wilson who asks that you will convey to the Americans at Shanghai her thanks for their thoughtfulness and sympathy."

EMPRESS OF RUSSIA COMES UP STREAM

The Biggest Boat to Berth in the Harbour

Saturday was an epoch-making day in the annals of Shanghai Harbour. For years the Canadian Pacific steamship boats, the largest liners to call at the port, have anchored outside Woosung and their cargo and passengers have been brought to port by the smaller craft plying on the river—fast passenger tenders, lighters and the like. Two weeks ago it was announced that a departure was to be made from this custom and it was inaugurated on Saturday when the magnificent Empress of Russia came right up river and berthed at the China Merchants' Eastern Wharf.

The Russia, which is of 16,900 registered tons, left Woosung shortly after mid-day and was tied up at her berth at the China Merchants' Eastern Wharf on the Pootung side at 2.35 p.m. having taken just a few minutes over two hours to make the voyage upriver, turn in the basin below the pier and make fast. The tug Alexandra met her at the mouth of the Huangpu and escorted her to near the basin, where she made fast to the bow to assist in the turn in the narrow stream, barely twice the length of the ship, but was shortly ordered to let go and under her own steam the big vessel made the turn all alone. To facilitate getting alongside and to prevent delay a line was then sent to the tug from the stern which pulled into midstream so that the flooding tide swung the bow towards the wharf, whence sampans soon carried the eight hawsers to stanchions on shore and she was tied up.

The Empress of Russia was under the command of Captain A. J. Hosken, R.N.R., while Captain A. V. R. Lovegrove is serving as chief staff officer. It will be recalled that Captain Hosken was recently awarded the French humane medal for meritorious work performed when he rescued the crew of the ill-fated Hsin Tsin off the Lammocks near Swatow two years ago.

This vessel, the largest ever to come up to Shanghai, has three funnels and is propelled by the latest model turbine engines and quadruple screws. Her length over-all is a fraction over 605 feet, while her net official linear dimension is 590 feet. As she started up the stream her waterline showed a draught of 25 feet, but as the surplus ballast water was being vented through two two-foot ports, by the time she arrived at the wharf two hours later she was considerably lighter.

It was only after considerable deliberation on the part of the officials of the company, Captain Davison, Marine Superintendent for the company in the Far East, and Mr. Lees Smith, local agent, with the Shanghai harbour authorities and the Whangpoo Conservancy Board, that it was decided to venture bringing this ship into port. Soundings were taken and the Board offered to dredge portions of the river near the pier or in sections that might be considered dangerous and with the assurance that if was possible the experiment was tried.

The Empress of Russia remained at the wharf until 1 p.m. yesSunday when she successfully proceeded downstream on her outward trip.

THE PERILS OF THE ESTUARY

Further Details of the Rescue of the Str. Persia: A Thrilling Narrative

From the further details available concerning the salving of the str. Persia last week it will be seen that the officers of the Shanghai Tug & Lighter Company accomplished a very difficult and dangerous task in safely bringing the vessel to Shanghai.

As already reported, when the Persia ran on to the Amherst Rocks she was assisted by the Shanghai Pilot boat, and the pilot who went aboard had no other resource than to allow the vessel to drift on to the Tungsha Shoals in order to prevent her sinking. The tugboats St. Dominic, with Captains Josefsen and Roberts on board, and the [illegible] Captain Anderson, left Shanghai on Wednesday of last week and, after being delayed through fog, arrived at noon on the following day at the Tungsha Bank, which is some 45 miles from Woosung. The Persia was then completely lodged on the bank, four or five miles from the Ariadne Rocks, and in a very dangerous condition since, in addition to damage sustained to her hull, the engine room and stoke-hold were swamped, No. 3 hold was full of water, and there was 6 ft. of water in the No. 4 hold, and gradually rising, the weight of the water causing the vessel to settle more [illegible] the mud.

TOWING OPERATIONS START.

From that time until Sunday the crews of the tug boats were [illegible] at work under the most trying conditions. Pumps were [illegible] to work to reduce the amount of water in the ship. Such otherwise would very probably have gone down had any attempt been made at once to get her out into deep water. [illegible] No. 4 hold had been pumped out towing operations began. By Friday afternoon the [illegible] had been moved about one [illegible] then settling down on an [illegible] bed. At 2 a.m. on Sunday morning the St. Dominic succeeded in again floating her, getting her out into deep water. [illegible] an account of the prevailing storm and the terrific sea then running the 6 in. wire parted.

The vessel dropped anchor, but at daylight it was found that she was drifting rapidly towards the Ariadne Rocks, the very high sea running having caused her to part her anchor chain. When the Persia was perilously near the rocks—only some 500 or 600 feet away—the St. Dominic managed to get her under tow again, using a 12 in. hawser. This, however, did not stand the immense strain, and the St. Sampson then got her 6 in. wire hawser aboard and proceeded slowly towards Bell Buoy with the Persia in tow.

This was at 1 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, at which time the weather had moderated and the sea calmed down. The St. Dominic then got her 6 in. wire hawser shackled on to 30 fathoms of the ship's anchor chain, and thus in tow of the two tug boats the Persia was slowly brought in to Shanghai, reaching the Yangtszepoo Dock at 9 o'clock on Sunday night. The operation was an extremely difficult one, a great part of the starboard side of the vessel having been torn out by contact with the rocks, and much credit is due to the officers of the salvage boats, some of whom were continuously on duty for 50 hours.

DUG HOLE IN PRISON WALL

Prisoners' Early Morning Attempt to Gain Their Freedom

Half-a-dozen prisoners in the house of detention, Shanghai Procurator's Yamên, made an unsuccessful attempt to escape on Tuesday night.

It appears that six men were who being detained on minor charges in a special room, managed with the assistance of their visiting friends, to dig a hole in the wall, at the same time covering the window of their cell-door with a blanket, intending to make their bid for freedom at 4 o'clock on Wednesday morning. This action aroused the suspicions of the warder who immediately notified the governor of the prison, with the result that a guard was kept on the men. At about 3 o'clock on Wednesday morning a couple of men were noticed near the outer wall of the detention house. These were immediately taken and steps were taken to place the men in more secure quarters. They were searched and are now being held for trial for attempting to escape from prison.

THE UNION CHURCH WAR MEMORIAL

Sunday's Impressive Ceremony of Dedicating and Unveiling the New Windows

There was an impressive ceremony on Sunday at Union Church on the occasion of the unveiling of the war memorial windows. The unveiling was done by Mrs. John Prentice, assisted by members of the Sunday School and Loyal Temperance Legion, after the words of dedication had been uttered by Mr. Barton, the Consul-General, and Col. W. F. L. Gordon.

The memorial windows were designed by and executed by Messrs. A. L. Moore & Sons, London (and fixed by Messrs. Weeks & Co.), at a total lost of Tls. 4,750 which has been fully met by subscriptions. Upon the tablet under the large window is inscribed: "To the Glory of God and in grateful memory of those connected with this church who made the supreme sacrifice in the Great War that all nations might enjoy the blessings of freedom and peace this window is dedicated. 'Greater Love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.'" The two small windows on either side of the organ looking south are the gift of the Sunday School, aided by the Loyal Temperance Legion.

The Rev. A. N. Rowland conducted the service assisted by Bishop Banister, the Rev. W. Robbins, of the Cathedral, and Mr. Stirling Fessenden, Chairman of the Municipal Council, who read the lesson. There were also present the American Consul-General, Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, and Rear-Admiral D. M. Anderson. The forces were represented by a detachment of sailors from H. M. S. Bee and Cockchafer. Boy Scouts were also present.

Before the service commenced a Scottish detachment of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps was drawn up before the church and a piper and two drummers played a Scottish air. After the congregation were seated the men marched down the aisle and took their places in the pews alloted them at the front.

MR. ROWLAND'S SERMON.

Taking his text from Isaiah 42, 4, Mr. Rowland said that the establishment of justice was the greatest of all human problems, and they were in a partnership with God to secure it. There were three aspects which had to be considered. There was first the fight for liberty. It was for this cause that the soldiers had gone forth to battle and to face all the horrors associated with warfare. After the war many were deluded by a mirage, thinking that they had at least attained peace. In reality there was only a new struggle—the fight for justice. In this connexion they would always remember the great American statesman Dr. Wilson who had recently passed away. Dr. Wilson had failed twice—once at Versailles and once at Washington—but he would live again in the consciousness of nations and the awakened spirit of small nations. But beyond the principles of justice and equality which they must establish was fraternity. Heavenly justice would never be fulfilled apart from love. There must be a disarmament of armies and navies, politicians must change their methods and there must be a war against national egotism. The Redeemer of the World would never be satisfied until liberty, equality and justice had been established and for this purpose the courage of fortitude was necessary. Those who live for justice now are one with those who died for it.

THE DEDICATION.

Dedicating the window looking east Mr Barton said:

"This window has been given by friends who desire to commemorate the memory of those who went forth from this congregation during the years to serve their country and fell in the fight for justice. It is dedicated to their memory and the glory of God, in the hope that all those who worship here will feel the summons to fight for justice, and be inspired by the vision of this window to cultivate fortitude and self-sacrifice in the cause of justice."

Col. Gordon, dedicating the two smaller windows, said:

"These windows are dedicated to the glory of God and the hallowed memory of those men, once members of this Sunday School, who went to the great war in simplicity of faith, and singleness of heart, and gave up their lives for justice, right, and the protection of the weak. These men have bequeathed to us a standard of service which will strengthen us in the determination so to live that we too, having fought the last fight, may meet them across the last great divide, unashamed."

After the unveiling of the windows by Mrs. Prentice, Mr. Rowland, assisted by Mr. Robbins, pronounced the prayer of dedication. The Battle Hymn of the American Republic was then sung after which Bishop Banister gave the benediction.

The collection, which ammounted to $433, was taken by French Boy Scouts. It will be devoted to the needs of Shanghai ex-service men through the medium of the United Services Association.

WHO'S WHO IN CHINA

Mr. Carroll Lunt's Third Annual Increasing Yearly: A Volume Come to Stay

Mr. Carroll Lunt, who in 1922 boldly embarked upon publication of a "who's who" of foreigners in China, has now published his third annual addition, and with the satisfaction of knowing that the enterprise is now well established. Like most works of this character, its bulk tends to increase with each succeeding issue; there are this year 200 new autobiographies in brief, and we may expect to see the "China Who's Who" assume imposing dimensions when the great unreader's social horizon will be overcome that grave modesty—or is it judicious caution!—which account for present absence of their names from the list. The editor, one imagines, will welcome them all with open arms, and the reader's social horizon will by so much be widened. As in instructive disparity in the amount of space devoted to the great and good amongst us, as thing to be expected, of course, where so much delicate tact is needed in manipulating the editorial blue pencil: though it must be observed that a great deal of personal information conveyed is merely ornamental. But this is characteristic of all "Who's Who's," and detracts not from the value of Mr. Lunt's publication as a work of reference. It should serve its purpose admirably, and well reward the reader (if one ever "reads" a reference book)—who may scan its pages with intelligent curiosity.

LT.-CDR. Whitehorn, R.N. (previously of H. M. S. Woodcock) has just returned to Shanghai to take command of H. M. S. Cockchafer.

THE death is announced at London of Mr. Harry Bu[illegible], who died of pneumonia on January 13. He was well known in China and at one time [illegible] merchant at Newchwang.

LONDON BULLION

Samuel Montagu & Co.'s Report

In their report of January 9 Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 2nd instant amounted to £126,233,095, as compared with £126,198,660 on the previous Wednesday.

The Indian Bazaars and the Continent have taken a good proportion of the moderate amount of gold on offer this week.

According to the December issue of the Federal Reserve Bulletin, the U.S. gold imports during the 10 months ending October last totalled $250,380,000, compared with $230,422,000 in 1922. Gold exports from the U.S.A. during the same period totalled $27,185,000 as compared with $30,734,000 during the corresponding period last year. Net gold imports for the 10 months of last year were thus $223,195,000 as against $199,688,000 in 1922. Over 40 per cent. ($100,919,000) of the 1923 total came from England, and about 20 per per cent. is credited to Germany, the amount brought to the United States since the beginning of the year ($49,614,000) representing about 40 per cent. of the gold lost by the Reichsbank during the same period. Gold imports from Canada ($44,465,000) ranked in the third place. About 78 per cent. of the total gold imports for the 10 months of last year is credited to these three countries. Substantial amounts have come also from France, the Netherlands, Mexico, and Colombia. Over one-half of the gold exported during the 10 months of last year was consigned to British India; Mexico and Hongkong being the next largest destinations.

SILVER.

Business has not been active during the week. In view of the unsettled condition of markets generally there has been a natural indisposition to open fresh commitments. The trend of silver prices for the last month or so has not encouraged speculative activity, for, although extremely large shipments have been made to the Far East, absorption has taken place on arrival. Hence a waiting attitude is likely to be maintained until the nearness of the Chinese New Year clarifies the situation. The adverse movement of exchange with America has helped to keep prices from serious weakness, although buyers are distinctly shy.

The Federal Reserve Bulletin for December, 1923, stated that the United States silver imports during October last totalled $6,969,000 and silver exports $7,523,000. Silver imports during the 10 months ending October 31 last year totalled $61,012,000 and exports $45,172,000. Both imports and exports of silver were on a larger scale than during the preceding two years. About 91 per cent. of the total silver imported into the United States during last year came from Mexico, Peru, and Canada, while about 84 per cent. of the silver exported during the same period was consigned to British India, Hongkong, and China.

CHINA'S ANGLO-GERMAN LOANS

The Amounts Valid

The Chinese Economic Bulletin reports:—

According to reports of the Chinese Legation at London, (down to and including Report No. 63) the totals of German bonds which are valid and not valid are as follows:—

	Valid	Not Valid
Anglo-German Loan	£53,000	£5,186,000
Supplementary Anglo-German Loan	90,000	6,235,000
Reorganization Loan	1,360,000	3,639,000
Tientsin-Pukow Railway Loans	636,000	4,403,000
Hukuang Railway Loan	382,000	1,117,000

The above are approximate figures. Valid bonds are those held by the people of allied or neutral powers at the time of China's declaration of war on Germany, and not bought by such persons from the Germans after the declaration. To ascertain whether a bond was actually held by a citizen of allied or neutral powers, the Chinese Government, through the Legation at London, engaged foreign lawyers to examine the testimonials of bondholders. This process of examination continued for some time, but in July, 1923, it was decided that the work should last only two months longer, and that all bonds must be presented for examination before September 11 if the holders desired to present claims of their validity. Although the totals, when they are actually compiled by the Legation at London, may differ somewhat from the above figures, the latter are approximately correct and indicate the proportion of valid bonds.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Substantial Purchases of Yarn at Increased Rates but Otherwise Matters Dull

Feb. 16.

Business in the Shanghai markets has not yet resumed its usual course, although there is at least one gratifying feature to report. Large orders have been placed for yarn, and the total booked by the mills since the New Year must have come to several thousand bales. Local cloth is also in favour, and orders have been placed.

The piece goods dealers have not yet attempted to resume business. No auctions were held this week, and merchants are obviously waiting until the auctions re-start before essaying any commitments.

The export market is without interest.

PIECE GOODS.

Following upon the China New Year holidays no piece goods auctions have as yet been held. They resume next week and pending the values struck at these sales merchants are not interesting themselves in actual business at the moment.

While it is too soon yet to talk of definite movements in the market, the general tone of the Chinese is said to be optimistic.

COTTON AND YARN.

China Cotton—While the American and Indian varieties are both easier, China cotton remains steady. Spot quotations are:—Tungchow, 48; Shanghai 45.50; Shensi 47.50; Hankow 43.50/44.50.

Yarn—Considerable interest has been manifested in yarn during the past week. Purchases have been made in the expectation that a strong demand from Szechuan will shortly be in evidence, although the present purchases of that province are only of moderate volume. In consequence yarn has advanced by about Tls. 2.50 per bale in comparison with the rates quoted before the holidays. The business during the week has been substantial, several thousand bales having been booked. Local cloth has also been in fair demand, and is about five candareens a piece higher than before China New Year. Clearances of cloth are proceeding quite well. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange the following quotations are current for yarn:—February 178.70; March 179; April 178.70; May 178.80; June 178, July 176.70.

PRODUCE.

In produce there is nothing of interest to report. The markets in general opened strong after the holidays as supplies of most commodities are scarce. This and high exchange rates have increased C.I.F. values well beyond the ideas of Home buyers and such business as has been concluded is mainly from stock holdings.

S'HAI EXPLORATION & DEVELOPMENT CO.

Proposed Increase in Capital

At a meeting of the directors of the Shanghai Exploration & Development Co., Ld., it was decided to recommend to shareholders at the forthcoming general meeting that the capital of the company be increased to Tls. 3,000,000, that one share to be offered to shareholders at par for each share in the company held by them and that 100,000 shares of Tls. 5 each be offered to the Shanghai Loan & Investment Co., Ld., for the sum of Tls. 600,000, in return for valuable financial assistance rendered.

Formal notice of the proposed issue will be forwarded to shareholders in due course. Payment for the new shares will not be required until some time in April.

SUGAR-REFINERY FOR S'HAI

An Interesting Report

The Chinese press reports that a Japanese sugar refining company has been established in Shanghai with a capital of $5,000,000. The company has already purchased 70 mow of land in the Yangtszepoo district, on which will be erected offices and factories. The products of the company come from the Dutch East Indies.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW GAME BIRDS IN BRITAIN.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—I forward herewith an article appearing in the "Shooting Times" (London), January 5, 1924, giving details of an experiment conducted by a well known sportsman from Shanghai. Shooting men in China will wish him every success in his endeavour to acclimatize a new game bird in Great Britain.

By the way can any of your readers inform me whether the experiment of introducing bamboo partridges into Kent was a lasting success? I gathered that when first introduced they did very well indeed and multiplied exceedingly but they may have since met the fate which seems to attend so many ventures of this nature.

I am, etc.,
OYSTERCATCHER.

Shanghai, Feb. 13, 1924.

 The enclosed article is as follows:—

The New Gamebird.—The popular Press, after the manner of its kind, has risen in ecstasy and taken to its bosom the "new British gamebird"—a quail—which Mr. John Johnstone, a Dumfriesshire landowner, is breeding and acclimatizing on his estate at Halleaths, Loch Maben. The experiment is undoubtedly of importance, but I rather doubt if it will succeed to any marked extent. Certainly it seems a little premature to proclaim the newcomer as a potent rival to the partridge. The bird was imported from Vancouver Island but it is indigenous to Arizona. No generic name is given. It is somewhat larger than the common quail, and "like the 'fool' partridge of British Columbia, it has an awkward way, on some occasions, of sulking in trees." This sounds ominous. A bird which sulks in trees is all too liable to make its moment for morose introspection coincide with the advent of the local pot-hunter.

Acclimatizing the Newcomer.—This is what Mr. Johnstone says of his importee, in a letter to the "Field":—"Twenty-five brace were dispatched last February in charges of the Dominion Express Co., and of these, 43 birds were liberated here about the end of March this year. Some strayed, but the majority remained and have bred freely, [illegible] broods of [illegible] to 15. They appear to be extremely hardy because, of all the broods we know of, very few failed to reach maturity, and the last, a [illegible] hatched [illegible] last week, and the weather in this part of the south of Scotland cannot be said to have been of the best for young game birds this summer. These quail nest on the ground in or among timber (we found one nest in the strawberry beds with 15 eggs, nine of which we hatched under a bantam). They got up well, but so far have only come forward to the guns once, when owing to their being very low, they were not shot at. They make excellent shooting in a rough open cover, but are rather hard to flush and are apt to fly into a tree and take a lot of moving therefrom. As a result of the original shipment we have now got anything from 700 to 800 birds, and I propose, all going well, to put some of their eggs out with partridge, in the spring and see if they will take to the open country. At present they come to the pheasant feeds quite regularly, and judging from [illegible] they find [illegible] to get fat on. The egg is spotty, smaller than a partridge and marked like that of a sparrow-hawk, and the young [illegible] very similar to a [illegible] chick only to have a black cheek instead of a black spotted head. They are excellent eating."

Will it Die Out?—I cannot help feeling, pessimistic though it may seem, that the new quail will have a hard fight to make headway and establish itself as a widely distributed game bird. So many experiments in acclimatization have been made and have failed. One can understand such a venture as Lord Iveagh's attempt to re-establish the bustard at Elveden meeting with swift failure, but far more promising schemes than this [illegible] have come to naught.

Virginian Quail.—Attempts have repeatedly been made to acclimatize the Virginian quail or colin, but they have failed. The most that has been accomplished has been the propagation of the species for a few years on large and well-preserved estates. Those who sponsored this bird included Lord Leicester at Halkham, in the beginning of the last century; Prince Albert at Windsor in 1840; King Edward at Sandringham in 1871; Dhuleep Singh at Elveden a few years later; the late Lord Walsingham at Merton; and Lord Lilford at Lilford, in Northants. I doubt now whether one bird survives on any of these estates. I was staying at Merton this year, and certainly, so far as I could ascertain, no Virginian quail had been shot or seen there for years, although Lord Walsingham told me that he thought the once common English quail occasionally revisited the estate at sparse intervals. The quail which Mr. Johnstone has introduced seems to be somewhat similar to the Virginian bird with the added disadvantage that it "sulks."

No Protection.—Another factor which in future will assuredly militate against the introduction of any eatable bird is the disappearance of the large estate and the growing Socialist spirit of "grab while the grabbing's good." The Radical smallholder or labourer will not think twice about helping to protect a new arrival if that arrival is fit for the pot. Much can be done to save a scarce bird on ten or twenty thousand well-keepered acres, but it is at the mercy of every Tom, Dick, and Harry in a district of 50-acre farms. However, one wishes Mr. Johnstone the best of luck with his venture, for it certainly shows a plucky spirit, and it is infinitely preferable to the attitude which regards every game bird as a walking sepulchre of the mangold weevil.

A PUZZLE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—To settle a discussion which is rapidly assuming a serious aspect we are writing in the hope that some of your readers would provide the solution to a book named the "Four Just Men" by Edgar Wallace published in 1905 by the Tallis Press and who at that time offered a prize of £250 for the best and most accurate solution gathered from clues scattered through the book as to

(1) How the Four Just Men encompassed the death of Sir Phillip Raman and
(2) Who killed Thery and what was the explanation of the stained hands?

We are, etc.
"PUZZLED."

Shanghai, Feb. 12, 1924.

 Can anyone kindly oblige?—Ed.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—In reply to the questions asked regarding Edgar Wallace's book "The Four Just Men," I should like to help as much as I can.

It is quite five years ago since Mr. Wallace himself told me the solutions when I asked him, and my memory is not exceptionally good. If "Puzzled" will recollect he will find that the day previous to Sir Phillip Raman's death two employees from the telephone company visited the former's study for repairs to the telephone.

The next day Sir Phillip was in his study, guarded by the police, the description will be [illegible]. At a certain hour, I cannot rightly place it, a telephone call came through. Sir Phillip answered it and died.
